OST council rescinds support for Black as police chief, re-advertised

New election board selected, election court of appeals chosen

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Following the end of an executive session that wrapped up a one day session, the Oglala Sioux tribal council voted unanimously, 13-0, to rescind the council action selecting Darla Black as chief of police and John Mousseau as alternate and voted to re-advertise the position with interviews and selection set for Aug. 21; Mousseau will remain as acting chief until a new person is selected.

The council met Monday of this week in the council chambers of the Red Cloud building in Pine Ridge to deal with as much of a long agenda as they could fit into one day as the annual Oglala Nation festivities loomed on the horizon.

On July 13, after interviewing 10 applicants, the council filled the chief of police vacancy with the OST Department of Public Safety, by selecting Darla Black, a veteran of 16 years in law enforcement and chose John Mousseau as the alternate. Moussau was made the acting chief to give Black time to clear up a problem with her background investigation.

Black had originally hoped to clear up her background investiga-

Anna Diaz finds year as Oglala Nation ambassador challenging

Red Cloud graduate ready for next challenge at BHSU

OGLALA - "Sometimes its just overwhelming," said Anna Diaz, Miss Oglala Nation and recent Red Cloud high school graduate," you are at a pow wow and a large group of tourists come up to you and surround you and start asking questions all at once; sometimes you just want to turn around and leave but instead you do the best you can, answer every question you can and remind yourself that you represent the Oglala Lakota Nation."

A year ago, Diaz, only 16 at the time, went to the Oglala Nation royalty committee and asked if the rule that you had to be 18 to compete for the title could be waived.

" I told them that I was going to be a senior at Red Cloud and that I felt that I could do the job, that I had always looked up to previous Miss Oglala Nations and that I knew I could represent our nation throughout Indian Country," said Diaz.

After writing a paper about who she was and why she wanted to be Miss Oglala Nation, preparing a traditional meal (papa soup), giving a speech at the pow wow, introducing Marty Stuart at the concert and facing a panel of judges and their questions, Diaz was selected as the 20th Miss Oglala Nation during last year's Oglala Nation celebration.

"Denver March was the best," said Diaz, "it was a lot of fun, I saw a lot of old friends, met tons of new people, some really good drum groups, you got to announce yourself instead of having the eyapaha do it and I won the jingle dress competition."

In addition to Denver, Diaz traveled to Black Hills in Spearfish, Cody, Wyo., Red Earth in Okla., the Black Hills Expo in Rapid City, Shakopee in Minnesota, a traditional pow wow in Odessa, Tex. as well as local traditional pow wows and the teca wacipi okolakiciye school pow wows around Pine Ridge Reservation.

"Odessa was the toughest, it was by far the longest trip, my auntie took me," said Diaz, "we

RST liquor commission tables approval of liquor license

Tribal members provide passionate testimony

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - In a scheduled hearing at the Rosebud Sioux Tribal council chamber on July 27, Thursday the RST Liquor Commission held a hearing on the request from Syd Colombe for approval of a tribal license to sell beer off-sale. The hearing was carried live over KINI FM radio in St. Francis and as promised by Chairman Gerald Eagle Bear, a decision was to have been on the request in a closed door session immediately following.

In a brief interview with Colombe on Saturday, she confirmed the fact that the liquor commission had tabled a final vote on the issue until Tuesday or Wednesday.

On Monday, KINI FM carried an announcement that the RST Liquor Commission hearing had been moved to August 9 at 5:30 p.m.

The RST council adopted a liquor ordinance in 1977 and it delineates the terms for the sale of beer and the creation of the RST liquor commission. This ordinance apparently supersedes any subsequent resolutions which may have been passed since. The ordinance defines 'package dealer' as any person or corporation that sells or keeps for sale any alcoholic beverage for consumption off the premises where sold.

Several tribal members provided some rather passionate testimony for and against granting a liquor license citing a variety of personal and societal issues due to alcohol abuse. Colombe said, "I'm glad so many people came out. It shows growth on the reservation. You can't complain unless you are active."

Those who were in favor of granting the liquor license cited the fact that the tribe has already granted liquor licenses to two other businesses on the reservation and that Colombe should not be singled out and discriminated against. Yet, others noted that in the interest of promoting economic development, liquor sales would result in a portion going back to the tribe. In turn, this money could be used for a variety of programs, including alcohol treatment and youth facilities.

Yet, other people who testified said that the Rosebud Sioux Tribe should become a distributor and sell alcohol and that the profits of such a venture would go directly into the tribal budget.

Grass Mountain resident, Claudette Sabors, said she was on the RST council when a resolution was passed addressing the alcohol issue. She said, "We were going to be alcohol free by 2000. It's my fault, it's your fault." Marcelle Prue of Antelope community said, "I understand the council passed a resolution to ban alcohol. Is it still in place? I don't know we are doing this if there is something already in place. I'm against it too. Why don't the tribe do it."

One unidentified community member said, "This is our house. Don't bring it in our boundary lines. If you live outside you live by a different set of rules."

Adam Little Elk spoke in Lakota and then switched to English. He began, "Yunkan, Adam Little Elk. Dakni mni wakan wanice. Kola ota wicagnuni. Tuweni wahokokinyepsni. Tiwahe nitawa awankciyapo. Ihanni ota wablatke. Lehunhiya makakize. Dona upiya woaglake, wopila eciciyapo."

Little Elk said, "I drank for 16 years after Vietnam. The lady I love very much. I told her, 'Mom, I am going to stay drunk until I die. She said, that okay, I won't be here to see

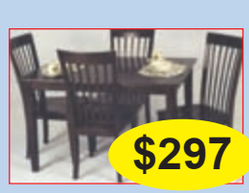
21st Annual Oglala Lakota Nation Fair to kick off on Aug. 3

PINE RIDGE - The Oglala Nation Fair will begin slowly at first on Thursday with the 12th annual Health Fair triathlon, walk and run. On Friday, August 4 a full slate of events will kick off the annual affair in full force. The horseshoe games, volleyball tournaments, slow pitch softball, rodeo, golf and traditional hand games will begin.

Spectators and participants, alike, are encouraged to contact the respective individuals in charge of each event in order to find out their time and location.

The event which is the big draw, the powwow, will have the usual five sessions beginning at 7 p.m. on Friday and at 2 p.m. on Saturday and at 7 p.m. On Sunday, the grand entry will began at 1 p.m, and then at 7 p.m. The MC's are Pat Bad Hand of Two Strike community on the Rosebud and Chris Eagle Hawk. The theme for the powwow is "Ipseca Wacipi", "Honoring our Mothers."

The standard dance categories will be in effect amounting to over $50,000 prize money, while the drum split for five sessions will be $25,000.



Meals will served daily with a flag raising held each day at 9 a.m. The parade will be held on Saturday, Aug. 5 at 11:00 and points will be awarded for dancers. See Oglala Lakota Nation poster for contact information and dates.

left on Wednesday and went through Albuquerque; it was mostly southern style with an emphasis on traditional with little or no fancy or jingle dress events but on the plus side I was able to meet with Dine code talkers and I was presented with a medal because of the long trip I had made to the pow wow."

"That's one of the reasons that I have the utmost respect for her," said Chris Eagle Hawk, long time eyapaha and singer, "Anna went to some of the larger pow wows but also attended the smaller and more traditional events and she continued to participate in the school pow wows."

Diaz started dancing as soon as she started walking. Originally a fancy shawl dancer, today, Anna is a jingle dress dancer. Currently, she travels with a sets of beadwork and five dresses so that she is able to wear a different dress for each session.

"While we are on the road, my mother is always stopping at the fabric shops and looking for new material for dresses," said Diaz, "its always a good feeling to be dancing in a beautiful dress."

Diaz loves the competition and challenge of the jingle dress category. Each pow wow brings different competitors, new outfits, somebody with new steps, said Diaz.

"More than anything else, I love the sound of the jingles," added Diaz, "and its not all about the competition or prize money but you dance for the people, they come to watch you dance and when you dance it makes you feel good."

Looking back at all of the requirements of the position, Diaz said that you have to feel good about who you are and where you are from and be ready to answer any question that they throw at you. Diaz grew up in her grandparents home, Pedro and Lillian Sharpfish, where they spoke Lakota all of the time. She feels very good about being a Lakota and being part Spanish, that her family means so much to her.

"My mother is Lexie Shield, a Lakota, and my father is Tim Diaz from Corpus Christi, Tex.," said Diaz, "I see my dad every few years and I talk to him on the phone regularly but my mom is always there for me and my brother and my family, if I run into problems they are there with words of strength or a hug or whatever I need."

"Anna has good rapport with all of the young people out on the pow wow circuit," added Eagle Hawk," all of the young singers look out after her on the road, they have a lot of respect for her and watch over her."

Diaz admitted that the position carried a lot of responsibility, there are a lot of girls and young women that look up to her as a role model and you are expected to be almost perfect when you are in the dance arena, you need to greet and interact with everyone, all kinds of people and to remain composed in the face of all diversity.

"It was really hard juggling my school with traveling to the pow wows, my teachers at Red Cloud were really helpful," said Diaz, "and you have to have the support of family and friends; when you are on the road you are trying to do homework when you are tired and when you go to school on Monday, you are tired."

People assume that as a representative of the Oglala Lakota Nation that the tribe would be there to support the travel to the various pow wows throughout the year. Diaz admitted that over the past year she received no support from the tribe that even one time she was asked to submit a budget for her trip, an itinerary and an event poster yet she received no assistance when it was time to leave.

The responsibility of the role also requires being responsible in your day to day life behaviors such as staying away from alcohol an drugs and acting in a mature manner.

"This fall I am going to school at Black Hills State University in Spearfish and major in dental hygiene and for me if I decide to have my own family it will be after I complete my schooling," said Diaz, "I know there are many young Lakota women who are having children at a young age and I want to give them a big hug, they need it and they need the support from their mothers and their families, they need to keep their heads up and there will be someone there to help them and they need to find something they like to do and stick with it."

Looking back on the year, Anna would like to give special thanks to Chris and Joyce Eagle Hawk, John and Monica Whirlwind Horse, Gloria Two Crow and Brandy Shortman, Lois White Whirlwind and Tyler Yellow Boy, Leets Yellow Boy and family, Myron Chavez and her family.

"The year changed me, it was a lot of responsibility and I learned to be a better person, to carry myself in a good manner in front of a lot of different people, all of the challenges that I faced will help me in the years to come and I am very thankful for that," concluded Anna Diaz, the 20th Miss Oglala Nation.

it." Little Elk said he had counted the number of signs from Oelrichs to Rosebud where someone had died in an accident and there were 97.

Rosebud council representative, Stephanie Sully, was in favor of beer sales. She said, "Why can't the tribe be a distributor and re-program the money into programs. We still owe money from clothing orders last year. Alcohol is here, it is legal. Our community will bring on a resolution for a feasibility study."

Poncho Lone Dog said, "Regardless if we have a liquor establishment here. It is not going to increase or decrease alcohol use."

Sara Reynolds said, "I don't oppose or support liquor here. It is not a right, not a privilege. Two families have sweats. There is a three mile buffer zone them."

Stanley Red Bird, Jr. of Spring Creek community said, "I would like to see it tabled. Let's ask the people. Who's to benefit? The council voted their conscience before. Let the tribe sell liquor."

Colombe said that she is proposing to sell off-sale liquor in a location between the previous R&R liquor establishment, which is no longer operational, and east before the White River junction on U. S. highway 83. One concern as discussed during the hearing was the safety concerns of traffic entering in and exiting such an establishment. Colombe noted that she had hired an expert from the Aaron Swan engineering firm of Pierre and they had conducted an assessment of the line of sight that drivers would have of the road leading into the establishment. The engineer established the fact that the location would afford greater visibility and line of sight than the other two liquor establishments licensed on the reservation.

tion through a court hearing in Kyle on July 20; it was postponed until July 27 where the judge granted a permanent protection order against Black to an individual claiming her safety was threatened by Ms. Black.

After hearing about Ms. Black's failed attempt to clear up her background investigation, feedback about their choices for chief of police and complaints about the interview process, the council decided the best course of action was to re-advertise the position.

With the upcoming tribal elections rapidly approaching, the council chose an election board to coordinate the process. Six candidates submitted their applications by the deadline. Charlene Black Horse received nine votes, Sandra Bettelyoun had nine, Maretta Champagne had seven; all three earning positions on the election board with Black Horse getting the nod as chair. Irene Sorbel with 5 votes and Norman Under Baggage with four votes were named alternates; Sidney Witt withdrew his application. The new election board takes over the position and duties from Melanie Janis, John Eagle Bull and Connie Brewer who coordinated the last election.

Selecting an election court of appeals was not originally on the agenda but after a two thirds vote to put it on the agenda, the council nominated Vincent Brewer, Cornel Conroy, Richard Little Hawk, Vernona Kills Right, Delores Whitehead and Melanie Janis.

Conroy with 10, Brewer and Little Hawk with nine each were chosen to the election court of appeals with Kills Right and Whitehead earning four votes and the alternate designations.

Eileen Janis, the new vice president, chaired the meeting and gave the opening prayer.

The council struggled to get a quorum and following a discussion on how long to wait for enough council reps to arrive, the meeting opened with a discussion on the need to re-evaluate the allocation of $275,000 into the purchase of civil defense sirens for each of the districts. The council voted 9-3 to rescind their earlier support for the purchase and decided to put that money into land acquisition.

A report given by tribal treasurer, Crystal Eagle Elk which included budget revisions for the general fund was passed 12-0 with an amendment to add to the TERO budget.

Eagle Elk's overall report was approved 14-0 and a resolution to approve the expenditure of $1.6 million from the Shakopee loan package in three drawdowns passed 11-2.

A motion to approve a memorandum of agreement with the Indian Health Service to clean up open dumps in Porcupine and Allen and a sanitary landfill in Buffalo Gap passed 14-0.

A resolution requesting that all pregnant women seeking prenatal care on Pine Ridge Reservation be tested for alcohol, methamphetamine, cocaine and other related illegal substances to protect the health of the pregnant woman and the future life of the unborn child was tabled 12-3.

After a discussion about a code of ethics for tribal council reps, the council voted 14-1 to get additional input from the community and have the code include district officials and representatives from chartered organizations.

During the first day of the council's regular July session, the council honored Lyle "Dusty" LeBeau, a long time coach on Pine Ridge reservation for his committed service to the Oglala Lakota youth and to Oglala Lakota spirituality; Dusty has taken boys and girls basketball teams from Red Cloud, Little Wound and Pine Ridge to the state tournament and winning a state championship with the Red Cloud boys in 1995.

The council also honored Marissa O'Bryan, a recent graduate and valedictorian of Red Cloud high school who excelled in both the classroom and on the athletic field. Marissa has earned the Gates Scholarship, plans to attend USD in the fall.

O'Bryan took third in the 100 and fourth in the 200 in this years State A track meet and most recently won the 100 gold, 200 gold and 400 bronze during the 2006 North American Indigenous Games in Denver in early July.

Fire Thunder files with Supreme Court looking for relief and a fair judicial process

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - On Tuesday, Aug. 1, Cecelia Fire Thunder filed a legal brief with the Oglala Sioux Tribal Supreme Court in Pine Ridge requesting that the Court reinstate the lower court's temporary order reinstating Fire Thunder to office pending a hearing and that the court order the lower court to immediately appoint a special judge to hear the case and to direct the tribal council to stop interfering in the judicial process underway to resolve this case.

Fire Thunder was suspended by the tribal council on May 30 and impeached on June 29 following a hearing in Porcupine. The chief judge of the Oglala Sioux Tribal Court, Lisa Adams, reinstated Fire Thunder on July 17 and set up a hearing on July 28 only to vacate the order later on that same day. Adams left the hearing date in place but recused herself from future hearings in the case. Subsequently the hearing date was postponed because a special judge had not been appointed as of yet.

"The system is broke and not working very well, this is a procedural question and a constitutional question," said Fire Thunder as she filed the brief, "my right to due process is in question, are they just stalling and choosing not to select a special judge and having a hearing on my case just to keep me out of office."

Since the original suspension and subsequent impeachment, Fire Thunder has questioned the lack of a complaint duly filed with the secretary before it was brought onto the council floor, the lack of supporting documents that should have been fuiled with the original complaint and not given to her until the hearing on impeachment, the two thirds vote based on two thirds of the entire council not just those present, allowing the two complainants to participate in the debate and impeachment vote and the refusal to allow her legal counsel.

Fire Thunder states in her brief that she was duly elected by a vote of the membership of the Oglala Lakota Nation and the wishes of the tribal membership should not be circumvented by unconstitutional measures taken by the tribal council.

"As far as we are concerned, this issue is dead, the council is the power, there is no separation of powers and we have made a decision that is final," said Ruth Brown, council representative from Eagle Nest District.

A Boot Scramble, Watermelon and Pop Races will also be offered with no registration or entry fee.

Killer heat causes third worst drought and prompts safety tips on northern plains

By Times staff and AP reports

PIERRE - The forecast for August appears to be headed for above-normal temperature nationwide. The years 1999-2006 represented the third worst drought on record. In north central South Dakota the area has been described as a literal wasteland. Many cattle owners are selling off their herds in increasing number compared to last year.

Increased temperatures are apparently due to a jet stream that is being prevented by the upper atmosphere from making it into the west. This is creating more night temperatures which are hotter than normal and which causes problems for people who may not have air conditioners. Elders and others who cannot afford air conditioning are especially at risk as they need to keep cool even at night. People who experience excessive heat need at least three hours to cool down at night.

During the current summer heat nationwide, 150 have died, and this has prompted public health officials to issue warning about the need to watch for signs of heat stroke and other heat related illnesses.

Farmers and ranchers in 24 South Dakota counties affected by a variety of weather related issues are now eligible for a Farm Service Agency emergency loan which carries a 3.75 interest charge. Another 24 adjoining counties are also eligible for loans, provided that the applicants have a good credit history and have suffered a loss of at least 30 percent in their crop production of loss of livestock. In a recent Associated Press report by science writer Seth Borenstein, in Fresno, Calif., the morgue is full of victims from a California heat wave. A combination of heat and power outages killed a dozen people in Missouri. And in parts of Europe, temperatures are hotter than in 2003 when a heat wave killed 35,000 people.

Get used to it.

For the next week, much of the nation should expect more "extreme heat," the National Weather Service predicts.

In the month of August, most of the United States will see "above normal temperatures," forecasters say.

For the long-term future, the world will see more and worse killer heat waves because of global warming, scientists say.

The July burst of killer heat waves around the world can't be specifically blamed on global warming. And they aren't the worst ever - they still can't quite hold a melting candle to the scorching heat of America's 1930s Dust Bowl.

Heat waves and global warming "are very strongly" connected, said Kevin Trenberth, climate analysis branch chief at the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colo. The immediate cause of the California heat wave -- and other heat waves -- is day-to-day weather, he said.

A persistent high pressure system in the upper atmosphere prevents cooler jetstream air, from making it into the West, said National Weather Service meteorologist Dennis Feltgen. "You can't tie global warming into one single event," he said.

But what global warming has done is make the nights warmer in general and the days drier, which help turn merely uncomfortably hot days into killer heat waves, Trenberth said in the AP report.

Much of global warming science concentrates on average monthly and yearly temperatures, but recent studies in the past five years show that climate change is at its most dangerous during extreme events, such as high temperatures, droughts and flooding, he said.

"These (heat) events always occur. What global warming does is push it up another notch," Trenberth said.

And the computer models show that soon, we'll get many more -- and hotter -- heat waves that will leave the old Dust Bowl records of the 1930s in the dust, said Ken Kunkel, director of the Center for Atmospheric Sciences at the Illinois State Water Survey.

In the past 25 years most of the world, has seen summer nights getting much warmer with far less evening heat relief, according to a study published earlier this year in the peer-reviewed Journal of Geophysical Research.

Another study this year by the Climate Research Unit in East Anglia, Great Britain, concluded that European summer heat waves "have increased in frequency at most stations since 1880" and will continue to increase with man-made global warming.

George Luber, an epidemiologist who studies heat wave deaths for the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, says the current situation is on track to be "the most active one that I can recall" in terms of heat deaths.

A new analysis by Luber this week shows that between 1999 and 2003, the United States averaged nearly 900 heat-related deaths each year. This year, with 132 reported in central California alone, could be worse, he said.

One way heat waves cause so much death is that people - especially the elderly staying in their homes -aren't able to get cool at night when temperatures remain high after sundown.

"The deaths are really related in urban areas to nighttime temperatures," said Stan Chagnon, a retired Illinois meteorology professor who did some of the earliest research on killer heat waves. Luber, the CDC doctor, says a body needs at least three hours of cooling -- preferably by air conditioning - to survive excessive heat.

Cities are worse for heat deaths because they remain hotter at night from the "heat island effect," Chagnon said. And older northern cities -- where many homes lack air conditioning -- are worse off than Sunbelt cities where most people have cooling.

There is some good news in all this. Cities, such as St. Louis, New York and Philadelphia, have learned how to prevent heat deaths. And as heat waves worsen, the U.S. rate of heat deaths per population has not risen, because cities have created cooling centers and systems to check on the vulnerable elderly and poor, the CDC's Luber said.

"Everything with heat death can be prevented," Luber said.

The South Dakota state Health Department is reminding people to take certain precautions in order to protect themselves and their loved ones. People should stay inside in an air conditioned place and drink plenty of fluids, especially water. Limit the time spent outdoors and cool down as needed. People without air conditioners are advised to seek out public places to keep cool, such as libraries and the shopping mall.

Infants and the elderly should be checked on at least twice a day as they can be especially sensitive to high temperatures. People who over exert or who are overweight tend to be susceptible to extreme heat. Also, people with heart disease high blood pressure, insomnia and poor circulation may also be affected by temperature extremes.

Heat stoke is a serious illness and occurs when the body is unable to regulate its temperature. Warning signs may include, dizziness, nausea, confusion, throbbing headache, red, hot and dry skin, extremely high body temperature (above 103 degrees orally) and unconsciousness.

The public is advised to ensure that all people are properly hydrated and kept cool, while also protecting infants. Infants and children should never be left in a car during such extreme heat.

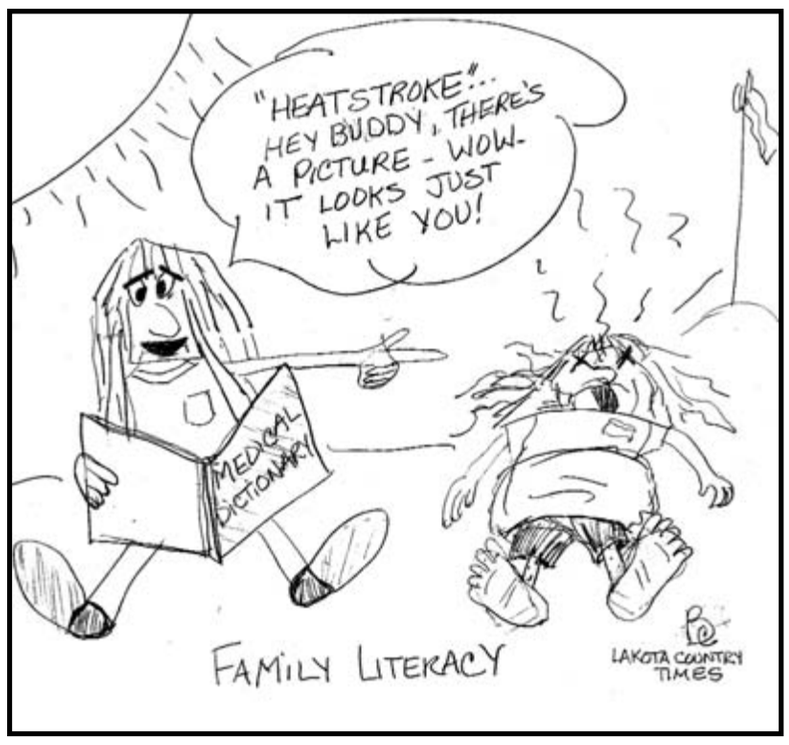
Resurgence of the sun dance

As one of the seven sacred rites of the Tetonwan Lakota, the sun dance or *wiwang wacip*i is one which has had a history of having been banned and gone underground during the coming of the white man.



Despite that fact, the practice of the sun dance is an integral part of Lakota culture and has remained so. There have been many Lakota people who can be credited with keeping it alive and even practicing it when the government banned such practices in an effort to mainstream Lakota people and diminish all evidence of their spirituality.

In a day and age when society at large is being assaulted by an ever changing population base and never ending wars, the sun dance appears to be experiencing a 'resurgence' on the northern plains in the last 10 years. The fact that there are now so many sun dances being held appears to be somewhat controversial given the total number. However, when you tally up the number of sun dancers, helpers and visitors who combine their efforts to sponsor the sun dance, it is apparent that there is a deep commitment and spirituality that is increasing among the people and other Native nations.

It is estimated there is an average of 50 or so sun dances on the Pine Ridge and about 18 on Rosebud. And usually there is about 40 to 50 men and women that commit to dance at each, so that would mean there is an average of 2,500 people that seek prayer and healing during the sundance time.

The resurgence of the spiritual quest of many Native and white people, seems to point to a world that is troubled by the increased tensions and stress of overcrowding, territorial disputes, hunger, poverty and increased gas prices to name but a few of the issues that mankind seems to be confronting together.

We still seem to live in a "Jerry Springer Society" where we savor the nasty, vicious, underbelly of our society and enjoy or relish in sharing the most negative stories of our community; let's hope we aren't becoming like the wasicu religious community where we go to church each Sunday but let loose throughout the week Are we practicing the sacrifices and goals and prayers and thoughts during the sundance throughout our life or is it just happening during that week? The extreme heat on the northern plains has not dampened the spirit of those who have endured and managed to uphold their sun dance vows. Keep them in prayer.

Notes From Indian Country

Living in a nation of hypocrites

By Tim Giago

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Ok now, let me get this straight. Gambling was once a crime punishable by a prison sentence. Ministers of the church stood at the pulpit and preached against gambling because the Holy Bible said it was a sin.

The only state in the Union to license legalized gambling was Nevada and its major city, Las Vegas, was often called Sin City. So not only was gambling a crime, it was also a sin. When did all of this change? When did sin become no sin? When did gambling as a crime become gambling as no crime?

I think it all started to change when the state and national governments discovered that collecting taxes (or fees as they are euphemistically known when collected from Indian tribes) on gambling revenues was an easy and painless way to raise money.

I remember when it was illegal to advertise legal gambling and legal gambling establishments in a newspaper or on television. Did that change or has the advertising industry just found clever ways to get around it?

And then the state governments themselves started to get into the gambling industry with all sorts of legal lotteries. Of course they found a hundred reasons why the revenues they collected from state licensed casinos and lottery games were an important addition to the state's economy. Education? Yeah, that was the ticket.

Simply say that 90 percent of all revenues collected from gambling will go to education.

Property taxes? Wow, there's another good one. State people are always complaining about their rising property taxes so just tell them that 10 percent of all gaming revenues will go to reducing their property taxes.

These reasons alone can sure lend a tone of legitimacy to open gambling. I'm surprised that some of the state governments including that of Governor Mike Rounds in South Dakota didn't come up with schemes to give a percentage of gaming revenues to the Church.

Now I read that Indian casinos brought in $23 billion dollars in revenues last year.

Delving into the minds of state officials I would surmise that they are not only considering more and better ways to skim off some of these revenues for themselves, but are also looking at ways to drastically reduce aid to needy Indian families.

Lord knows the federal government is already hatching secret schemes about how to reduce federal funding to Indian tribes.

As is often muttered in the dungeons of the Secretary of the Interior's office, "Hey, since those Indians are all so damned rich, let's start cutting their budgets. A nip here and a tuck there and we will soon be able to wean them from federal money entirely."

Of course, that would leave more money for the Interior Department's land, water, trees and natural resources agencies. Interior's thinking is that Indians still have a lot of control over these things and the budget cuts will give them the money to allow the federal government to take more land, water, trees and natural resources from them. Hey, their rich now and really don't need all of that land, water, trees and natural resources anyhow. They're too busy buying 5,000 square foot homes, Cadillac cars, yachts, video games and 52-inch television sets. And, of course, many of them are much too busy putting their casino money back into their own casinos.

In fact, the Indian nations are getting so rich that they will hardly miss the things the government is about to take from them.

Let them rest on their casinos. That's poetic justice. What the Church has chosen to look at approvingly, the crimes and sins of gambling, has found a home in Indian country and Atlantic City. Or as Vice President Cheney would add, "Big time."

But, of course, the Church is much too busy worrying about abortion, gay marriage, flag burning and stem cell research to give any time or thought to the sin of gambling. Hell, if you will pardon the expression, they would probably build casinos of their own if they could find a way to do it.

If Oral Roberts could build a casino in Oklahoma he wouldn't have to worry so much about dying prematurely if church going people don't send him their hard earned dollars. And just think how much more Pat Robertson could do with his Christian Broadcasting Network if he had his own casino. Sin does pay handily.

The point of all this nonsense is how can the religious right or as it used to call itself "The Moral Majority," raise its voice against every other sin but gambling? In my mind that has got to be the pinnacle of hypocrisy.

It is hypocritical for the Church ministers to preach selectively about sin and then pander and approve of a sin that is historically and biblically a sin and a crime. It is doubly hypocritical for state governors like Mike Rounds of South Dakota to approve legislation attempting to quash legalized abortion while raking in money from the casinos that can be found on nearly every street corner in his state.

It's all about the money, baby, not the morals. "And that's the way it is," as Walter Cronkite used to say.

An open letter from Elouise Cobell

Dear Editor:

The summer of 2006 has been an extremely volatile one for our cause.

On July 11 the U.S. Court of Appeals removed U.S. District Judge Royce C. Lamberth from our case. In so doing, we lost the services of a dedicated and fair jurist who had presided over our case since its inception in 1996.

All individual Indian trust account holders should consider Judge Lamberth's removal a travesty of justice. It is, as columnist Suzan Shown Harjo said, yet another rebuke to one of the "good people" who is trying to change the way the U.S. Government deals with Native People.

Because the appeals court removed the judge at the same time that it was finding the government's conduct in our case deplorable, we plan to appeal his removal. We will argue that the removal of a judge from a case he has faithfully presided over for 10 years is itself without precedent.

We will also tell the Supreme Court that the very conduct that made Judge Lamberth so troubled with the government was, in fact, well documented by the appeals court.

The decision of the three-judge appeals court panel was as strong a denouncement of the trustee-delegates' conduct as we have ever seen: "To be sure, Interior's deplorable record deserves condemnation in the strongest terms," the court said. "Words like 'ignominious" and "incompeten[t]'...and 'malfeasance' and 'recalcitrance' are fair and well-supported by the record." It reinforced earlier rulings by the appeals court that the government has abused its trust obligation and has failed to fulfill its most basic responsibilities to the individual Indian trust beneficiaries.

It should be stressed that, according to the court of appeals, the removal of our judge in no way exonerates the Departments of Interior and Justice. Most importantly, the decision reaffirms the merits of our case (a "worthy cause") and it underscores the core theme of Judge Lamberth's most recent decisions.

His removal was unusual because the appeals court noted approvingly that Judge Lamberth's strong language was based properly on irrefutable evidence of government misconduct. Indeed, Judge Lamberth's order of July 12, 2005, was "nothing more than the views of an experienced judge who, having presided over this exceptionally contentious case for almost a decade has become exceeding ill disposed toward [a] defendant that has flagrantly and repeated breached its fiduciary obligations."

As we have learned from the past decade, the United States government resists change fiercely. That's even when the need for that change is well documented and punctuated by a century of malfeasance and continuing abuse.

We expect they will fight our effort to get the Supreme Court to review both the judge's removal and the vacation of the injunction he had issued on the Interior Department's computer system.

Even the appeals court acknowledged that fact. "To be sure," it said, "we have no doubt Interior's trust account information has serious reliability problems." That makes the need for an injunction even more pressing.

Finally, the appeals court ruling urged the parties "to work with the new judge to resolve this case expeditiously and fairly." Of course, this is precisely what we have engaged in for the last 10 years only to be thwarted time and again by the Department of the Interior and its Department of Justice attorneys who would rather delay a resolution of this matter and leave it to the next administration.

Even now, less than a month after the July 11 decisions, we are aware that mid-level bureaucrats in Interior and Justice are urging members of Congress to reject legislation that would resolve the case. As usual, the government has no interest in a resolution that is "expeditious and fair".

This is not to say that my attorneys and I believe these decisions will further delay a resolution of this case. Indeed, there are reasons to be hopeful that a new judge will not wait another 10 years (or more), as the government now proposes, to render an historical accounting. Especially since the material facts are not even disputed by the government.

Moreover, various media outlets are now reporting that Senator McCain is pressing legislation that would settle the case for $8 billion. This is a far cry from the over $27 billion we proposed last summer, but after bearing personal witness to the hardship and abuse that continues to be heaped upon the individual Indian beneficiaries after 10 years of hard-fought, acrimonious litigation I have directed my attorneys to seriously consider this offer.

This nation's first citizens are also its poorest and any resolution that is "expeditiou and fair" should be seriously and thoughtfully considered. We will be examining this legislation to make sure it is just that.

If you are an account holder or a trust beneficiary, now is the time to express your concerns and hopes about a possible settlement to your member of Congress. It's time for Indian Country to speak. The bureaucrats have had their say.

Northern Perspectives

Etiquette and other practical considerations

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The sun dance setting and all the mystique surrounding it is the center piece of Lakota spirituality and as I comment on some aspects of it I do it very respectfully. Respect and etiquette are two things that all who take part need to attend to.

The sacrifice that is seen at such spiritual gatherings is overwhelming when you observe the energy and commitment of those who have made a vow to dance for some special reason. As I get older I heed the warnings and spend only a couple of hours now attending the sun dance and I am able to pray and support those who are in the sacred circle. The heat has been so unbearable on the northern plains that I cannot even imagine how the people have managed to meet their commitment. There are concerns that we need to all drink a lot of water and to keep hydrated whether we dance or not.

I have a nephew who just finished the sun dance and I didn't talk with him, but the fact that he danced in the intense heat for four days is something that is incomprehensible and admirable at the same time. His partner, my niece, also camped out and supported him for four days and that was equally as wonderful.

The other day I was at another sun dance and I didn't stay very long due to the heat, but it occurred to me that those who participate must undergo some kind of orientation about how to conduct themselves when they come to our homeland.

It should be a privilege and not a right. That must be true of those who simply observe or dance on the sideline in support of the dancers.

We have many visitors to Lakota country and I think we treat them very well as one never hears of any altercations or disputes out on the road. Contrary to some belief, Rosebud is a fairly safe place to visit. You've heard the expression, 'Rosebud is a nice place to visit, but I wouldn't want to live there.' My sentiment might be along the same line of thought, but reversing it I would say that Rosebud is, in fact, a good place to live.

Getting back to the sun dance I attended on Saturday for a brief period. As I was standing outside of the arbor, a young white man came and stood directly in front of me obscuring my already obscured line of site. I was having trouble seeing the dancers already as the pine boughs were hanging down and I had to position myself so that I could see through and around the hanging branches. Anyway, I tapped him on the shoulder and asked him to move over which he did. After awhile, as he was dancing he gradually danced back in front of me, once again interfering with my line of vision. I then took off my head cover and moved partially in front of him.

As I was thinking about the incident, it occurred to me that the young man looked like a foreigner and being a visitor to the Rosebud, he probably should have had a teeny tiny orientation on sun dance etiquette. Even I know not to so rude to step in front of someone and interfere with their participation in a sacred event.

It's funny, right after I left the sun dance, I got on the highway headed for home and a pickup proceeded to tailgate me. It was a vehicle from Oklahoma and I said to myself, "I said, self, yup, another one who could use a bit of visitor orientation and etiquette when visiting our homeland."

Such gatherings sometimes present an opportunity for someone in charge to tell the visitors how to conduct themselves and I especially like it when that occurs. We have many elders and humble people who wouldn't protest when someone interferes with their line of vision, but I chose not to.

Dear SAS:

I had a frightening thing happen a couple weeks ago. I was working in the yard and looked out over the prairie. The next thing I know I am huddled under a table we have outside our house. I know that I saw Iraq just like it was yesterday, even though it's been a year since I returned home. I felt scared. What is happening?

Dear reader:

It sounds as if you had a strong memory that is often called a flashback. There are many reasons why this may have happened to you. If the day was hot, your body may have associated that feeling with the climate you experienced when deployed in Iraq. For some, the rolling brown prairie reminds them of the landscape of brown sand they worked in when overseas.

If this is the first time this has happened to you, you probably are wondering if you are losing your mind. You may feel self conscious and even a little embarrassed that you were huddled under the table. However, this is an example of a normal response to a fearful time you experienced while deployed. You are not losing your mind.

Although it is a delayed response, this can happen when a person has spent a great deal of time in a life-threatening situation.

Uninvited memories like this can cause a person to feel afraid. Part of the fear is associated with reliving what happened to you in Iraq. Some of the fear will be associated with not knowing what this experience is all about.

Your mind and spirit may still be trying to heal from a trauma. You are not alone in this. Others are having experiences such as yours and many are asking for help. You might not have anything like this happen again for a long time, but it is hard to predict. It might be a good idea for you to seek the advice of a counselor at a Vet Center or VA. Staff at the VA, or Vet Center are trained to help you understand what has happened to you. They can offer you ways to manage the flashbacks and other memories.

(Here is another letter on an associated topic. Elements of the dream have been modified for the purpose of this news article).

Dear SAS:

I am hoping you can give me some advice because I am afraid to talk about this with my family. I have bad dreams. I have had them for a long time. The dreams are alike in the fact that they have to do with being in the Army again. In my dream I am running from something and I realize I don't have my rifle. All of a sudden I come up on a dead body and when I look at the face, I see the face of my son. I wake up at this point, crying.

This freaks me out. None of it makes sense to me and I think I might be going crazy. If I told this to my family they would never understand.

Dear Reader:

First of all, you are not going crazy. Nightmares such as yours are common for individuals who have experienced some type of traumatic event.

The actions in the dreams vary, but some themes are the same. Themes include feelings of vulnerability, flight from something, and/or having faces of family or friends show up in unexpected contexts. Often, dreams like these come when a person is feeling stress in their life.

For some, dreams will occur after watching a TV show or movie that has a military theme. Our mind has the power to dump a lot of stuff into our dreams that might not make sense to us.

Since you report that the dreams have been happening for a long time, you would benefit from talking about them with a spiritual leader or a counselor.

That person will be able to work with you to determine what might be causing the dreams.

If it is due to watching too many military movies or TV programs, the first action is to reduce the amount of time spent in this activity. If the dreams appear to be related to stress in your life then the healing process will need more attention. Contact your local VA or Vet Center for help.

If you have a question, please write a letter to one of the following individuals:

Cobell settlement bill pulled

WASHINGTON, DC - The ten year old Cobell case which was scheduled to be heard by the Senate Indian Affairs Committee as S. 140 was abruptly taken off of the hearing agenda yesterday, August 1. No explanation was given. Lawmakers will go on a one month break and once they return they will take up other pressing matters. Senator John McCain as the chair of the Senate Indian Affairs Committee will be stepping down at year's end.

Interior Secretary Dirk Kempthorne and Attorney General Alberto Gonzalez have said they will work with the committee to work to resolve the issue. The committee will work over the August break with Cobell plaintiffs, the administration and others in Indian Country to create a bill that addresses a comprehensive settlement.

Elouise Cobell, plaintiff named in the class action suit on behalf of thousands of individual account holders said, "I think the administration, the White House, made McCain pull the bill."

Originally, lawyers in the litigation case representing Indian tribes alleged that as many 500,000 Native people are owed royalty payments that have been mismanaged. Cobell's lawyers said that a figure amounting to $100 million was owed for grazing, farming, mining, logging and other activities on tribal lands.

In recent months, the plaintiffs in the case said they would consider settling the case for $25 billion; however, Senator McCain has been quoted as saying that he would put the figure much lower at approximately $8 billion.

Others in the administration have also been reluctant to settle the case and say that tribes are owed much less than the figures that have been discussed. Jim Cason, the associate deputy secretary, David Bernhardt, deputy solicitor and Ross Swimmer, the Special Trustee for American Indians have remained on board after the departure of Interior Secretary Gale Norton.

Dennis Giengold, lead attorney for Cobell believes there still is a chance to settle the issue, despite the administration's reluctance. He said, "My guess, though, is that Senator McCain could do it even if the administration wasn't on board. And, if he did, we would be behind him all of the way."

McCain has devoted much of his energy toward the Abramoff scandal and Indian gaming while on the Senate Indian Affairs Committee.

Carl Artman to be nominated Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The White House announced on Wednesday, Aug. 2 that President Bush intends to nominate Carl Joseph Artman to be the next Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Indian Affairs, replacing former Assistant Secretary Dave Anderson.

Artman, an enrolled member of the Oneida Nation of Wisconsin, currently serves as associate solicitor for Indian Affairs at the Department of the Interior.

He previously served as chief counsel of the Oneida Tribe of Indians of Wisconsin. Artman has extensive experience in Indian affairs, including land-to-trust, land claims, taxation, gaming and education. He also worked as a legislative assistant for Rep. Michael Oxley from 1991 to 1994 and served as director of federal affairs for the Oneida Nation of Wisconsin from 1994 to 1995.

His business experience includes serving as general counsel and vice-president of Business development at CorAcess Systems, LLC, in Denver.

He also served as chief legal counsel for Qubit Technology. Artman earned a LLM in Natural Resources and Environmental Law from the University of Denver School of Law, a master's degree in business administration from the University of Wisconsin in 1999, a J.D. degree from Washington University Law School in 1991, and a bachelor's degree from Columbia College in 1987.

With a deep background in tribal issues on his side, Artman has ties to the Republican party and the Bush administration.

In 2002, he was appointed by President Bush to serve on the White House Advisory Board on Tribal Colleges and Universities.

And like his predecessor, the famed entrepreneur Dave Anderson, the new nominee has a background in business as well.

Since the 1990s, he has served as a top executive for companies in the telecommunications and technology fields.

Artman now must fill the void that left the Bureau of Indian Affairs without a leader for nearly 18 months. Anderson, who was also from Wisconsin, resigned in February 2005 after his unconventional ideas to transform the agency failed to gain traction among senior aides, according to an article posted on Indianz.com.

"We look forward to a rapid confirmation and are anxious to get Carl on board," said Nedra Darling, a spokesperson for the BIA. "We look forward to working with him and working together for Indian Country."

Congress will recess at the end of this week for the remainder of August, so his confirmation hearings and consideration by the Senate likely cannot take place until after Labor Day.

The President also plans to appoint him to be a Member of the Board of Trustees of the American Folklife Center, for the remainder of a six-year term expiring June 1, 2010.

Federal help sought to save native languages

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) - Federal grants can help keep some rarely spoken American Indian languages from disappearing, tribal and Indian education officials say.

Of about 500 American Indian languages that existed before European immigration to North America, only about 100 still exist and 20 are spoken by American Indian children, said Ryan Wilson, president of the National Indian Education Association.

Wilson said the federal government discouraged the teaching of Indian languages years ago in an attempt to force cultural assimilation.``We're not playing the role of victims. We don't believe in that," Wilson said. ``But the U.S. government made the biggest investment in the destruction of the languages, and it should make a commensurate investment in helping to bring them back."

He is supporting legislation in Congress that would provide grants for ``immersion schools" that would teach Indian languages. In immersion schools, students learn traditional languages and are taught other subjects in those languages as well.

He estimated the bill would cost about $8 million annually. Sen. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., is a co-sponsor.

Tex Hall, chairman of the Three Affiliated Tribes, which includes the Mandan, Hidatsa and Arikara, said only eight people are still fluent in the Mandan language.

``If we don't do this now, it will be gone," Hall said. ``These speakers are passing on. When they pass, they take a wealth of knowledge with them."

Hall and Wilson spoke during a summer institute on Indian education, held this week at United Tribes Technical College in Bismarck.

United Tribes President David Gipp said there is evidence that language programs can help students improve their overall academic performance.

Weston new chairman of Flandreau Santee Sioux tribe

FLANDREAU - Joshua Weston is the new tribal chairman of the Flandreau Santee Sioux tribe as decided in tribal elections held on Tuesday, Aug. 1. Weston won a relatively close election over Mark Allen with a vote total of 122 votes to Allen's 109. Eloise Drapeau was voted in with a total of 152 votes to 81 for Cindy Weston for secretary of the tribe.

In the tribal council race, Christine Payer won over Leah Flynn with a vote tally of 121 to 109 votes. In the other council race, Darlene Barnard beat Andrew Weston with a vote total of 124 to 108 votes. There are four council seats and two are up for re-election every two years.

New chairman-elect will be sworn into office on Saturday, Aug. 5, while the Weston family will conduct a wopila ceremony on Sunday.

CRST to receive $4 million for roads

EAGLE BUTTE - River Sioux Tribe will receive $4 million for its roads as part of 2007 legislation passed last week by the Senate Appropriations Committee. The money is included in the Transportation, Treasury and Housing and Urban Development spending bill for 2007, according to a news release.

The funding will support two road projects, including the upgrade of 17 miles on Bureau of Indian Affairs Route 12 from the intersection of S.D. Highway 63 to Cherry Creek. It will cost $2 million. Another $2 million will upgrade 12 miles of BIA Route 6, which leads from S.D. Highway 73 to Red Scaffold. The upgrades will resurface and grade the roads. This project will be matched with bridge improvements, the release said.

The Cheyenne River reservation is one of the largest reservations in the United States, with a total area of 2.8 million acres.

Martin Luther King III skips visit to Pine Ridge

PORCUPINE - In a *Rapid City Journa*l article recently, Oglala Sioux Tribe members and families were more insulted than disappointed Tuesday after the eldest son of civil-rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. skipped the South Dakota leg of a Learning and Listening Tour of the "Realizing the Dream" movement.

Russell Means said his staff had to contact officials in Chicago Tuesday morning to find out what had happened when Martin Luther King III did not arrive on his flight at Rapid City Regional Airport.

As part of the "Realizing the Dream" movement, Means had arranged meetings with several families and a tour of Pine Ridge Reservation.

"I think Indian people have been insulted; I think this is a flagrant example of racism," Means said in a telephone interview Tuesday afternoon to the Rapid City Journal from his T.R.E.A.T.Y. School office in Porcupine.

King's staff told Means that the civil-rights activist had only one day available for himself and that Tuesday's planned reservation tour had been deemed overambitious. So, King decided to cancel his visit, Means said.

But his office failed to notify Means of the change Monday night.

Means said it was unconscionable and unacceptable that they would not notify them that King was going to cancel.

Means said Chief Oliver Red Cloud, an 83-year-old elder who uses a wheelchair, was waiting to meet King. "He had other things he could have been doing than waiting for that guy," Means said.

There are no plans to reschedule a tour, Means said.

USD conference to highlight author Joseph Marshall

CUSTER - Author and actor Joseph M. Marshall III will be featured at the Mount Rushmore Leadership Conference Aug. 14-18, the W.O. Farber Center for Civic Leadership announced.

Marshall has written several screenplays and books, including ``The Journey of Crazy Horse: A Lakota History," and ``The Lakota Way: Stories and Lessons for Living."

The audio version of ``The Lakota Way" won a 2003 Native American Music Award in the ``Best Spoken Word" category and a 2004 Audio Publishers Award for ``Best Inspirational/Spiritual Audio Book".

Marshall is the recipient of the Wyoming Humanities Council Award and starred as ``Loved by the Buffalo" in Steven Spielberg's TNT miniseries ``Into the West". He also served as technical advisor for the film.

The Mount Rushmore Institute is a trademarked program sponsored by the W.O. Farber Center for Civic Leadership at USD and it will be held at Sylvan Lake Resort in Custer State Park.

Two Charge Entertainment to perform at Oglala Nation

Two Charge Entertainment of the Rosebud Reservation is a collection of young men who are on a mission to create a hip-hop sound that is acceptable to all. The small, independent company has a tribal license to sell their posters and CD's that are produced locally and which are available online at www.myspace.com/twocharge. "A lot of elders are judgmental and my vision is to see it more modern" said one of the group members as he noted that the older generation also had their particular brand of music that appealed to them and now their turn has arrived.

The members of Two Charge entertainment include, Matt Scott who is headed to South Dakota State University next month, Kyle Rosario of Rosebud, Wade Two Charge who is the group spokesman, Ken Richards, Oglala/Rosebud, Richard Running, Rosebud, Kris Leroy, Rosebud, Josh Whirlwind Soldier, Rosebud and Jerrod Mendoza, Pine Ridge. Most of the group has some form of university or post-secondary training or have been accepted for college and that in itself is an attractive and desirable feature for any young group that are "representing" the people.

Rosario, Running and Two Charge go back a few years to high school when began saving money to undertake their own music production business.

The group has been writing and recording their songs using their own equipment since 2000 and do their own distribution online, in stores and during their performances. They have performed in-state three times this year and welcome the opportunity to perform their mixtape from "Tha Camp" in a free performance at the Oglala Nation Fair on Friday, August 4 after the 3-on-3 tournaments at the park. They will also give any local emcees "the opportunity to shine on the mic, freestyle, battles, etc."

One of the young men said, "The music comes from our experiences both positive and negative. The lyrics are as true as possible."

The group describes their music as Native American hip-hop and often collaborate with local talent in creating their work. One of the group said, "We are all individuals with our own mind. We respect each other's stuff." Another young man in the group said, "My mom loves it. She respects me and wants to know that it is respectable."

Kyle Rosario of the group provides the technological 'know how' as he produces the recordings, designs album covers and generally assists with the public relations aspect of the group's performances. The business end of Two Charge Entertainment is interesting and challenging also as they are also in a position to produce the work of other groups for a set

Crow Creek Tribe $30 million in debt

PIERRE (AP) - The Crow Creek Sioux Tribe is $30 million in the hole and desperately in need of a cash infusion to beef up its anemic police force in the face of a surge in drug-related crime, Chairman Lester Thompson Jr. says.

Thompson, who took office in May, recently issued a report to tribal members outlining the severity of the tribe's financial woes.

It included notice that the tribe owes the Internal Revenue Service almost $4 million in unpaid taxes and penalty fees.

The Crow Creek reservation has consistently ranked among the top five poorest areas in the United States. Unemployment tops 70 percent. Alcohol and other drug abuse is rampant. Education is sorely lacking.

The tribe has long had money trouble as a result.

Thompson blamed the latest crisis, however, on the tribe's fiscal ineptness.

"Our tribe is broke, due to excessive spending," he wrote in the report dated July 16. "All together, the tribe as a whole owes close to $30 million."

That's a problem Thompson and tribal council members must work quickly to address, possibly by realigning or closing programs, cutting payroll and getting a loan to pay off existing debt, the chairman said. But he acknowledged that creditors are leery because of the tribe's financial past.

He said his most immediate concern, though, is what he sees as a need for more police officers and access to a jail.

"The jail has been shut down for quite a while, and there's no communication with the tribe," Thompson said. "I'm chairman of a tribe in the poorest county in America. We don't have the money to operate it, and the Bureau (of Indian Affairs) apparently is unable to do it."

He said the BIA police department is down to two patrol officers, "and that isn't enough to give us coverage for public safety, especially when the officers sometimes must transport prisoners to Eagle Butte or Chamberlain."

The federally funded BIA is in charge of law enforcement and other services on Indian reservations.

In a letter to the BIA Washington office in late June, Thompson said, "Crow Creek Agency being inadequately staffed subjects our community to be treated less than other citizens of the state. We, too, are entitled to live in safe communities."

Reliable crime statistics were not available, but tribal school officials and drug treatment staffers have said that methamphetamine is among major law enforcement problems on the reservation. Meth is a highly addictive drug, and its users often turn to burglary and drug dealing to feed their habits.

Thompson said the federal government has a trust responsibility to provide for public safety in Indian Country.

Calls to the BIA's public information office weren't returned.

The tribe has written to the state's congressional delegation to ask for intervention in the issue, Thompson said.

Spokespeople for both Sen. John Thune, R-S.D., and Sen. Tim Johnson, D-S.D., said they have received the letter and intend to help, but neither senator has found a solution yet.

Donald McGhee, a longtime tribal council member and former Crow Creek chairman, said the closing of the jail puzzled many reservation residents.

Although it was identified in a federal report in 2000 as being seriously overcrowded - operating at 200 percent of capacity, in fact - improvements had been made, McGhee said.

"The jail was in good shape after that," McGhee said. "Without it, and without more law enforcement, we have a lot of concerns around here."

Thompson said some BIA officials suggested that the tribe should "638 it," a phrase that refers to the process by which a tribe runs its own program with federal funds.

A study of Indian Country jails, "Neither Safe Nor Secure: An Assessment of Indian Detention Facilities," done in 2004 by the Interior Department's Office of Inspector General, concluded: "BIA has failed their responsibility for providing safe and secure detention facilities."

That study said there were 72 detention facilities in Indian Country in August of 2004.

BIA law enforcement services ran 17 of those, tribes ran nine, and 46 operated under the 638 contracts.

fee. In fact, they recently produced a CD recording of the drum group Eagle Creek from Antelope community on the Rosebud reservation.

The group has realized a bit of financial success that has helped them to purchase the production equipment that is vital to their ability to work out of their home locally. In fact, there is a desire to earn more income through their performances, CD's and posters so that their efforts are financially rewarded. They are available for special occasions, weddings, dances and so forth.

What is interesting about the group's music and subsequent performances is that immediate feedback can be left at myspace.com for their review. They note that they also receive verbal feedback on their music after their performances.

(formerly Knight Ridder Tribune News) of Washington, DC. He has been writing a syndicated column for more than 25 years and it appears in newspapers all across America.

Giago started the Lakota Times weekly newspaper on the Pine Ridge Reservation in 1981.

He built it into the largest weekly newspaper in South Dakota and the largest independently owned Indian newspaper in the United States.

He later changed the name of the paper to Indian Country Today and it is still published every week by the Oneida Nation of New York State.

Giago was only the second journalist in the history of South Dakota to be awarded the prestigious Nieman Fellowship to Harvard University for the school years of 1990 - 1991.

He has won many journalism awards in his 30 years in the newspaper business including the H. L Mencken Award from the Baltimore Sun and the Distinguished Journalism Award from the School of Journalism at the University of Missouri.

Giago was also one of the original founders of Native American Journalist Association, which is now based out of Brookings and is the Indian journalism association of the nation.

He will be moving to Albuquerque, NM next week where he will work with some of the area schools and colleges there to promote Indians into journalism. Clear Light Books of Santa Fe, NM will publish his new book, "Children Left Behind" next week.

Giago said, "After more than 35 years in the newspaper business I think it is time to put away my beat up typewriter and move on to other endeavors. I hope to have more time to devote to my weekly column and to continue working on another book."

He said that the Native American Review Magazine and the foundation will be left in the capable hands of his daughter Denise, his niece Christy Tibbitts, sales manager Jackie Jordan and in the able hands of the new managing editor Collette Keith. "I will be only an email away if they need my help," he said.

Giago had open-heart surgery last year and has been recovering from that operation since that time.

He will be autographing his new book at the Santa Fe Indian Market starting August 18.

RST awarded predevelopment funds

A $15,000 grant assists with engineering and environmental study

ROSEBUD - USDA Rural Development Acting State Director Tim B. Potts presented Rosebud Sioux Tribal Chairman Rodney Bordeaux with a ceremonial check representing water and waste disposal grant funds in the amount of $15,000 to be used for an engineering and environmental study to relocate the waste water disposal lagoon for the Rosebud community.

Potts said, "USDA Rural Development funds will assist the Rosebud Sioux Tribe in accomplishing their goals and reinforces our agency's commitment to work with other government agencies to serve the community of Rosebud, the Rosebud Sioux Tribe and their tribal membership."

The Rosebud Sioux Tribe is proposing to build a runway to enhance healthcare services in the area. The selected location for the proposed runway is near the existing sewer lagoons for the Rosebud Community are located. The Federal Aviation stipulates that bodies of water should not be within 5,000 feet of the runway. Also, at present the lagoons are leaking, in addition to needing extensive repairs, the tribe felt this was an opportune time to conduct a study to identify whether or not relocating the sewer lagoons is feasible. This $15,000 of federal funding will be leveraged with Indian Health Services funding in the amount of $60,000.

"With the assistance of Rural Development and HIS, we are well on our way toward the establishment of a local airport in the Rosebud Community. This is necessary to provide air ambulance service to the patients at the IHS Hospital. This runway will improve emergency services to the Tribal members and to all others who are utilizing the hospital," said Rodney Bordeaux, Rosebud Sioux Tribal Chairman.

L-R: Tim Potts, Acting State Director for USDA Rural Development Rodney Bordeaux, President of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe James Begeman, Field Engineer for IHS in Rosebud David Adrian, Manager for USDA Rural Development.

USDA Rural Development Acting Area Director David Adrian from Rapid City also attended the event along with James Begeman, Field Engineer for IHS in Rosebud. USDA Rural Development has ten offices in the state that assist rural communities. Office locations include a state office in Huron, along with area offices in Aberdeen, Huron, Mitchell, Pierre, Rapid City, Sioux Falls, Sturgis, Watertown, and Yankton. Further information on rural programs is available at a local USDA Rural Development office or by visiting USDA's web site at http://www/rurdev.-usda.gov.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I have a question?! I was at Sun Dance a couple weeks ago and I was told that there are two medicine men that are trying to use "bad medicine"!! I was told one of the names but not the other.

I have a feeling about who the other one is, his Sun Dance is going on now. I have a family mentor dancing there. Is it him?

I am feeling really confused and scared. If it is him, what do I do?

Can you help me?

Confused about bad medicine

Dear Confused:

I too have had run-in's with "bad" medicine, at Sun Dance as well as just in life. What I know is that it is an area "outside" of what any of us, except medicine men and pipe-carriers, can usually handle.

I am not a pipe-carrier (except in my heart) but feel the strength and courage to face bad medicine with the help of the interpreter man that I love and trust.

Prayers for protection and various tobacco ties placed within a home that is under attack do help. Your own medicine man can advise you of what to do to protect your family. Please understand that your own medicine man is aware of what is going on and he will know what to do to handle it. Many times, however, there is no bad medicine at all...just a series of events based on the people present - their "karma" being returned to them.

Gossip often enhances the belief and increases the effect of "bad medicine" when it is being used. I don't see your family mentor being directly involved with "bad medicine" being thrown at you or your family. Your family mentor may be jealous or uncomfortable with your medicine man's power and hocaka...these feelings unfortunately do add to the power of any negative medicine that is stirring as it tends to feed it.

There is a severe price to pay for the use of "bad medicine," and any informed person would be more than terrified to use it. The price is personal and heavy. I am always saddened by the mis-use of medicine, as now is the time for the Lakota people to come together in unity.

The reunion of all into one Sun Dance (in my "visions") is going to happen at some point in time. These individual struggles with jealous hearts will fade away as the strength of the Creator unites all hearts into one circle.

It is man-kinds' insecurities and jealousies and fear that one medicine man has more "power" than another that tear people apart. This is the work of fear manifest (it has many names) to dis-empower the Indian people and tear them into pieces versus the powerful Reunion-Unity Spirit that will save The People in the future.

Whenever there is great spiritual drama on the earth there is always a play of "good vs. evil." If you watch enough movies, and witness enough life then you know that eventually good will win, because that is ultimately the power of the Creator.

Only a fool would continue on the side of darkness, because it just takes one light to eradicate it.

Good will always win in the long run, because the Creator is that. Who wants to wage a war with God...and if they do, how can they be such fools of darkness that they think they will win?

What is truly sad to me is that a good medicine man will always tell you that he doesn't have any power; it is the Spirits that he works with which are part of the Creator.

It is, in other words God's power. I have seen the Spirits leave more than one medicine man because of mis-use of that power. This is an ancient religion, with many plays to upset it, but ultimately the healing power of the Spirits and the strength of love of the people for each other will prevail.

Don't worry, you are safe within the love and protection of your hocaka.

Dear Anna,

The main subject or question I would like to ask you Anna is: will my husband's ex-girlfriend who is still in the middle of I and my husband's relationship ever leave me alone? She fought with me twice and I want to know the truth why she don't like me and why she fought with me because I never met her but I know who she is. Is she ever going to be out of our lives?

I love my husband and I don't want any more problems can you help me? And will I ever get out of this financial rut I'm in? I work so hard but yet I'm left without a job.

What do you see in the future for myself, my husband, my daughter and my step-daughter? I know there's so many question's right now I need guidance and a job to pay my bills.

Please help

Dear Please help:

Your husband's ex girl-friend has what I like to call "emotional issues" that are not included in good mental health. She is obsessed with you and your husband. Her own life's frustration is out of hand.

Just ignore her. Eventually she will have to find another focus besides the man she didn't "get." Many people will tell her to forget it and back off. For her own sake she will understand that I am directing this letter to her (she reads the Lakota Country Times) and will begin to see that attacking you or your husband's reputation is stupid, shallow and insipid. I would like to remind her that any relationship that doesn't work out isn't meant to...that the Creator has something and someone else in store for her.

She doesn't like you because you are with her ex. No other reason but that one. It really has nothing to do with you, just the shadows in her own mind.

You do need to work, and I see you working about the end of summer in an organization that sponsors the welfare of children. You will be helping in many capacities; working internally with some help in record keeping, driving children around, visiting homes and other tasks.

Once you get a paycheck begin to pay your past debts in small increments and plan how to spend your money. It is hard to live on the money that most of us make, but it is easier if you pay your bills, buy what you absolutely need, and don't spend too much money frivolously.

Every once in a while, about once every six weeks or so, allow yourself a little extra money for a treat.

Drugs and alcohol are not included in that treat, as they will defeat any home's financial security. You will be all right in a little time (about 6 to 8 months).

Good luck with your new plans.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868 @gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551. All requests may be subject to publication.

Oglala Sioux (Lakota) Housing Request for Proposals Attorney Services

Oglala Sioux (Lakota) Housing ("OSLH") is requesting a proposal for Attorney Services. Attorney will act as General Counsel for OSLH and will assist OSLH in meeting compliance requirements including but not limited to policy, ordinance, and occupancy agreement development, staff and Board training, development and review of contract documents, and other services as deemed necessary.

OSLH is the Tribally Designated Housing Entity for the Oglala Sioux Tribe of the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, located in South Dakota. OSLH manages approximately 392 Mutual Help and Occupancy Units and 1150 Low-Rent Units constructed under the Housing Act of 1937 ("37 Act") and 45 Lease Purchase Units constructed under the Indian Housing Block Grant program developed pursuant to the Native American Housing Assistance and Self-Determination Act ("NAHASDA"). OSLH operates under a budget in excess of nine million dollars per year.

The work to be performed under the proposal is on a project subject to section 7(b) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450e(b) and section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968. Section 7(b) required that to the greatest extent feasible (1) preference and opportunities for training and employment shall be given to Indian organization and Indian-owned Economic enterprises. All entities submitting proposals and claiming Indian Preference must include documentation satisfactory to show that they are Indian owned. Section 3 requires that to the greatest extent feasible opportunities for training and employment be given to lower income residents of the project area and contracts for work in connection with the project be awarded to business concerns that are located in, or owned in substantial part by persons residing in the areas of the project. All subcontracts executed between the proposer and its subcontractors, if any, also are subject to those provisions and language requiring such compliance will be included in all subcontracts.

In addition to the SS7(b) and 3 compliance requirements, the successful proposer must comply and ensure subcontractor compliance with the Copeland Act Requirements(29 C.F.R.Part 3); 24 C.F.R. part 85 Certifications, including but not limited to mandatory standards and policies relating to energy efficiency contained in the state energy conversation plan issued in compliance with the energy Policy and Conservation Act (Pub.L. 94-163), and HUD requirements related to reporting patent rights, and/or copyrights and other rights to data; HUD procurement regulations; OSLH Procurement Policy; and all other applicable laws, rules and regulations.

the selection of a qualified attorney will be based on the following evaluation criteria with established point rating for each category:

1. 20 points: Past successful performance and experience providing services to Indian Housing Authorities under the 37 Act and to TDHEs after the adoption of NAHASDA.

2. 20 points: Capacity and experience in providing policy and ordinance development. Interested firms must submit a sample procurement and personnel policy.

3. 20 points: Experience in providing staff and Board training in NAHASDA-related issues.

4. 10 points: Experience and professional qualifications of key personnel including specialized skills, project coordination, management skills, and experience in working together as a team.

5. 10 points: Specialized experience and technical competence (including fiscal capacity) of the firm. The firm and/or its attorneys should have had a minimum of fifteen (15) years experience with projects of this type. Volume and nature of present workload and availability of additional personnel and consultants to accelerate services required, if necessary.

6. 5 points: Indian Preference. Pursuant to S 7(b) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, 25 U.S.C. '450e(b), points shall be given for Indian ownership and participation, and/or evidence that a proposing firm is committed to the hiring of and does hire persons enrolled in federally recognized tribes, descendants of members of federally recognized tribes, or persons who are actively involved in the Indian community.

7. 5 points: Minority Preference. Pursuant to Section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, as amended, 12 U.S.C. ' 170lu, points shall be given to minority-owned firms, including women-owned firms, and firms that show evidence of commitment to hiring minorities and women.

8. 5 points: Cost, based on hourly rates.

9. 5 points: Because of fluctuating needs in Indian housing and demands for changes in NAHASDA, the firm must exhibit capacity to represent OSLH's interests in Washington D.C.

Inquiries related to submittal of proposals may be addressed to Ken Lone Elk, OSLH Executive Director at (605)867-5161. Proposers shall submit an original and four (4) copies of the proposal in a sealed envelope clearly marked Proposal for Attorney Services. All proposals shall be submitted to Oglala Sioux (Lakota) Housing, Attn: Ken Lone Elk, P.O. Box 603, East Hwy 18, Pine Ridge, South Dakota 57770, and received no later than 4:30 p.m. on August 17, 2006. Proposals not received by that time and date shall be rejected. OSLH reserves the right to reject any and all proposals and to waive any and all deficiencies.

Rosebud Chief Red Crow and officers honored

Lack of seat belts, alcohol lead to injuries

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Rosebud Law Enforcement Services and the Rosebud Sioux Tribe honored their own when Chief Red Crow and Ben Estes were recognized for completing criminal investigator (C.I.) training. Officer "Hawkeye" Waln was honored for completing K-9 training while officer, Robert Sedlmajer, was recognized for completing accident reconstruction training. Most of the law enforcement officers appeared to be present; however, Officer Ginsbach was on assignment with the park service.

RST President Rodney M. Bordeaux was on hand to lend some moral support to the department. He said, "We are proud of you guys. The appreciation is there. You are making the department look professional. We are showing Indian Country, the state and the federal government that we can be on our own. We are a sovereign nation and as things come to fruition, we can be a stronger nation. Keep up the good work and a job well done."

Red Crow thanked his officers, his wife and remaining staff, dispatcher Daisy Wright, Troy, Emily and Collette, for their work in sponsoring the honoring dinner which was accompanied by a couple of homemade cakes. RST vice-president, Wayne Boyd, was also in attendance for a brief period.

Charles Red Crow

Red Crow and Estes completed 12 weeks of criminal investigator training sponsored by the Federal Law Training Program center of Glencoe, Ill. Red Crow who holds a bachelors degree in criminal justice said, "About a third of the training was a refresher. It helped me understand the elements of criminal investigation. In five years, I would like to attend the FBI's National Academy which is 12 weeks. It is something that helps for those in upper management."

Red Crow admitted that one day when he retires he would like to teach criminal justice at Sinte Gleska

STURGIS - Last Friday, a couple of hundred Lakota people and their supporters marched into Sturgis to rally at the Meade County Law Enforcement Center. The heat of the day was intense, however, it did not dampen the efforts of Native people to ask bikers not to drive down highway 79 which leads to Bear Butte. The Lakota people, Northern Cheyenne and numerous other Native tribes hold the mountain sacred.

The gathering was complete with signs urging bikers to forego highway 79, while the intent was to urge county officials to create a five mile buffer zone around the sacred site. The annual affair is firmly embedded in the social and economic lifestyle of Sturgis and its size is threatening to forever change the foundation of the community, not to mention its impact on the future of the sacred Bear Butte. Bikers apparently spend an inordinate amount of money during the rally and its many venues and traffic congestion is becoming an obstacle to the local community who remain long after the crowd has dispersed.

The Northern Cheyenne have purchased 700 acres of land around Bear Butte and set up a temporary roadside booth today to hand out pamphlets explaining their efforts at keeping Bear Butte sacred. Rufus Spear and Raymond Limpie of the Northern Cheyenne were to hold a news conference to get their information out to

During the rally, organizers worked with law enforcement to provide additional security known as the Warrior Society. Vic Camp of Manderson was a spokesman for the security and said the fact that they wore bandanas over their faces represented the invisibility of Native people for centuries because of colonization.

Natalie Hand said that Native protesters were treated with disrespect and snide remarks during the march, but were encouraged to continue. Carter Camp of the Coalition to Defend Bear

The perfect Indian taco on east North

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

RAPID CITY - Frybread has been considered traditional delicacy in Indian country and in the mainstream for quite some time. In fact, it was declared the official bread of South Dakota.

The art of making fry bread is something that is considered a talent.

When you have perfected your frybread skills to that utmost mouth watering taste, you surely have something valuable.

In Indian Country frybread is considered a staple of many diets and in recent years, there have been many suggested ways to create such delicacies with certain healthy cooking oils, while enjoying it in moderation. Frybread is often seen at powwows, celebrations and other gatherings as a traditional food of Lakota people.

And that is what Carlita and Fred Bush

Jr. did, they perfected their frybread to make a one delicious Indian taco and are now marketing it and have been successfully at doing so.

They opened C.J.'s Indian Taco restaurant on east North Street in Rapid City on July 7 and are now selling an average of 150 Indian tacos a day. The C.J. stands for Carlita Jeanette, whose nickname is C.J.

Butte also said marchers were the targets of disparaging remarks during an interview over South Dakota Public Radio on August 9 at 11:00 a.m. Nancy Pile of Bear Butte International Alliance also was interviewed along with Camp and noted that the issue represents a clash between urban and rural environments. Pile said, "There is a need for education. There are huge gaps around the legal history of land, the cultural history, medicine recover. The land north of Bear Butte was stripped and covered with asphalt. It is a rural, urban clash, but the rural identity is not going away."

Camp said that the South Dakota congressional delegation has virtually ignored the protest efforts. He said, "We need everyone in South Dakota to support Bear Butte International Alliance. I want to appeal everyone. The local people will stay here. Anne White is running for county commissioner." Representative Stephanie Herseth did meet with Native people camped at the base of Bear Butte, however, it was primarily a listening session.

Jay Allen, the owner of the Broken Spoke Saloon in downtown Sturgis has been at the heart of the concerns over development. His new concert venue, Sturgis County Line, two miles north of Bear Butte has been a most visible symbol of protest by Native people who are concerned over the close proximity of the huge structure and the noise which is disrespectful to Native people who wish to pray in peace.

Allen was also interviewed over SD public radio this morning. He said, "The issue between myself and the Native Americans has created curiosity and it has gotten more people to come to this place.., the economy has taken a toll with these gas prices." Allen's projected a sharp attitude when he said, "I don't know why they targeted me.., They have banded together.., and the accusation isn't even real. In a screwed up way, I have been partially part of getting people together."

Debra White Plume of the Inter-Tribal Coalition to Defend Bear Butte has been visibility in the forefront of the effort to protect the sacred Bear Butte. The group is holding a month long camp in protesting ongoing develop around the sacred site. Alex White Plume, President of the Oglala Sioux Tribe has been supportive of their efforts as well as the Rosebud Sioux Tribe and many other Lakota tribal governments and entities around the state.

The Summit of Indigenous Nations which was convened on August 1-4 at Mato Paha drafted a resolution calling for a "Rescission of the Conceptual Doctrine of Discovery and related documents, specifically the Inter Caetera Bull (Papal Bull) of 1493 and the 1496 Royal Charter of the Church of England."

According to the resolution, the discovery doctrine as adopted by the United States contained the legal basis and rationale for extinguishing aboriginal title to Indian land in the United States. Indian lands were able to be confiscated without the permission of the Indian Nations and summit representatives appealed to the Pope who is the governmental head of the Vatican to rescind the papal doctrine. It read, "The summit of Indigenous Nations at Mato Paha hereby urges that the Pope of the Roman Catholic Church and the Queen of England and Archbishop of Canterbury for the Church of England disavow and rescind the claimed validity of the doctrine of discovery against all people..,and all other doctrines that have been relied upon thereon for the dispossession of lands and the subjugation of non-Christian peoples."

On Monday, four U. S. postage stamps were unveiled in a ceremony at the Sturgis Community Center attended by Interior Secretary Dirk Kempthorne, Governor Rounds and the South Dakota congressional delegation. The stamps carried a motorcycle theme, while protestors outside of the building carried signs which asked bikers not to travel highway 79 to Bear Butte.

Kempthorne met with tribal leaders in Rapid City on Sunday, but did not meet with those camped at Bear Butte. Carter Camp and others said that he should have met with them. Camp said, "This man has never taken the time to learn about Indian Affairs, and he's in charge of all our affairs."

University, but for now his mind was on the more immediate upcoming "Labor Day Drunk Driving Campaign." The campaign is intended to reduce the number of drivers who might be impaired by alcohol use, by targeting highly populated areas and conducting spot checks.

The police department is short seven officers in all; however, the five who are certified as criminal investigators serve as a back-up for regular patrol officers, according to Red Crow and also enforce any moving violations. Red Crow noted that with his newly certified role as a C.I. he will be on call with the others investigators when crimes that are committed appear to fit into a federal definition of a major crime.

Officer Robert Sedlmajer explained that his certification in accident reconstruction will eliminate the need for the South Dakota Highway Patrol to send officers to assist in accident reconstruction.

The Rosebud police department will be able conduct such assessment on their own. His training unfolded in three parts; basic, advanced and a final phase which was taught by the Institute of Technology and Management of the University of Northern Florida.

Sedlmajer explained that accident reconstruction has to be an exact science in order to hold up in a court of law. There can be no room for "reasonable doubt" as the discipline is based upon scientific and mathematical theory when calculating distances traveled by vehicles which crash.

Sedlmajer cited some alarming statistics with respect to life in Indian Country. He said, "In Indian Country, you are five times more likely to be in killed in an accident that involved alcohol."

He noted that when a car is involved in a crash and it is a "roll over" it is especially dangerous when the occupants are ejected. He said, "Every crash that is a roll over the number one cause of injury is being ejected from the vehicle."

Last year there were more than 500 automobile accidents on the Rosebud reservation, and 90 percent of those involved alcohol. Sedlmajer also said that Charles Mack of the Rosebud I.H.S. hospital Environmental Health office is conducting a study on the use of seat belts on the Rosebud and that an unofficial estimate is that only 10 percent of drivers use seat belts.

Sam Two Bulls is inspired by great Native artists

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

SCENIC - Oglala Lakota artist, Sam Two Bulls graduated from the Institute of American Indian Arts in Santa Fe, NM in 1991 and some of the renowned artists which the institute has produced have been a great inspiration for Two Bulls.

He grew up in the Red Shirt Table area and his family moved to Rapid City but moved right before the flood in 1972 to Slim Buttes.

"I look up to some bigger artists, like R.C. Gorman for example. My motivation is the conditions on the reservation and I want to improve myself and the reservation" he said as he described his primary motivation.

With his Associate of Arts degree in two dimensional art in hand and many years of experience, Two Bulls has opened the Two Bulls Gallery in Scenic and is determined to make his life better and in the process be a role model and inspire others to improve conditions on the Pine Ridge reservation.

The gallery is a rather subdued setting that can easily do with a more prominent sign announcing the gallery. Scenic is a small town and it is a good find when one discovers its location as it contains some beautiful Lakota works that Two Bulls has been inspired to create through blues, aqua, white, red, green, and yellow colors. Paintings, horse sticks, buffaloes, and other intricate carvings are displayed for purchase at the gallery and the prices are very reasonable considering that the designs are reflective of the Lakota culture.

His work is also prominent in many schools, businesses and private homes on Pine Ridge as brother, Curtis Two Bulls, has been a very active salesman in promoting his work. Sam said, "Curtis is a good salesman.

He has a good sense of humor and relates well to people."

The Two Bulls Gallery is located on rented property owned by the Merrles in Scenic who also own the Long Horn Store across the street.

They have been very supportive and, in fact, also sell Two Bull's artwork on the internet. Two Bulls said he also had a friend who worked at Loneman School who has moved on, but continues to market his artwork.

In addition to the gallery, Two Bulls takes orders from Prairie Edge and the Drum Company in Rapid City for buffalo and horse sticks in different sizes which are sold at different prices.

Such orders can take 2-3 days to design, cut out, and paint and that is where other members of the Two Bulls tiospaye come into the picture and provide a supportive role in the Two Bull's entrepreneurial venture. Nieces and nephews do some of the preliminary background painting, and sanding, while male relatives do the more tedious and demanding work of cutting out wood patterns.

Two Bulls also takes yearly trips to Taos and Santa Fe, NM to sell his work at the Taos Drum Company and the Indian Market in Santa Fe and his dream is to one day do a one man art show in New York City.

When asked about future plans he said, "In 5-10 years, I have a plan to set up a gallery on highway 18 and have other artists sell their work at a commission.

That is a dream. I want to have a one man show in New York City with my canvas paintings."

Two Bulls said, he was thankful to the Merrles of the Long Horn Store who have helped along the way. He also said, "Steve DuBray has been guiding our family in an emotional and spiritual way" and he wanted to thank him for his guidance.

Two Bulls has plans to set up his own website to market his work one day, however, at the moment, the combination of Curtis selling his work, the sales on the internet and the gallery sales are combining to make his enterprise a success.

It provides a living for Two Bulls and future expansion will be a logical direction for his tremendous artistic talent that is truly reflective of the Lakota way.

Sam Two Bulls is an established Oglala Sioux artist who is perfecting his craft and planning for expansion in the future along highway 18. Shown here in his gallery in Scenic.

Both Carlita (Takes War Bonnett) and Fred are both Oglala Lakota and from the Martin and Kyle area.

Their menu includes a large Indian taco for $6.50, a small one for $4.50 and a taco salad for $3.50 and a one piece of frybread for a buck. The menu also includes menudo, wojapi and cold drinks. Eventually frybread poppers will be added to the menu. Poppers are frybread filled with meat, cheese and spices fried to a nice brown delicious meal.

The family lives at Sturgis where Fred works as an electrician at the Ft. Meade Veteran's Center. He helps out in the evenings and takes care of the accounting. He is a graduate of Western Dakota Vo Tech and took two years of business classes at Oglala Lakota College.

Carlita and their daughter Corisa travel six days a week to Rapid City to open the restaurant and begin their day by making the frybread dough. Corisa, who is a junior, attends Stevens High School. Besides her daughter, C.J. employs two other employees full time, her brother Leo Takes War Bonnett and Ruby Wheeler.

C.J.'s experience in making frybread comes from her mother in law Charlene Bush of Martin, who is known for her frybread skills and has cooked in schools and hospitals for many years. C.J. also has worked as a food service worker in hospitals and in a correctional facility.

Aside from their own financing, they acquired a loan through the Innovative Banking through a Small Business Administration loan express workshop they attended. She said so far, they haven't put too much into marketing their Indian tacos but the signs outside and some recent articles in local papers helped bring them business.

She said the frybread making work load got easy last week when they acquired a commercial size maker from a school auction recently.

To accentuate the dining experience and meal presentation, their restaurant is decorated with Native American art they have collected as a family. The interior is painted a soft adobe color that adds coolness to the décor.

The restaurant also does take out orders but she said they are far from doing deliveries and not until they can afford it. They have done big orders and are able to do so she said. They have taken orders up to 100 at once.

Creating that unique taste of the fry bread seems to be the key to the success as diners will most likely provide positive and constructive feedback to their dining experience whether seasoned eaters or first time novices.

Triathlon, walk and run highlight health and fitness during 13th OST Health Fair

More than 200 participate in walk,run or triathlon

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Close to 20 tribal groups, agencies and organizations set up booths in Billy Mills Hall in Pine Ridge for the 13th annual OST Health Fair but a highlight for over 200 youth, men and women was the walk and run and the third annual triathlon.

For the third year the health fair sponsored a triathlon which required teams or individuals to complete a four mile bike ride, a 75 yard swim and a two mile run. A total of 27 individuals competed in the triathlon with Ken Starr of Ft. Yates the overall winner completing the course in 29 minutes; Matt Rama was second in 37:23 and Bull Dawg Michaud was third in 38:58. In the women's category, Tatewin Means was first in 39:40, Tanya Whirlwind Soldier was second in 45:00 and Patti Yellow Boy was third.

In the triathlon youth division Desiree Blacksmith was first in 42:29, Aimee Pond took second in 53:41 while Cheyenne Ten Fingers was third in 55:00. In youth boys James Pine took first in 46:55, Boo Boo Jacobs took second in 47:33 and Tyrell Sitting Holy was third in 51:17.

In the team division, Shawn Keith Sr. and Jr. and Terry Friend took the championship with a time of 30 minutes, Alex Pine, Wes Yellow Horse and Doni DeVory took second in 32:00 while Rick Barry, Dawn Frank and Jeff Pourier finished third with 33:00.

"The walk and run and triathlon are growing each year," said Mary Tobacco and Karen Red Star, OST health educators, "it is neat to see more and more people taking an active role in staying physically fit."

Booths lined the walls and open spaces in Billy Mills Hall as hundreds of community members filed through the fair to gather health information and handouts and take in the meal prepared by Sis Martin. Booths included representatives from Public Health nursing, OST Employee Assistance Program, OST Ambulance, Anpetu Luta Otipi, OST Health Education, Oral Health Education, I.H.S. Diabetes Prevention, CHR Program, Oyate Blehilya Program, Pine Ridge Extension and 4H, OST Early Intervention, Walking Forward Program, OST Special Education, Tokahe Wounspe and Oglala Lakota CASA.

Christy Webber out front, lead the runners, she won the women's three mile run and last year ran cross country at Dakota Wesleyan University in Mitchell.

In the walk and run on Thursday morning, there were 13 women runners, 12 male; there were 76 women walkers and 37 men.

Schools and local athletes prepare for Fall sports

Volleyball jamboree scheduled for St. Francis

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

PINE RIDGE/ROSEBUD - Golfers opened practice on Monday while football, cross country and volleyball at local schools open practice on Monday, Aug. 14.

"Most student athletes who plan to participate in a sport this school year will need a current physical before they are able to even practice," said Jen Schaer, athletic director at Red Cloud high school outside of Pine Ridge, "physicals are being offered at the hospital in Pine Ridge and in the clinics in the districts" she added.

Little Wound has a new athletic director, Wilbur Ferguson, Dana Brave Eagle is back as volleyball coach, Darrell Hunter returns for football, Steve Elwood had cross country and Arlin Whirlwind Horse is the golf coach.

Pine Ridge welcomes Nellie Long back as volleyball coach after some time off, Dave Michaud returns for football, Dale Pine is the cross country coach and Smiley Sierra is taking golf.

Crazy Horse is co-opting football with Little Wound with Jerry Slade coordinating the Crazy Horse side, Elizabeth Mathias is doing volleyball and Boyce Upholt is doing cross country.

Nick Dressel is juggling his dean of students position again at Red Cloud with being the football coach, Robin Johnson returns for volleyball, Lenny Clifford is doing golf and the school does not have a commitment as of yet for cross country.

In conjunction with the SD High School Activities Association and the SD Volleyball Officials Association, St. Francis high school is sponsoring a volleyball jamboree to train volleyball officials on Friday, Aug. 18 at the school in St. Francis.

"The need for volleyball officials today is so great," said Dani Walking Eagle, St Francis volleyball coach and Ruth Rehn, SDHSAA, "we are offering a basic training course for officials here at St. Francis, the training is free but we ask you to pre-register if you can so we have an idea of how many are coming."

The training starts at 9 a.m. central with actual matches running from 11 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.. If you are interested in the training contact Dani at 605 747-2297 or dweagle@sfisk12.org or call Ruth at 224-9261. If you are interested in bringing your high school volleyball team for the jamboree, contact Dani.

Suspended OST Public Safety staff receive extension for civilian hearing

PINE RIDGE - On Thursday, the Civilian Review Board met in Pine Ridge to hear an appeal from seven OST Department of Public Safety staff members who had been terminated in late May. The OST Council passed a resolution to change their status to suspended with pay until a hearing. Public Safety on the advice of their attorney changed it to suspended without pay because of potential disallowed costs rulings.

The attorney hired by the DPS staff, on Thursday asked for a 30 day extension to review the findings of the investigation, it was granted. Pat Ross is the chair of the Civilian Review Board and its members include: Sandra Old Horse, Karla Cuny, Arlene Pourier and Jean Whirlwind Horse who represents Public Safety on the board.

The seven employees who the council changed from terminated to suspended include Rick Mousseau, Betty Black Crow, Carla Apple, Priscilla He Crow, Deb Jensen, Millie Richards and Debbie Mousseau.

Two Sicangu males die in car wreck over weekend

ROSEBUD - According to Rosebud Law Enforcement Services officer, Robert Sedlmajer, two young Sicangu males, George Guerue, Jr., 34, and Homer Two Teeth,. Jr., 37, died when their automobile failed to stop at the junction of BIA road 1 and 7 which is located on the top of the hill proceeding west out of town. The road intersects with the road which goes south to St. Francis.

There was no sign of any braking as the vehicle was traveling north and failed to stop as it plunged over the hill, became airborne, and went into a ravine traveling an approximate distance of 187 yards before coming to rest. According to Officer Sedlmajer, the vehicle, a 2000 Chevrolet Camaro, was traveling at a speed of 82 miles per hour.

The funeral for both tribal members will be on Aug. 10.

'Buckle up'

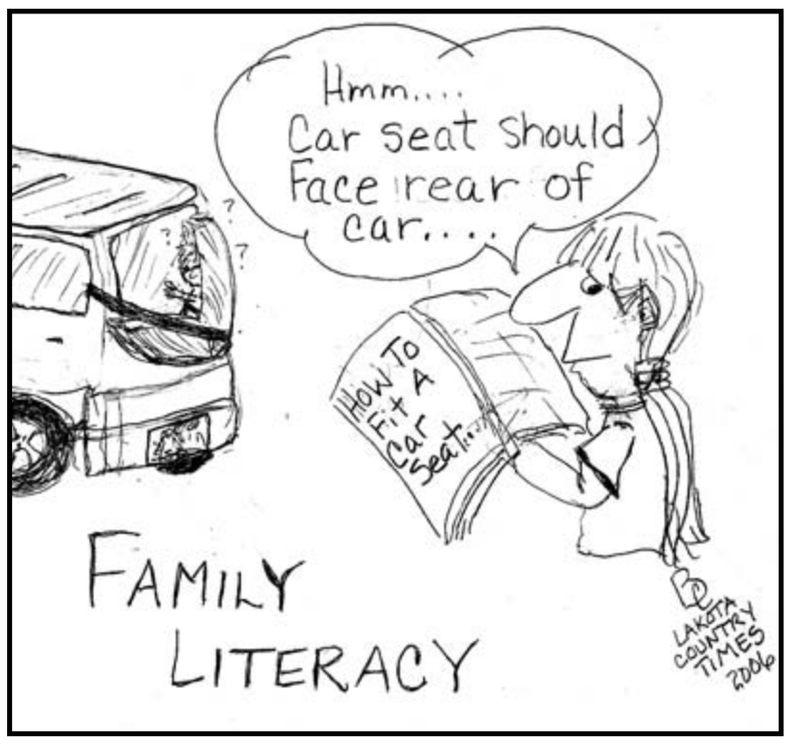
With the close of summer being marked by the Labor Day weekend soon, it brings to mind the energetic and sometimes futile effort, of public safety awareness programs everywhere to promote 'seat belt use.'

Recently, Adam Little Elk told the Rosebud's liquor commission that between Oelrichs and Rosebud he counted some 97 signs that marked the spot where someone had been killed in an automobile accident.

It is a terrible reminder that alcohol is, indeed, prevalent amongst the population and cans of beer are being consumed by the millions each year between Rosebud and Pine Ridge alone.

It is an alarming statistic that further points to the need for seat belt use among Lakota driver and passengers.

However, the awareness campaigns are not enough. Overwhelmingly, those who are involved in an accident and who are unbuckled are being ejected from their vehicles and suffer serious injury and even death. One statistic says that in Indian Country, one in five are likely to be killed in accidents which involves alcohol and an impaired driver.



The fight must go on against the senseless deaths of Lakota people.

Many of those who are dying are young because they tend to speed, and combined with alcohol is a deadly combination. The reality of alcohol abuse is that it is literally killing our people, right up there with diabetes, cancer, and other deadly diseases. Prevention and educating Lakota people needs to be an ongoing campaign with more frequent spot checks.

Unannounced spot checks are also needed so people do not simply put on their seat belts when approaching a safety road check.

More resources and awareness obviously has to go into the prevention of alcohol related deaths.

There needs to be incentives for people who wear seat belts or punishment for those who do not. The states all have seat belt laws and all reservations should follow suit as it is literally a matter of life and death.

Thoughts that come from the heart

Dealing with truancy

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

Truancy has been an age old problem for educational systems for many years. In the last ten years, Congress has tightened the regulations on the nation's education institutions calling for more accountability through mandates in the No Child Left Behind law.

Every school is affected in the nation in some way and it really affects our tribal schools, which already have problems, such as funding and a need for new facilities. The government is striving for a better education system in the nation, because we are a leading nation and in order to remain a leading nation, we need to produce successful leaders by providing successful education systems to all children across the board.

In the last ten years, mandates have been handed down to schools to improve student achievement in reading, science and language arts.. And in order to do this, one has to be there to learn and so attendance has become an issue. Aside from those mandates, schools must have policies regarding student attendance.

And many schools across the country, not only in public schools but in tribal schools face attendance problems and truancy problems. Last year, Tom Crash did several articles on the schools on the reservations and their attendance regarding their improvement status.

Schools review and try different proven methods to improve their deficiencies. It's been a hard road to follow to keep up to par, when there really isn't enough money to improve schools. Education seems to be slowing sliding down the importance totem pole. And of course that is because this is a nation at war and issues like that come with war.

Education is important to our youth and it is important to our tribal nations. We need to get our youth educated so they can take over those leaderships roles.

This week, 24 Bennett County families had their initial appearance in court for truancy because their children weren't in school the required amount of days according to policy. In speaking to Pam Hein, Bennett County's state prosecutor, the charge is a Class II misdemeanor and punishable of up to 30 days and or a $200 fine. She said that is the worst case scenario.

The families will have another court appearance with legal counsel. Basically, it sounds like the action is being taken to bring awareness to the problem, that parents and guardians need to send their children to school. She said a lot of people think there is other judicial problems such as alcoholism, domestic violence and other issues that should be in the forefront but we don't pay attention to the kids and this is an issue that needs awareness.

Then there is the other side of the story and that is of the parents and guardians. Some of them probably have some really good reasons to why their children weren't attending school as they should have and I am sure they can show that in court.

There are several reasons why education doesn't seem important in Indian country or why parents don't send their kids to school.

The top priority in that is the poverty status and when that key factor is rearing it's ugly head all over Indian country, then so many other social issues follow.

And when we have those issues, we are going to have problems with our family structures, with our health and with our economic status.

A good question is why isn't education important and put on high on the family totem pole?

In thinking about this, I thought of my mom and how she thought of education. She was educated in a Bureau of Indian School at Pine Ridge and had to live there for most of her school life. I asked her one time if she regretted it. She told me the experience took her from her mother and not having such a close bond may have hindered in her own parenting but that she also learned many things that taught her how to survive.

Education was important to her, I knew that first hand. I attended a public school and after I got in the higher grades I hated it. Mainly because of our poverty. I hated that fact that I was poor and didn't have good clothes and I was uncomfortable because most of my friends and cousins left high school, they either quit or went elsewhere.

So I would play hookey and after awhile it got to be a game I would play with my mom BUT she always managed to get the best of me and would make me go to school, even if she walked me to my desk. That was so embarressing, that it got to a point where I just went to school and learned to focus on the reason I was there and make the grade.

She would tell me over and over that I needed to get my education in my life to get ahead.

So my mom was my mainstay in my education endeavors. She was my mentor in that and so was her sister, my Aunty Pearl Cottier.

She encouraged me and guided to get what I could of a college education. And all of that did help me in my life.

It took my oldest sister to help me make that transistion into college. They were there for support and encouragement.

My tiwahe was my support system in getting an education.

If we want our children to complete school, if we want our families to be involved in being part of a good education system, don't you think we need to develop stronger family structures.

It takes a stronger family structure to overcome truancy, it takes a stronger family to overcome alcoholism, to overcome our health problems.

How do we get a stronger family core and where do our families go to get that resource?

At some point we absolutely have to come to some sort of positive strength. Basically, those that send their kids to school will make it.

Woster: Whalen camp draws fire for farce

By Kevin Woster
Rapid City Journal
Reprinted with permission

Hey, have you heard the one about Stephanie Herseth?

Rumor has it she's pregnant, engaged to her chief of staff and is now a pro-lifer opposed to abortion rights.

Baloney, you say? Well, sure. It's also a sign of how wacky things get when you mix politics into that cascading avalanche of information - some of it true, much of it not - that lands in your personal computer every day.

The Herseth story landed last week by way of Wikipedia, a free, online encyclopedia that offers a little information about a lot of subjects. It's also a place that polices itself for accuracy, since readers can edit the data - and apparently do.

Somebody did some creative editing in Herseth's biography page on Wikipedia. They inserted a wild bit of fiction, crediting the Democratic congresswoman with a sudden change of heart on abortion, a sudden engagement to her chief of staff (identified with a fictitious name) and a sudden pregnancy.

Pretty goofy, huh? That's probably all it would have been, too, except for that pesky "send" button on Lee Breard's computer.

Ever had a time when you regretted hitting that button? Yeah, me too. Breard, too, I'm guessing.

As campaign manager for U.S. House candidate Bruce Whalen, Herseth's Republican opponent, it's Breard's job to make his candidate look good and Herseth look - well, not so good. That's the way the game is played.

But Herseth fans say Breard violated even the nebulous rules of political engagement by e-mailing the Wikipedia farce to a number of political Web logs, or blogs, including the Journal's own Mount Blogmore. Reporter and Blogmore creator Bill Harlan received Breard's e-mail, which noted the Wikipedia piece, saying that Herseth was "engaged to her chief of staff, pregnant and pro-life."

Then, in closing, Breard added: "This is a big change from being a home-wrecker with a Texas congressman two years ago. I look forward to your thoughts and verification of the claims."

That "home-wrecker" reference was aimed at Herseth's relationship with former Texas Rep. Max Sandlin, which began after Sandlin was divorced.

Harlan posted Breard's e-mail on Mount Blogmore, and it attracted a peppery exchange of more than 50 messages, some of which accused Breard of playing dirty politics. Reached by telephone Saturday night, he rejected that charge.

Breard said he was doing some research on Herseth for a fundraising letter for Whalen when he ran across that odd entry on her biography page. Breard said he didn't know that readers could edit Wikipedia, although an option line above Herseth's photo on her profile page is marked with an "edit this page" notice.

"I personally don't know a lot about Wikipedia, so I sent it to the blogs to find out if it was legitimate or if it wasn't," he said.

Breard said his own "home-wrecker" comment was intended to emphasize the extreme nature of the Wikpedia claims.

"That was just a follow up to how outlandish the quotes of her being pregnant and changing to pro-life were," Breard said.

He maintains that it wasn't trying to assail Herseth's character.

"No, that was just showing how serious I took the statements on Wikipedia," he said. "I thought it was all ridiculous."

Herseth spokesman Russ Levsen doesn't buy it. Levsen said Sunday that it was clear that Breard was intentionally trying to circulate false rumors to damage Herseth's reputation.

"I think he sent it around knowing it was a lie and I think that's the worst kind of dirty politics," Levsen said. "This speaks volumes about Bruce Whalen's campaign if he's willing to spread lies about Stephanie Herseth's personal life."

Breard's "home-wrecker" comment at the end of the e-mail was an even more transparent and mean-spirited attack on Herseth, Levsen said.

"That goes even further, and I think it's beyond the pale," he said. "He sent around an e-mail to reporters passing along information that he found on the Website, and he took it a step further in adding a completely false assertion that attacks Stephanie Herseth's character.

"I think we can look for more of this kind of garbage in the future," Levsen said. "Maybe it's not just a coincidence that it comes right after the release of a poll that shows Whalen down by 34 points."

A scientific poll released by the Argus Leader and KELO-TV in Sioux Falls showed Herseth with 60 percent of registered voters, and Whalen got 26 percent with 14 percent undecided.

Breard said Whalen had nothing to do with the e-mail and believes the whole issue is being overblown.

"Mr. Whalen was not involved," Breard said. "I think people are making entirely too large a deal out of it. It was a ridiculous comment to have on Wikipedia in the first place. Somebody was playing a joke on Herseth, it seems now."

It seems so. But nobody's laughing.

Competition makes you better

Competition makes you better' is certainly an old saying that is true in every walk of life. It's as true on the playing field as it is on the landscape that is education, business and politics.

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

It seems like when we are engaged in some pursuit or perfecting the discipline we are working at, experience and dedication are ways in which we do what we do 'better.'

The business of trying to make a buck is mighty tough out there in the world and it's something that small businesses must understand and find somewhat exciting. I think if the education field understood that competitive nature of preparing a young mind for a lifetime, our schools would be much better off.

Our students do not work hard enough to absorb all they need to when it comes to doing daily homework and I would venture to say that is also true during the actual instruction time.

I used to tell my college students that they needed to develop a 'killer instinct' when it comes to learning and experiencing and it really is true.

Instead of hanging in the back, it takes someone with foresight and ambition to get out there in front and show others what competition is all about.

It was exciting to see all of the young Lakota graduating seniors qualify for a Gates Millennium scholarship this spring.

It was great news and many will go far and hopefully use their university training to make our communities better.

There is so much to be done and it is going to take young minds that are forever on the move to solve some of the political, schooling and economic development needs of our Lakota communities.

In the white world, young men or women in their twenties are easily installed in some of the leading corporate businesses and trusted to do a job and make a difference. That is not true in the Lakota world, as the elders are entrusted with the role of leading us.

Maybe, just maybe, we should take a chance on the young minds in our midst and ask them what they think.

Let's give them a chance to assist in transforming Lakota society into a viable and exciting creation that will not only maintain our culture and language, but also be competitive with the outside world.

That 'wasicu' world is awfully competitive and it will eat you up if you make excuses and lay blame on someone else.

Let's be competitive too, and demonstrate that we know how to respond to competition.

Life itself is about competing to care for one's family and the ability to gather the resources in order to protect our children and to provide for their comfort.

Caring for our family is a very basic function and it could possibly be the only reason we were put on mother earth.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Answer to Lakota riddle

Dear Editor:

The following is the answers to the Lakota riddle that was published two weeks ago.

1. Be vigilant, be on the watch.
2. The old ones need help. If you are helpful to them.
3. Tunkasila the Creator will give you a long life.

Why are we to help the elderly?

1. Because there is an elderly in your family.
2. Because you're gonna be old someday.
3. They may be gone tomorrow.

Notes From Indian Country

The 'domino effect' in Indian country

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Denying the authority of the National Labor Relations Board to impose its rules, regulations and laws upon the Indian nations, Joe Garcia, President of the National Congress of American Indians said, "A tribe is a government. Tribal policies must come from within the tribe's government, rather than being imposed from outside." Oh really?

When the Indian nations started to sign compacts in order to gain a license to build gaming casinos on their lands, they exposed their government to "outside" policies. By signing the compacts the tribes allowed an "outside" government to tell them how many slot machines they could have in their casinos, what games they could have, and finally risk losing their gaming licenses for infractions real or imagined to the state government.

The Hoopa Tribe of California is considering joining the Humbolt County Association of Governments prompting former supervisor Harry Prichard to say, "If they want to be members of HCAOG, the first requirement should be a waiver of their immunity as a sovereign nation."

Eureka Times Standard columnist Leo Sears wrote, "I agree with Harry, but I don't see it happening. Tribes have a history of wanting to have things both ways depending on what benefits them most in a given circumstance. On the national level the tribes have a friendly lawmaker, Rep. J. D. Hayworth, R-Ariz., who has introduced legislation specifically exempting them, as sovereign nations, from the National Labor Relations Board's jurisdiction. In 1987 Hoopa had a friendly lawmaker, Assembly member Dan Hauser, D-Arcata, who pushed through legislation conferring public agency status which would allow their membership in HCAOG with the approval of the member municipalities, the county and seven cities."

The county is now looking for ways to change the rules that would allow Hoopa to join their organization.

So what is going on here? Since when did sovereign tribal governments consider it imminent that they join county organizations? What is happening in California on several fronts is indeed frightening to tribal governments across America.

California is a powerful union state. The gaming tribes of California employ more non-Indians in their casinos than they do members of their own or members of other Indian nations. It should have been evident to them at the beginning that a state with a strong union representation would want to strengthen their union ties to the employees of the casinos. Sovereignty be damned in their minds.

When the California tribes invoked their sovereign status in the suit brought against them by the labor unions, the NLRB snickered and was victorious. Introducing legislation to the contrary is still an uphill battle. Getting that legislation passed is the next vital step. If it fails the sovereign status of the Indian nations will take another pounding. Labor unions will then have the authority to come on to the Indian reservations and impose their labor standards and wages upon the employees of the Indian-owned casinos. So much for sovereign immunity.

It seems to me, and to other Indians to whom I have spoken, that the erosion of tribal sovereignty was a precursor of Indian gaming. Every time a tribe had its sovereign status challenged in state court, whether it involved hunting and fishing or legal boundaries, a little bit of sovereignty went by the wayside. The tribes always had to give up something in order to gain something.

The creeping colonization of the Indian nations is not only ongoing, but appears to be winning the 500-year battle. One need only look at the Christian led council of the Oglala Sioux Tribe to realize that colonization is nearing victory.

In their haste to gain sudden wealth, tribes signed away much of their sovereignty beginning in 1988 with the introduction of the National Indian Gaming Regulatory Act. If the tribal leaders from those early days thought everything would come out all right in the end, they were wrong. The key word here is "Regulatory." Not only did the regulation of gaming start on the federal level, the clause that forced tribal governments to get state approval prior to getting a gaming license placed tribes under the direct control of state governments. This was a horrifying thought to most tribal leaders even 25 years ago.

If labor unions gain a foothold on tribal lands and if tribes continue to join organizations that place them under even tighter control of counties or cities, they will have completed the "hat trick" that will eventually totally diminish their imagined status as sovereign nations.

The colonization of the Indian nations that started with the incursion of the settlers and the formation of new governments outside of tribal governments followed by the religious and educational immersion intended to mold minds has, for the most part, been a resounding success.

The rich gaming tribes are now held captive to their own success and the less fortunate tribes are simply caught up in this tangled web over which they have little or no control. When longtime tribal members find themselves kicked from the tribal rolls in order to increase the per capita payments to those still on the rolls and when tribal leaders lose all sense of fair play and objectivity in order to line their own pockets, the erosion of the Indian nations then is not from the outside, but from the inside.

The colonization of the Indian nations will be complete when tribal governments topple themselves.

Peacemaking Project a success for high school students

ROSEBUD - The Rosebud Sioux Tribal Court has worked successfully to complete the Peacemaking Training Project which was conducted over the summer for area high school students.

With financial support from the First Nations Development Institute, Peacemaking Training was conducted for 9th - 12th grade students from St Francis, Todd County and White River high schools on the Rosebud Reservation. Ten students from each high school were selected by their school's Peacemaking Mentor. High school Peacemaking mentors from each school are: Charlene LaPointe from St Francis, Alicia Dickson-Boyd from Todd County and Peri Strain from White River. Each high school also was assisted by elders from their respective community. Marie Kills Plenty from St Francis, Pansy Schmidt from Todd County and Hazel Marshall and Freemont Fallis from White River contributed traditional wisdom and support for the youth. Sharon Swift, Director of the RST Care Givers Program also provided support with hopes of future collaboration between the elder program and high school students.

The purpose of the training was to offer education and awareness about Wahwala Wiconi (pronounced "wok-wala" "wee-choe-knee") translated to "living a peaceful life." A Peacemaking Wheel demonstrated how traditional Lakota values are meaningful and how these values provide a foundation to use today, even and especially, in difficult situations. Students also learned that conflict is present in everyone's lives and managing conflict is a personal responsibility. In addition, students learned how to better utilize communication skills to enhance peacemaking with self and others.

Training sessions took place at each of the high schools with the final session conducted at the Rosebud Casino. Certificates of participation were awarded by Rosebud Sioux Tribal President, Rodney Bordeaux and RST Chief Tribal Judge Sherman Marshall who commended the students, mentors, elders and project staff for their work and commitment to build more peaceful homes, schools and communities. Future goals of the Peacemaking Project are build support for a Peacemaking Project within each high school to decrease student conflict and promote traditional Lakota values within the high school.

For more information on the Peacemaking Project, please contact Nora Antoine of Sinte Gleska University, Peacemaking Project Coordinator/Trainer for the RST Court at nantoine@sinte.edu or (605) 856-8150.

Slim Buttes uranium summit Aug. 17

REVA - Nearly 40 years ago, a number of open pit uranium mines and prospects were dug in the scenic and historic area of Slim Buttes in the northwestern part of South Dakota.

They were abandoned when the push for uranium development diminished. However, the after effects of those efforts are still felt today in the form of radiation in the water and air.

On Aug. 17 and 18, Defenders of the Black Hills is hosting an informational meeting called a Uranium Summit in the Slim Buttes area. The two day meeting will be held at Reva Gap Campground located on SD Highway 20 just 4 miles west of the town of Reva.

The event is scheduled to run from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. (MT) on both days, and the agenda includes:

Geology of the Slim Buttes Area: Pat Pierson, Custer National Forest Minerals Staff

Abandoned Uranium Mines and Prospects at Slim Buttes and CERCLA:

Laurie Walters-Clark, CNF Sioux Ranger District Resource Staff

Study of Sediment Leaving Cave Hills Uranium Mines: Albert Schwalm, Professor, Oglala Lakota College

SD Department of Environment and Natural Resources - Water Studies:

Patrick Snyder, SD Department of Environment and Natural Resources

National Uranium Resource Evaluation Study: Harold One Feather, Defenders member

Historic and Cultural Overview of the Slim Buttes Area: Albert LeBeau, Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe - Tribal Historic Preservation Office

Pine Ridge and Rosebud receive COPS grants

WASHINGTON, D.C.- Pine Ridge and Rosebud have been awarded Community Oriented Policing Services grants. Oglala Sioux Tribal Department of Public Safety will receive $400,000 and the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Law Enforcement Services will receive $225,038.

"The public safety challenges Pine Ridge faces make it vitally important that there are a sufficient number of well-trained law enforcement personnel on the reservation" said Sen. John Thune. "This COPS funding will strengthen tribal law enforcement's efforts to prosecute criminals and ensure a safer environment for all of the families on the Pine Ridge reservation.

The COPS Office will make the grant awards under the 2006 Tribal Resources Grant Program. The purpose of these grants is to improve the law enforcement infrastructure of Tribal police agencies.

Twiss pleads guilty to involuntary manslaughter of Shelly Poor Bear

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) _ A Rushville, Neb., woman has pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter for using her vehicle to hit a woman.

Jessica Lou Twiss, 25, could get six years in federal prison and a $250,000 fine upon sentencing. No sentencing date has been set yet.

U.S. Attorney Marty Jackley said the charge relates to a Nov. 3 incident on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

Court papers indicate Twiss, while driving a vehicle, got into a fight with passenger Shelly Poor Bear, shoved her from the vehicle and drove away _ running over her in the process.

Twiss knew she had struck Poor Bear but left the scene without reporting it to authorities or getting medical help, court papers said.

Twiss entered her plea on Tuesday in U.S. District Court in Rapid City.

Bikathon raises money for KILI

Attracts 11 teams for the 24 mile jaunt from Pine Ridge to Porcupine

By Tom Crash
Times Corresponent

PORCUPINE - Hot Springs Wells Fargo, the Lays Bad team, David, Ella, Michael, Napoleon and Randy, rolled in first on Saturday, July 29 in the 24 mile KILI Radio Fundraiser Bikathon; they were quickly followed by the Big Crow Boys and Girls Club with Will Good Eagle, Jeff Pourier, Shawn and Michelle Keith and Rick Barry while three individuals, Nate Ritterbush, Tatewin Means and Mary Tobacco did the course solo.

"So many people jumped in to help out and make this first bikathon a success," said Mary Tobacco, Oglala Sioux Tribe health educator, "we were asking groups, organizations and businesses to help sponsor teams that would overall support KILI Radio in getting back on the air - we were able to raise close to $3,500 and involve a number of teams racing across the reservation to have fun, get in some exercise and to support our community radio station."

In order to beat the heat, teams rolled out of the Oglala Lakota Housing parking lot in Pine Ridge just after 8am. Other teams participating included: Prairie Wind-Alex Wilson, Darby Steele, Doni DeCory, Karla Cuny and Dale Pine; Wiconi Teca Waste-Angela Sam, Andrew Condon, Katie Returns from Scout and Farrah Big Crow; Arobba/Higher Ground-Aimee Pond, Dusti Michaud, Maurei Kingi, Wayha Janis and Marlin Kingi; Pathstar-Arlene, Maya, Arlo, Lyle and Phillip Iron Cloud; Arroba 1-Mary, Country and Arlene Weasel Bear, Jake Two Bulls and Ken Franks; Third Dimensions and Mike Fredenberg-Tatewin Means and All Season's Screen Printing-Nate Ritterbush.

Hot Springs Wells Fargo with David, Randy, Napoleon, Ella and Michael Lays Bad were the first team to arrive in Porcupine.

SuAnne Big Crow Boys and Girls Club rolled in second with the team wearing bike helmets and including Will Good Eagle, Michelle Keith, Jeff Pourier, Shawn Keith and Rick Barry.

Tom and Nate Ritterbush of All Seasons Screen Printing.

Sponsors included Pathstar/$200, Wacante Kiyape/$400, Higher Ground/-$50. Two Wheeler Dealer/-$200, Jamie Arroba/$300, Lil Angels/$200, 3rd Dimensions/$100, Mike Fredenberg/$25, Brunsch Propane/$100, Fireside Inn/$20, SuAnne Boys and Girls Club/$300 and University of Colorado/$200.

Tom Ritterbush of All Seasons Screen Printing in Hot Springs hustled up support from that community including Prairie Wind Casino/$300, Hot Springs Best Western/$200, BW Insurance/$200, Bank of the West/$150, Wells Fargo/$150, Maverick Junction/$100, Southern Hills Chiropractic/$50, Winners Circle/$50, Golden West/$100 and Hot Springs Chamber of Commerce/$100.

"You know a lot of people both in and out of the community believe in KILI and they showed it by helping to support this event," said Tobacco, "Alicia Mousseau pushed us and kept us going when we thought about postponing the event until next year."

Mary added that All Seasons and Subway donated the t-shirts, Sioux Nation chipped in 200 pieces of chicken, Whiteclay Grocery and Pine Ridge Oil donated water, Oyate Blehilya shared their bikes for the event, OLC Diabetes Prevention helped with manpower, planning, set up, first aid and bike repair while OST Health Education contributed manpower, refreshments, planning, set up and first aid kits.

Lyle Mousseau helped with set up, transportation and bike repairs; Lynette Yellow Horse aided with set up and food preparation, Jen Franks, Indian Health Service injury prevention gave up her Saturday and provided bike helmets; water stations were provided by KILI Radio, Health Education, Jen Franks/I.H.S. and Tom Ritterbush of All Seasons while Lena Charging Crow provided gift packs for all participants.

Energy chipped in $1,000 for coordinating marathon, gas and bike rentals, Porcupine Clinic donated their facility and Elaine Yellow Horse hustled all week in an awesome manner to get things ready, said Tobacco.

"For two years in a row, we did a relay marathon race and last year we didn't get an event done" said Tobacco, "so this year we really wanted to help KILI again and decided on a bikathon, it went well and next year it will go even better - in our own way we are helping get KILI Radio get back on the air, stronger than ever."

PINE RIDGE - The extreme heat that has been occurring lately didn't heat up the annual Oglala Nation Fair festivities too much. The three day event produced many events to participate in from a walk and run to a sobriety horse ride to sports events.

There were many campers and the dry dust didn't hinder activities from happening. The list of winners from the dance contest shows a majority of more local winners.

More than $50,000 was given out in prize money for the dancers and drum money. Melanie Two Eagle, royalty coordinator submitted the dancer winners.

Activities included contests in handgames, horseshoe and volleyball tournaments, traditional horse games, hand games, softball game and specials.

Prize money for the golden age categories was $1,000 for first prize, $800 for second, $700 for third, $600 for fourth and $500 for fifth.

Prize money for the adult categories was $1,000 for first prize, $800 for second, $700 for third, $600 for fourth and $500 for fifth.

Prize money for the teen categories was $350 for first prize, $325 for second, $300 for third, $275 for fourth and $250 for fifth.

Prize money for the junior categories was for $200 for first prize, $175 for second, $150 for third, $125 for fourth and $100 for fifth.

Horizon Health Care to build bigger clinic building in Mission

MISSION - USDA Rural Development Acting State Director Tim B. Potts was in town last week to present federal funding in the amount of $1.2 million to Horizon Health Care, Inc. for the construction of a new health care facility. "I'm pleased USDA Rural Development was able to assist with the construction of a much needed health care facility. This new facility will provide quality and affordable health care to the residents of Todd County and a healthy, comfortable work environment for the staff," Potts said.

The Mission Medical Clinic, an office of Horizon Health Care, Inc. is a federally qualified health center providing medical services to residents in and around the Mission community. All services are available on a sliding fee to ensure that everyone has access to quality healthcare regardless of their ability to pay.

The current facility is not handicapped accessible and office space for patient confidentiality is extremely limited. The work environment is unhealthy as the roof leaks and mold problems are common issues.

Local health care access is critical for the most vulnerable populations, including the elderly and the poor who are the least able to travel to the next nearest medical center located in Rapid City which is more than a 180 miles away.

Funding for the project includes a USDA Rural Development Community Facility direct loan of $614,500, a Community Facility guaranteed loan of $614,500 with Wells Fargo Bank of Mission and a Community Development Block Grant of $410,000 through the State of South Dakota. Previous funding received from USDA Rural Development for this project included a Community Facility economic impact initiative grant in the amount of $60,000.

"This is an exciting opportunity for us and the community of Mission, with the financial assistance from USDA Rural Development and a community development block grant from the State of South Dakota we will continue to provide quality primary health care to a medically underserved or medically indigent population in a facility that will offer appropriate patient confidentiality, handicapped accessibility and a work environment appropriate for a health care facility, " said John Mengenhausen, chief executive officer of Horizon Health Care, Inc.

USDA Rural Development Acting Area Director David Adrian also attended the event. USDA Rural Development has ten offices in the state that assist rural communities. Office locations include a state office in Huron, along with area offices in Aberdeen, Huron, Mitchell, Pierre, Rapid City, Sioux Falls, Sturgis, Watertown, and Yankton.

USDA Rural Development's mission is to deliver programs in a way that will support increasing economic opportunity and improve the quality of life of rural residents.

As a venture capital entity, Rural Development provides equity and technical assistance to finance and foster growth in homeownership, business development, and critical community and technology infrastructure. Further information on rural programs is available at a local USDA Rural Development office or by visiting USDA's web site at http://www/rurdev.-usda.gov.

Father Richard Jones departing Rosebud

46 years spent ministering to the Sicangu

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - Father Richard Jones, S.J. has been a mainstay on the Rosebud Sioux reservation for close to five decades and is retiring to Wisconsin. St. Francis Mission is announcing the fact that a farewell dinner will be held after the 11:15 a.m. Catholic mass with a dinner to be held in the orchard just north of the church on Sunday, August 13. Bishop Cupich of the Rapid City Diocese will be in attendance.

Father Richard Jones S.J.

Many Sicangu parents and grandparents remember the influence of Father Jones in their lives while attending St. Francis Mission. In fact, many Sicangu children and grandchildren have been baptized by Jones. Now in his late eighties, the one time superior of St. Francis Mission noted in an interview with KINI station manager, Richard Iyotte, that he has glaucoma and he is losing his eyesight and feels that it is time to finally leave for the Jesuit retirement community in Wisconsin.

Father Jones, a much respected and highly regarded Jesuit priest, has spent most of his ministerial career among the Sicangu people and spoke of a time in the 1960's when the government declared the "war on poverty." He said he worked closely with the community and after two years they were able to secure funding for housing. He has been an ordained Jesuit minister for much longer than that.

In the early 1990's Father Jones received the Lumen Christi or Light of Christ award for being the outstanding missionary in the United States and said that the award belonged to all Sicangu people. He said he appreciated the beauty of Lakota people and that there is much more work to be done for the people.

Tribal officials meet with Interior Secretary

By Carson Walker
Associated Press Writer

RAPID CITY - The Oglala Sioux Tribe president got what he wanted Sunday: a meeting with the new U.S. Interior Secretary about various American Indian reservation problems.

Secretary Dirk Kempthorne had the meeting set up on short notice one day before his scheduled appearance at the nearby Sturgis rally.

He met for more than an hour with tribal leaders from five of South Dakota's nine reservations, took notes and promised to do what he could during his two years in office.

Kempthorne, a former U.S. senator and governor of Idaho, was approved for the post by the Senate in May.

White Plume said he had 2,000 issues to take up but only addressed four - the biggest of which is poverty.

"I don't mean any disrespect," White Plume told Kempthorne, seated across the table. "Your whole Bureau of Indian Affairs is a worthless organization that just siphons money from the tribes."

He said the BIA spends too much money administering government programs for Indians and gives tribes little flexibility in how the money is spent.

'Your whole Bureau of Indian Affairs is a worthless organization that just siphons money from the tribes.'

-White Plume

Kempthorne said he wasn't offended by White Plume's comments. "I hope you feel the respect I'm showing you by sitting here and listening to you," he said. "These are serious issues. I don't think you expect a quick solution because these took time to develop."

White Plume, who helped organized a protest of the encroachment of biker bars near Bear Butte, also asked the secretary to do something at the federal level to protect the site Indians consider sacred.

Kempthorne listened intently to White Plume and the other leaders and said that some of the issues were too large to address during his tenure but that he would do what he could. He said he plans to travel around the country over the next month and take input on other issues.

Other problems discussed included a shortage of law enforcement officers, education funding and the proliferation of methamphetamine.

Avis Little Eagle, vice chairwoman of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe, said that because the reservation has only 10 officers, no law enforcement responded to a recent gang fight until the next day.

One other problem is the drought, the leaders said.

"All the counties around us were able to get disaster assistance," Rodney Bordeaux of the Rosebud Indian Reservation said.

Kempthorne said his father grew up in Aberdeen and that he has been to South Dakota before, but this was his first trip as Interior Secretary. "This has been very helpful," he said.

Pat Ragsdale, director of Bureau of Indian Affairs, which is under the Interior Department, also attended the meeting.

Kentucky group dedicated to helping Rosebud with gifts

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Donna Quiggins and Dave Gentry from Kentucky have been coming to the Rosebud for over a decade and their outreach work in providing clothing and household goods to reservation residents is not going unnoticed.

Their work is significant when one considers the cost of gasoline these days and the personal commitment that it takes to collect donations and ensure that they actually get delivered. Quiggins and Gentry as representing other caring people in Kentucky certainly deserve what the younger generation might call a "shout out."

The two people have their own families, but often travel together for the road trip out west. It is way for them to occasionally see the culmination of their year long work, which involves coordinating a donation drive through communication with other private individuals as well as local businesses in their hometown.

Gentry said, "Rosebud is second home for us, as soon as we cross the reservation line. We can't do what we do without help.

One individual successfully organized a ' Run for the Rosebud' to help raise funds." Quiggins added that, "We pay for the cost of the fuel. Last year it was $2,800 dollars and this year it is $3,000 dollars."

Donna explained the evolution of the volunteer efforts of a loose knit group in Kentucky called, "Native American Support Effort." The core group is made up of Quiggins, Gentry, Donna Bowling, Frank and Penny Cook, Mike Clayton and Dottie Povey.

Quiggins is a writer and stumbled upon her passion of giving to the Rosebud quite by accident. She had made an initial connection with a group who was supposed to make a donation delivery to Rosebud and it never came off. Her husband worked at General Electric. When the employees discovered her interest in Rosebud, they started delivering new blankets and other goods to her house.

She became exasperated as the goods piled up and her husband asked what she was going to do with them. Sometime later, she was out on the road headed for Rosebud using her credit card and a cargo van. Quiggins, two foster daughters and a grand daughter made it as far as St. Joseph's, Mo. They ran into a huge storm and when they could not make contact with Cliff Marshall in Rosebud, their anxiety and frustration grew at the uncertainty of what to expect if they continued on. When they did arrive at Rosebud, they made an initial drop at the Marshall's and delivered other goods at Wanblee during a powwow.

Quiggins said, "All the way, I told myself I was doing it for selfish reasons. I decided that it was meant to be and could be of some help. I went back to my group and told them of the connection and they said they would help."

Another important individual in the equation is Donna Bowling, who owns and operates a bakery in Louisville. She has connections to business people who are also interested in helping and often rallies some of the much needed financing for the semi-truck and the associated fuel costs.

Bowling has also been to Rosebud on a number of occasions. Last summer, she arrived with a group of students representing Habitat for Humanity working on Harold Charging Hawk's house for a week.

The donated items from Kentucky kept increasing in volume over time which necessitated the use of semi-trucks. At first a van or two would suffice, but in the late 1990's two semis were needed to transport the goods.

Our Lady of Lourdes in Kentucky has also taken up the cause and acts as a collection point. Gentry says that there have been thousands of people who have worked behind the scenes to make the deliveries a reality.

Gentry said Marian Sorace who resides on Soldier Creek road in Rosebud has been working tirelessly each July to receive the donated items on her property. The availability of the donated items are announced on KINI FM radio who then announces to the communities the availbability of the donated items so that the people will come and pick up the clearly marked boxes.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am so confused and am in a strained relationship. I am married to a person who doesn't seem to hear me at times and when we fight, he walks away as in goes out and gets drunk and stays away until he is hung over, broke and nothing better to do but call me when he's done.

I guess that the story of a lot of people's lives but lately or I should say since about like in March of this year, I grew a brain or something. I mean I ain't all that innocent either but I started going out on my own without him anyway I met up with an ex, someone from long ago.

We have been seeing each other off and on but it has come to that point where he wants more out of this relationship, and I am not sure if I do, I mean when I am with him I don't want to look back but when I peel myself away I snap back into reality. I am married, I can't be doing this.

Is there a future for me and him? I think he's to so-so, I don't know were kinda alike to many friends.

I don't know please tell me what you see for us. Another question I am having a really tough time without that extra income, I had at one time, do you see anything good for me? Am I gonna win anytime soon? Do you have any lucky numbers for me?

Very confused

Dear Confused,

Yep, that about sums it up, you are definitely confused. I see nothing but more confusion, anger and dysfunction until you make a decision to extract yourself for the hell you are creating and living in.

First, separate from your husband, he is not finding sobriety and without that neither of you have any chance for peace.

Secondly, stop with the man from your past - he is as big of a mess as you are.

Thirdly, seek counseling for yourself along with sobriety, co-dependency counseling and a recovery program for living in a good way.

I am not trying to make you feel bad, I am trying to guide you to the good life that you deserve.

The man from your past would be the same as staying in your current relationship. He has the same problems, the same type of thinking and is really the same as your husband with just a different face.

You have to get healthy in your life so you can create a healthy life with another healthy person.

Yes, you can win sometimes at the casino - but it can also be just a journey to relieve temporary stress with the added stress of losing what you win and what you brought with you. When gambling comes from desperation it becomes an addiction, not recreation. Your luck number is one.

Anything that adds up to the number one is lucky for you. Good luck, please find the best of yourself within yourself, be strong and create a better life by healing yourself and then opening for the good man that is currently on the same journey you are and waits for you.

Dear Anna,

Every week your articles are interesting when I come across them. I was wondering if you could help me out with a few answers to my questions?

Well, I can't seem to wait until then but I am curious and wanting to know what I will decide after December when I finish my schooling. I have one big opportunity and that is to join the military. I am a senior this year and I have been taking care and looking after my grandma and nephew and I am wanting to know if they will accept that I am willing to leave but I am not too sure if it will be for long? And will any one be there to watch over them while I am away?

And I am excited to know if I will ever find anyone? If so will he be the one?

Curious One

Dear Curious One,

Your grandma and your nephew will miss you but will accept your going into the military. They will be worried and scared for you. They will be fine while you are gone.

You will meet a man in the military, it looks like you will become pregnant and leave the military and be with the man that fathers your child.

The man and you will return to South Dakota after he completes his term in the service. He will go to school and things will work out.

You may decide to go to school then in the medical field.

Your grandmother will be happy you are home.

Dear Anna,

I am just writing to see if you can help me clear up some issues about myself and my family. I am a single mother of three children, and just recently had my third baby.

I was just wondering if you knew how I'll be doing in the future, I am always wondering what's going to happen to me. I do good in school and in life.

I have a great family, but I am worried how my children's dad is going to treat me in the future. He isn't a very nice person, very abusive and just not a good father. I always ask him to tell me what it was that I did to be treated the way I was and continue to be. He has moved on with his life, found a new love.

Am I going to move on? Will I ever meet somebody who is going to love me and my children.

Right now I'm not looking for love and I have enough with my children, but I just want to know if this is it...am I really going to move on with my life?

How do you see my future?? I'm just curious to see if its good, or am I going to continue to struggle?? Will my children be okay? I also don't know what to do about my ex, should he be able to see his children? I don't think so but that's just me.

Will he ever help support them?

Tired of being hurt

Dear Tired of being hurt,

It is not you, except that you keep chosing men that are not very nice nor very respectful of women. If it will help you to feel better I can tell you that your ex will not treat this other woman well either.

He is just plain abusive and rude. I don't think you have to worry too much about your ex wanting to visit with his children as he won't show up very often. I feel a relationship with his family may be more important than with this man, so if he arranges for visitation let it be at some other family member's home.

There will be a time in your future when you will be open to love again and to have a good relationship with a well-balanced man. Your children, because of your sacrifices and because you did not continue to expose them to the chaos and meaness and confusion and drinking of your ex will be fine.

They will do well in school and will have good dreams. Will your ex ever support your children - not unless you join the courts and make him, and then, not even then.

He would just spend a lot of time in the courts and jail. My advice, let it all go...he is just a bad choice, but he doesn't have to be a life sentence. Because you are willing to work hard, get some continuing education and take care of yourself and your kids your life will be blessed with many good things.

Take time out of your dream world and paint a real picture of who your ex is, that if the first step in releasing him. He is not a prince charming, he is a really an ugly toad (no offense to toads meant). Be happy in your strength, help your children grow, and know that your life will be much easier within two years.

Dear Anna,

I don't if you remember me but I emailed you about two months ago. I thank you for everything you have told me because it is really happening. I recently sang at a wake, also I just returned from one of the top basketball camps in the nation.

While I was at the camp, I met someone who treated me like a young lady, he happened to be my coach, who is nine years older than me. He is very successful. We are both alike in many ways, we can't live without basketball and we are of the same nationality. My grandma approves of him and so do I, because I am almost 18 years old. I would like to please know if you see anything good happening to us, will I ever see him again, will we ever meet again?

I need to know if I will ever be recognized as a good basketball player. Will I get to play basketball this year?

I have been hurt by five or six guys already so I need your help please.

Am I pretty? I 'have worked so hard to play basketball, make myself look nice and practice my basketball, singing and fashion for myself.

Me and my grandma have been waiting for something like this to happen for a long time. Will he and I be in contact? I have suffered from depression for three years, but I beat it, and lost weight, and became outgoing and outspoken. So can you please help me. Thank you for your time. I will pray for you.

Basketball Dreams

Dear Basketball Dreams,

Yes, you will play basketball - even in college. No, he will not be in contact with you. It breaks my heart that you have been hurt by him and I am upset with this man's lack of integrity and so will the schools, parents and good coaches be when they read this.

The man that you were with has many of the qualities that you will find in the man that really loves you, but he lacks one serious quality: integrity.

Please don't take this to a level of depression; life offers a series of relationship challenges that lead you to wisdom and to best be able to make the best choice for yourself. You are beautiful, talented, gifted and wonderful. You deserve the same in a relationship, but you are very young.

Love usually happens sometime in the early twenties, and that love has to be a very strong love in order to sustain through a lifetime committment.

I kind of like to say that God invented dating and boyfriends/girlfriends so we can narrow the field by experience to the right ONE. And 80 percent of all relationships do not work out because they are not meant to, they are just humans learning from each other.

If everyone married everyone they ever dated then we'd all be married a whole bunch of times. Therefore, everyone gets hurt in life, as a result of "bad" relationships a whole bunch of times. That is no excuse to whine or feel bad, or to become bitter or discouraged.

Always be thankful to the ones that don't work out for the lessons and the blessings you have now because you are not together torturing each other.

The right one only comes along once or twice in a lifetime - that means sometimes the wait is long, but ultimately worth it.

Thank you for your prayers, I feel them, and I will also pray for you.

Shannon County School Board Box 109 Batesland, S.D. 57716

Notice to Bidders Gasoline Diesel

Notice is hereby given that sealed bids will be received by the Shannon County School Board in the administrative office building, Batesland, South Dakota, until 2:00 p.m., August 25, 2006, for gasoline and #1 & #2 grade diesel fuel to be supplied and delivered for a one-year period, to public schools which are located at Batesland, Rockyford, Red Shirt, and Wolf Creek Schools, as designated by the school board.

The bids will be made public at the regular board meeting on Monday, August 28, 2006 at Red Shirt School, at 5:00 p.m.

The successful bidder shall have the responsibility of:

1) Supplying necessary gasoline and/or diesel fuel for school buses and school vehicles operated by the Shannon County School District. Delivery of unleaded gasoline and diesel fuel to Wolf Creek, Rockyford, Batesland and Red Shirt Schools storage facilities. The supply period is to be from Sept. 1, 2006 through Aug. 31, 2006.

The bids should be based on pricing for the date of August 25, 2006 and should specify pricing details (i.e.) tank wagon price, discount and taxes which may apply. Bids should be detailed so that the cost to the district from all bidders can be readily compared. Bidder should include documentation of current cost to them from their supplier at the time the bid is submitted. Bidder should also include whether their bid price is firm throughout the year, or a statement that any increase or decrease in the price of gasoline or diesel fuel to the school district after the bid letting on August 28, 2006 will be substantiated by a letter from the bidder's supplier stating that the price has increased by the amount that the bidder is passing on to the school district.

Bids must be sealed and marked "gasoline bid" in the lower left-hand corner of the envelope and be addressed to the Shannon County School Board, Attn: Myron Pourier, P.O. box 109, Batesland, South Dakota, 57716.

The board reserves the right to reject any or all bids or waive any irregularities therein.

Oglala Sioux (Lakota) Housing Request for Proposals Attorney Services

Oglala Sioux (Lakota) Housing ("OSLH") is requesting a proposal for Attorney Services. Attorney will act as General Counsel for OSLH and will assist OSLH in meeting compliance requirements including but not limited to policy, ordinance, and occupancy agreement development, staff and Board training, development and review of contract documents, and other services as deemed necessary.

OSLH is the Tribally Designated Housing Entity for the Oglala Sioux Tribe of the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, located in South Dakota. OSLH manages approximately 392 Mutual Help and Occupancy Units and 1150 Low-Rent Units constructed under the Housing Act of 1937 ("37 Act") and 45 Lease Purchase Units constructed under the Indian Housing Block Grant program developed pursuant to the Native American Housing Assistance and Self-Determination Act ("NAHASDA"). OSLH operates under a budget in excess of nine million dollars per year.

The work to be performed under the proposal is on a project subject to section 7(b) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450e(b) and section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968. Section 7(b) required that to the greatest extent feasible (1) preference and opportunities for training and employment shall be given to Indian organization and Indian-owned Economic enterprises. All entities submitting proposals and claiming Indian Preference must include documentation satisfactory to show that they are Indian owned. Section 3 requires that to the greatest extent feasible opportunities for training and employment be given to lower income residents of the project area and contracts for work in connection with the project be awarded to business concerns that are located in, or owned in substantial part by persons residing in the areas of the project. All subcontracts executed between the proposer and its subcontractors, if any, also are subject to those provisions and language requiring such compliance will be included in all subcontracts.

In addition to the SS7(b) and 3 compliance requirements, the successful proposer must comply and ensure subcontractor compliance with the Copeland Act Requirements(29 C.F.R.Part 3); 24 C.F.R. part 85 Certifications, including but not limited to mandatory standards and policies relating to energy efficiency contained in the state energy conversation plan issued in compliance with the energy Policy and Conservation Act (Pub.L. 94-163), and HUD requirements related to reporting patent rights, and/or copyrights and other rights to data; HUD procurement regulations; OSLH Procurement Policy; and all other applicable laws, rules and regulations.

the selection of a qualified attorney will be based on the following evaluation criteria with established point rating for each category:

1. 20 points: Past successful performance and experience providing services to Indian Housing Authorities under the 37 Act and to TDHEs after the adoption of NAHASDA.

2. 20 points: Capacity and experience in providing policy and ordinance development. Interested firms must submit a sample procurement and personnel policy.

3.20 points: Experience in providing staff and Board training in NAHASDA-related issues.

4.10 points: Experience and professional qualifications of key personnel including specialized skills, project coordination, management skills, and experience in working together as a team.

5.10 points: Specialized experience and technical competence (including fiscal capacity) of the firm. The firm and/or its attorneys should have had a minimum of fifteen (15) years experience with projects of this type. Volume and nature of present workload and availability of additional personnel and consultants to accelerate services required, if necessary.

6. 5 points: Indian Preference. Pursuant to S 7(b) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, 25 U.S.C. '450e(b), points shall be given for Indian ownership and participation, and/or evidence that a proposing firm is committed to the hiring of and does hire persons enrolled in federally recognized tribes, descendants of members of federally recognized tribes, or persons who are actively involved in the Indian community.

7. 5 points: Minority Preference. Pursuant to Section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, as amended, 12 U.S.C. ' 170lu, points shall be given to minority-owned firms, including women-owned firms, and firms that show evidence of commitment to hiring minorities and women.

8. 5 points: Cost, based on hourly rates.

9. 5 points: Because of fluctuating needs in Indian housing and demands for changes in NAHASDA, the firm must exhibit capacity to represent OSLH's interests in Washington D.C.

Inquiries related to submittal of proposals may be addressed to Ken Lone Elk, OSLH Executive Director at (605)867-5161. Proposers shall submit an original and four (4) copies of the proposal in a sealed envelope clearly marked Proposal for Attorney Services.

All proposals shall be submitted to Oglala Sioux (Lakota) Housing, Attn: Ken Lone Elk, P.O. Box 603, East Hwy 18, Pine Ridge, South Dakota 57770, and received no later than 4:30 p.m. on August 17, 2006. Proposals not received by that time and date shall be rejected. OSLH reserves the right to reject any and all proposals and to waive any and all deficiencies.

A prayer for no reason, but simply to bless because I love you! Love, Mom Justina

In Loving Memory
Brother Donald "Duck" Garnette, left this earth July 20, 2005, you are greatly missed. Also your art work, a artist, silversmith and carvings, a vietnam veteran. Heard your Vietnam stories over and over, knowing only listening helped. The time spent with you, is greatly missed. We talked openly of things we'd never discussed before, bittersweet family memories, our dreams, hopes & fears. You were always there for family & friends when help was needed. It seems as though the world has a way, and it's difficult to see beyond today. In midst of my confusion there came a voice, whispering softly at the entrance to the heart, "Sis" your heros have all gone, but I'm still here, remember me in spirit and I'll be there.

KILI Radio receives $262,444

To be back on air at full power in October

PORCUPINE - On Tuesday, KILI Radio received formal notice from Congresswoman Stephanie Herseth's office that the Corporation for Public Broadcasting had awarded the station $123,791 for digital conversion to enhance program service.

On the same day, Sen. Tim Johnson's office announced that KILI had been awarded an emergency grant of $138,653 from the Public Telecommunication Facilities Program of the Department of Commerce to assist with the purchase of a new antenna, transmission line, transmitter and grounding system.

"It has been a long wait," said Melanie Janis, station manager, "we originally heard around June 10th that we would get the PTFP grant but we have not been able to do anything to move ahead until the official award came down."

The Pine Ridge Reservation based community radio station located at Porcupine Butte, halfway between Wounded Knee and Porcupine, was hit by lightning on April 15th of this year and due to the storm damage went off the air on April 23rd. Using a 15 watt exciter and a temporary one bay antenna, the station went back on the air on a low power basis in early June and by the end of the month added a 300 watt amplifier.

"For the last several weeks we've been broadcasting with about 250 watts of power compared to a normal full power of 100,000 watts," said Janis, "at times we had a range of maybe five or 10 miles and at other times we have been out about 40-50 miles depending upon the terrain and weather."

With the formal announcement of the award and the completion of the award documents over the next week, KILI will be able to solicit bids for a new antenna, transmitter and transmission line. The bid process could take two to three weeks and once an order is made, it could take anywhere from four to six weeks to build both the antenna and the transmitter.

"That's been one of the hardest things to deal with, everyone is always asking us when we will be fully back on the air," said Janis, "and without this official award, we were only able to guess about the time frame; we first said in September and most recently told

RST votes down land purchase in hills

Scott said offered money to vote for motion

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - In a regularly scheduled RST council meeting last week, the availability of land in Spearfish for purchase was discussed on the council floor. The issue was somewhat controversial as the two people offering the land to RST were acting as go-betweens for a group of sellers who apparently did not legally own the land yet at the time of the original offer, but were trying to sell it for a substantial profit.

Furthermore, it came out publicly over KINI FM radio that one RST council representative had been offered money for campaign financing or for the Rosebud Fair if he supported the motion to purchase the land.

Rosebud council representative, Fern Bordeaux-Boltz, spoke in favor of the land purchase. She said, "TLE was in total support of buying the land in Spearfish, but backed off because of the opinion by the attorney. We could build an alcohol treatment or youth center and we could help other tribes. There is a good view to Bear Butte. We would like to make a proposal to an eastern tribe..., if you could authorize TLE to put up 10 percent earnest money it holds it and gives it time."

Rosebud council representative Stephanie Sully said, "It is a good opportunity.., it is very developed. It will double or triple. It is sad we can't have the hills back, but we can buy our land back."

Antelope council representative Robert Moore voiced his disapproval. He said, "We can't even pay for clothing orders. We are going to have to see what works in the next 100 years.., there are shareholders who are in opposition to this." Antelope council representative, Jo Colombe, said that she was opposed to the motion as Antelope community was not willing to go into debt.

She said she would have to take the issue back to her community for discussion.

Okreek council representative Steve Denoyer was also in favor of examining the proposal to purchase the land. He said, "Vote it up or down. We don't have to talk about it all day long."

The motion to purchase the land was defeated by a vote of 5 in favor, and 12 opposed.

According to documents in the possession of Antelope council representative, Cyril "Whitey" Scott, the land in question amounting to 773 acres originally was purchased for $1,637,000 in April by Mitch and Susan O'Connell, Monty and Cindy Snook, and Kaye Price.

The group had apparently contacted RST's Tribal Land Enterprises in March or April and offered to sell the land for $4 million dollars at $5,500 per acre.

The documents revealed that they had bought the land on April 25 for $2,200 per acre and filed for a warranty deed on April 26 in Butte

Pine Ridge, Rosebud closer to getting medivac planes

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - John Warnock, CEO of PassNet of Plymouth, MN provided an update to the Rosebud Sioux tribal council in getting air ambulance service on the Rosebud. PassNet announced in the spring that it would like to place fixed wing aircraft on several reservations, including Rosebud.

The Pine Ridge reservation will apparently get the first plane and Rosebud will get the second. Warnock is also working closely with Kathy Janis, OST council representative of Wounded Knee district. She said, "Originally, it was suppose to happen during the third week of August. We will have a ribbon cutting ceremony with a ground blessing first and then discuss the arrival of the plane.., John has the Lakota people at heart."

The company envisions cutting down trauma time by basing aircraft on the Rosebud instead of having to wait for air ambulance service from Rapid City or Sioux Falls. Warnock originally said that fixed-wing airplanes are much cheaper to fly as compared to helicopters.

The concept is an advancement in health care according to Warnock. The first plane will be coming to Rosebud in September and it will contain advanced life support equipment that will need to be certified by authorities in Pierre. Warnock said, "Two weeks ago, we presented to the Indian Health Service in Bismarck. I.H.S. was behind the process. The regulations didn't allow us to step in and begin."

Apparently, the I.H.S. has to adhere to guidelines and as a bureaucracy could not violate their own regulations and begin the process without a contract of some kind. Warnock noted that there had been 566 medical evacuations from Rosebud and Pine Ridge at a cost of approximately $50 thousand each. He said if you add in the other reservations in South Dakota the number of trauma cases would be around 1,000 at a cost of $50 million.

Instead of waiting on the Indian Health Service, PassNet would like to sign an agreement with Medicare and then be able to handle patients. He said that he had meetings scheduled with Avera, Sioux Valley hospital, Rapid City regional hospital, Northwest Regional medical center in Scottsbluff, NE and Bismarck. He said, "We have several options, so I.H.S. won't be an impediment. They all want this at I.H.S. If we persuade those hospitals they will sign our agreement." He noted that all hospitals involved have I.H.S. contracts. He said, "These hospital bill out to a certain protocol. There is no charge. It requires the receiving hospital no change. We prefer hospitals because they have resources."

Apparently, the tribe would be involved in signing up patients for Medicare and then PassNet would bill Medicare for the preparation and transport. He said, "Trauma is a major issue. The resumes are second to none out here in those who deal with trauma."

people in October, I think by the time we get everything ordered, built, shipped and installed that it will be late October."

For the PTFP grant, KILI was required to put up a 25 per cent match, about $46,500 and for the CPB grant, a 15 per cent match was required. Local individuals, groups, organizations, the Empowerment Zone and Oglala Nation Education Coalition, All Tribes Foundation and the state of South Dakota have all helped with the match requirements

"We have not just been standing around, we've taken this opportunity to clean out a number of areas here at the station," said Janis, "and through the help of two Italians, Roberto Deledonne and Giuseppe Rossetti, we have completely overhauled our on-air studio; the two men and the Malvisi Network of Milan have donated new equipment for the studio and the time and work to install the equipment."

Also installed was a new control board that replaced the old board that has been there since the radio station started.

KILI first went on the air on Feb. 25, 1983 and this year celebrated their 23rd anniversary. Until the April storm, KILI had never been off the air for more than a few days at the most, this is by far the longest the community station has ever been off the air.

We hear from everyone, anytime anyone goes out into the public - people tell us that they never realized that KILI was so much a part of their life, that they feel out of touch with what is going on, that they miss the music, the humor, the news, the council meetings, the psa's and swap shop, just about everything about the station added Janis.

Tom Casey, the station's development director, said once they are on air, they will be broadcasting again in the Rapid City area. The station hasn't broadcast in the Rapid City area within the past year while they were revamping their license for their antenna in that area.

The digital conversion will allow the station to be both analog and digital. If KILI radio listeners have digital, it will be super, said Casey.

The new antenna and transmission line will include a grouding system that can help prevent with what happened with the lightening strikes.

In the near future, they are looking to upgrade the studio with a new production studio and satellitte download equipment.

"Public radio is changing and we need to change with by upgrading the equipment," said Casey.

In December of 2005, KILI Radio launched their airwaves over Internet and now can be heard worldwide.

KILI Radio maybe operating fully for the Oglala Sioux Tribe's general election in November.

Air medical planes

Warnock said that he was in the business of getting patients to the hospital and that the billing process will not be an issue for receiving hospitals. He gave an example of the cost of 80 medical evacuations at a cost of $7,000 - $8,000 each for a fixed-wing airplane as compared to a cost of $7,000 - $10,000 for a helicopter to perform the same service. He said contract health would save $300, 000 in the first year.

Warnock also told the council that eventually the community will be able to invest in the business in three years. He said, "I carry my own toys, I don't need your money" when I came and I stand by this. There is risk in any start up business and I am uncomfortable taking your money."

He said, "We can also work through the Rosebud Ambulance Service. We have our own Medicaid number. It would be better if the receiving hospital would take this. We will know in ten days."

Apparently, getting patients enrolled in Medicare and Medicaid could be a tribally owned enterprise according to Warnock. The tribe would then be prepared for the $50 thousand dollar bill if patients would sign up. The money that would have been paid out of contract health for the cost that Medicare will pay will stay in the I.H.S. budget according to his reasoning.

I.H.S. only controls a third of the medical evacuation payments and not the ones paid by Medicaid and the existing contract holders can be asked to be take part in the program.

Finally, Warnock said that up to seven routine patients could be flown at once to any of the participating hospitals, rather than just one patient as is the practice now. If a shuttle service were put into effect the cost would be split between patients.

Jackley sworn in as new U.S. attorney for South Dakota

By Archie Beuavais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The United States Senate confirmed Marty Jackley on Friday, July 21 as the new U.S. Attorney for South Dakota. The post had been vacant for about a year.

He was sworn into office on July 25th. Randy Seiler of the U. S. Attorney's office introduced the thirty-five year old Jackley as his new boss to the Rosebud Sioux Tribal council on Tuesday, August 15.

The two were accompanied by victim's assistance specialist, Marlys Big Eagle, a tribal member from Crow Creek. Her area of responsibility in working with victims includes Rosebud and Standing Rock reservations which she has done for eight years.

Sieler said, "Recently, Senator Thune made a recommendation for a permanent U. S. Attorney, Marty Jackley, to President Bush. Marty comes from a law firm in Rapid City. His specializes in civil and criminal law in Indian Country."

Jackley told the RST council, "I appreciate the opportunity to address the council. I am a member of the tribal court of Pine Ridge. I'm not authorized to practice on the Rosebud. I want to have a presence on all of the reservations, so I can share."

Jackley noted that it seems like it is always federal versus tribal jurisdiction. He cited some statistics from 2005 in which 84 tribal complaints were prosecuted by the U. S. Attorney's office. He said there is some new legislation called Adam Walsh legislation which contains provisions for crime reporting requirements.

He said, "Also, there are increases in the mandatory minimum sentencing for aggravated sexual assault." There are also new maximum penalties for sexual assault, he said.

Under the Safe Trails program, there were 39 arrests and 31 were from Rosebud according to Jackley. His office oversees an active victim's witness program and also the "Weed and Seed" program which has provided some funding for the Boys and Girls Club of Rosebud.

Jackley said, "I am open to suggestions to be a better attorney. I will be visiting all nine reservations so I can have a physical presence so you can educate me."

Antelope council representative Jo Colombe said, "We don't have a problem with the federal system. I just think they could be tried here. Our people suffer harsher penalties; they get more under the federal system."

Jackely remarked, "The U. S. Supreme Court says those guidelines are not mandatory."

Jackley is a 1995 of the USD Law School in Vermillion and is partner in the Rapid City law firm of Gunderson, Palmer, Goodsell and Nelson.

OST Election Board releases time frame

Process underway for OST Primary and General elections

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - On Tuesday, Aug. 15, petitions for OST president, vice president, chief judge and tribal council representatives were available for the 2006 primary election of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. Completed petitions need to be returned no later than 5 p.m. Tuesday, Aug. 29 to the election office in Pine Ridge at the old Indian Health Service Hospital.

In addition to completed petitions (30 signatures for council, 150 each for president, vice and chief judge), each candidate needs to provide a $26 money order for a federal background check and a receipt of a $20 payment for the state background check and a $5 payment for fingerprinting.

Except for the chief judge, candidates need to have been a resident for the past year and show proof of tribal membership. Chief judge candidates do not need to show proof of tribal membership and are not required to be a resident for the past year but they do need to have a juris doctorate, a completion of findings by the OST Supreme Court and personally sign off on all of their paperwork..

The primary election is set for Tuesday, Oct. 3 with the general scheduled for Tuesday, Nov. 7 with polls opening at 9 a.m. and closing at 7 p.m.

Petitions for executive board will be available on Oct. 17 with the return required by Nov. 3.

Although a number of items have been discussed over the last four years to revise the constitution of the Oglala Sioux Tribe including staggered four year terms, creation of a business council and developing separation of powers, no proposed revisions went to secretarial election.

The 2004 election saw eight women elected as tribal council representatives and the first woman elected as tribal president. Fire Thunder was suspended twice and eventually impeached. The tribe elected their first chief judge, Patrick Lee in 1988, Cheryl Three stars Valandra succeeded him in 2002. She resigned last year and currently Lisa Adams holds the position temporarily until the election fills it for a four year term.

The election board is located in the old hospital in Pine Ridge, for information call 867-2769.

County.

Essentially, they had offered to sell the land to RST even before the warranty deed had been received.

One of the two front men identified himself as a former OST council representative and made a presentation to TLE in March and to the RST council on Aug.10. He was accompanied by Mitch O'Connell who did not address the council. According to Scott the individual allegedly approached him with an offer of money at Ampride if he supported the deal. Representative Robert Moore said that he had taken the individual aside and he said he had offered to make a donation to the fair and that Scott had hooked them up to cell phones and asked them for a donation.

Scott said, "As an Antelope council representative, I would like to see a complete investigation of the whole issue."

On Monday, August 15 a special Antelope community meeting was called at 7:00 p.m. by Scott to explain the allegations and to ask Antelope community to take some kind of action against TLE.

He explained to the gathering, "I was offered a substantial campaign contribution if I supported the proposal to purchase the land. I said 'No.' They are saying I approached them. My cell phone records are available."

There were 31 community members in attendance who signed in for the meeting including visitors.

Antelope council representative Moore said, "This was pushed down our throats. There was not a single document to look at."

A motion to ask for a congressional investigation of TLE was passed by a vote of 16 in favor, 1 against and 6 not voting.

Descendants of 1862 Indian conflict seek share of casino profits, including Shakopee

By Mary Hudetz
Associated Press Writer

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - Heather Larsen, a tribal college student in Sisseton, says she could afford to raise her son and pay tuition at a state university if she got money from land that was set aside for her ancestors.

Her father, Jesse Larsen, knows his lot in life would change, too.

``I got cousins back in Shakopee who are millionaires,'' he said.

The Larsens are among 10,000 people nationwide who have researched their family trees to go after a share of the profits from tribal casinos in Minnesota.

For almost 20 years, Larsen and others have watched relatives from Minnesota's Shakopee, Prairie Island and Lower Sioux Mdewakanton communities profit from three tracts of land originally placed in trust in 1886 for just a couple hundred Dakota Sioux Indians and their descendants.

Casinos have been built by the three tribes. The Shakopee community's Mystic Lake casino, near Minneapolis, is one of the country's most profitable.

The controversy stretches back to the Dakota Conflict of 1862, when a group of Dakota revolted against the government because food and money promised to them in exchange for land were not delivered.

Hundreds of white settlers were killed, 38 Dakota warriors were hanged in the largest mass execution in U.S. history and thousands of Dakota Sioux were forced out of Minnesota as a result of the fighting.

The original beneficiaries of the disputed lands were members of the Mdewakanton band of Dakota Sioux, who did not attack the settlers. Some of the group even rescued the whites during the fighting.

Many of them were relocated or fled to present day South Dakota, Nebraska, Montana and Canada with other Dakota Indians, and some stayed in Minnesota.

The government documented 208 of them in an 1886 census and bought three tracts of land for their benefit and their descendants.

``We don't have any history of those times,'' Jesse Larsen said. ``We don't have any documentation of how we lived.''

But a case in the Federal Court of Claims means that many _ including the Larsens _ now have documentation of who they are.

In 2004, Judge Charles F. Lettow ruled that the U.S. government breached its responsibilities as trust holders to the peaceable Dakota and their descendants. But whether any damages will be awarded is still undetermined.

Regardless, almost 10,000 people nationwide have researched their lineage to the peaceable Dakotas and intend to join Sheldon Wolfchild, chairman of the Lower Sioux community, as plaintiffs in Wolfchild vs. the United States, said Eric Kaardal, an attorney representing almost 6,500 of the plaintiffs.

About one-third of Kaardal's clients live in South Dakota, and every reservation in the state has residents involved, he said. Seven South Dakota attorneys also are representing some of the plaintiffs.

The genealogy helps make the case significant because most of the lineal heirs to the trust already have been determined, Kaardal said. ``We actually have people lined up to be paid damages.''

People seeking representation from Kaardal helped set record high visitor numbers at the South Dakota state archives this spring to meet a June 23 deadline, the state's historical society said. The deadline was eventually extended to July 12.

Virginia Hanson, a state archivist, has helped 10-20 people a day since Lettow's decision opened the door to recover damages. Many researched for months through as many as 14 generations to prove their descendency to the peaceable Dakota with baptismal, birth, bible records and other documents, she said.

``I'll have to admit most of the researchers started from oral history,'' Hanson said. ``Finding the documents to prove their history, that was the challenge this past year and a half.''

Larsen said his ``golden document'' was his grandmother's baptismal record found in an old Catholic Church in Fort Snelling, Minn.

His great-great-grandmother, Rosa Coursoll, is on the 1886 census.

He has reconnected with family in Minnesota and North Dakota since joining the Wolfchild case, he said, and has over 100 relatives from Minnesota to Montana involved.

``I got five grandkids, these are two that are going to benefit from this,'' Jesse Larsen said optimistically about his interests in the case while sitting with his two grandsons and his daughter.

The U.S. could owe billions of dollars in damages, Kaardal said. The Shakopee and Prairie Island tribes have demonstrated concern over their stakes by filing documents in support of the federal government. Wolfchild's Lower Sioux tribe has filed a motion to intervene as a plaintiff.

``The tribe will protect its interest to the fullest extent possible,'' said Willie Hardacker, spokesperson for the Shakopee tribal leadership. ``The people here have sacrificed and worked hard to build a very successful, functioning, very generous tribal government and the plaintiffs are looking to destroy it.''

The tribe donated almost $16 million in 2005 to American Indian organizations and other charitable groups.

The recognition and documentation of almost 10,000 Mdewakanton Dakota descendants is historic, Wolfchild said.

``We will always know who we are because we will have proof of who we are,'' he said. ``Our people have now been found in South Dakota.''

Where are the men?

By Dr. Jim Wilson

Like hundreds of other instinct-driven Tribal males, I returned to my birthplace (nest) on Aug. 5 for the annual Sioux Nation Pow Wow. Deep in my soul there was a spiritual reaction of fulfillment for having survived another year of life as my eyes drew into my mind numerous familiar signs that I was where I was supposed to be; I was home.

Awaiting the start of the Parade (1 hour late) in the glaring sun (100 degrees) I had time to make numerous observations. The first was that G. Wayne Tapio was missing; his person was not seen but his absence was obvious in the unswept streets, the lack of flags and banners and the general lethargy of a parade without any music or oomph!

However, what really got my attention was the second observation of HUNDREDS of kids of pre-school age rushing about in anticipation. They ran with abandon and delight in all directions! There were also a great many dogs of all breeds, sizes, shapes and colors.

They also ran with abandon and delight in all directions! The interaction between the kids and the dogs was a delight to see; they all seemed to know one another and often acknowledged one another with frequent physical contacts, like the 4 year old boy who hugged his dog and fastened a scarf around its neck.

As the temperature rose and minutes passed I looked at the adults in the crowd and made my third observation: there were almost no men! Women of all ages with children.

Where were the men? In the parade? Behind the scenes preparing for other events? At home? Off to war? In White Clay? (Nope, a later drive-through showed very few people). When the parade came by I looked for the men and didn't find many. Lots of young people, but still more females than males. Wow! As a Social Scientist my mind was reeling; what was going on? I had to learn more.

However, for the moment my fourth observation was of the interwoven group of misfits in the parade; the POLITICIANS. South Dakota Governor-candidate Democrat Jack Billion in a short-sleeved shirt walked (and skipped) down the middle of the street while running-mate Eric Abrahamson worked the sidelines handing out bumper stickers.

Governor Rounds apparently was busy elsewhere.

Republican Congressional candidate-sacrificial lamb Bruce Whalen, (OST member) who "really feels welcome" in the party that has steadfastly worked to kill us, civilize us, make us farmers, relocate us, terminate us, cut our budgets and take our lands trotted along glad-handing and passing out flyers.

In the poorest county in the United States of America. Yes, indeed, I was home!

After the parade thirst and near-starvation flooded my mind so my nephew Tim Shangreaux (and his son Wesley) drove us all around the village and nearby places to look for familiar faces (does it rhyme?).

We also scouted for food and I made a solid fifth observation; entrepreneurship is alive and well on the Rez! Gazebo tents everywhere selling a great variety of foods. After several drive-bys we pulled up at Fred and Sandra Brown's outdoor kitchen for home-made Menudo and fry bread.

I loved the large chunks of taniga and a shoe-sized piece of fry bread.

After quelling our thirst and hunger we resumed our eyeballing by driving about (slowly @ $3.29 and 20 miles per gallon), smiling and waving at acquaintances, stopping to shake hands with old friends, or "getting down" to visit with relatives.

Everywhere we went I eye-searched for the missing men.

At only 39, I seemed to be one of the elders! It seemed that the crowd was smaller than in recent years and there seemed be a whole different, subdued feeling in the air.

A final observation before our leaving came as we drove around my Alma Mater (Oglala Sioux Community School): Somebody had turned the place into a PRISON! The whole place was enclosed in a chain-link fence topped with barbed wire, gates with padlocks and endless speed-blocks! Who did this? Who let this happen? Why, why, why? I know that former Governor Bill Janklow had turned Southern State Teacher's College into a State Prison, but I don't think he has much authority these days.

It has now been a week since my annual Pilgrimage to my birthplace and I have two major social issues on my mind: Where are the men? And, who thinks chain-link fences topped by barbed-wire enhance education?

I have often spoken as a Social scientist about the scientific method of problem solving and I now see these two questions as perfect examples of social situations which DEMAND answers. Many readers will recall that I have often said we should search for patterns of behavior when looking for explanations of current situations. Technically, we call the patterns correlations (how two or more things co-relate).

To do comparisons we have to know what we start with; what the scientists call 'baseline data.' Then we look for difference or similarities and, finally, the causes and effects.

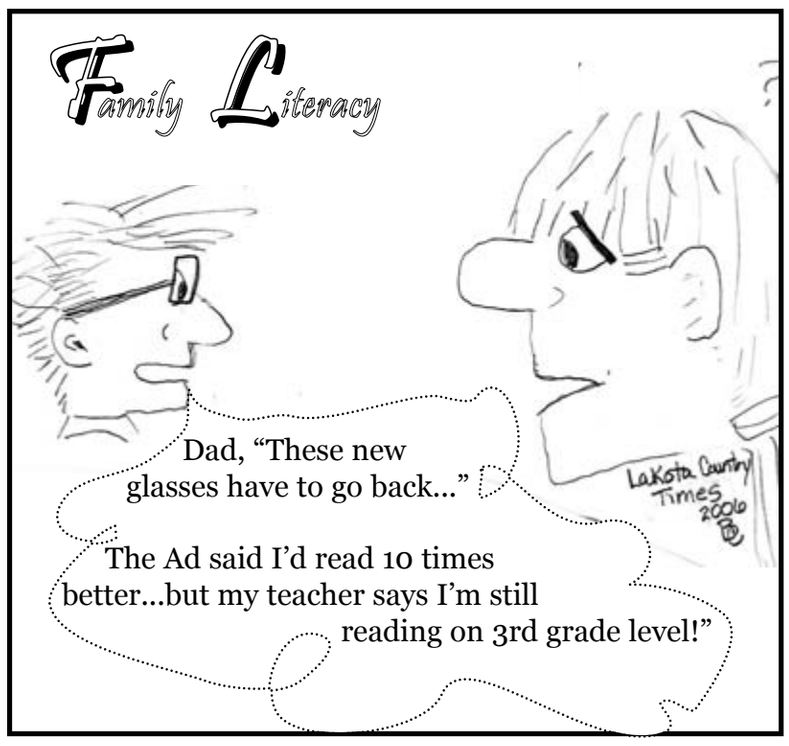
We get an easy start on the first question: Where are the men? We can start by simply looking at population data. By doing so we can see that there has been a small, but steady, decline in the Oglala adult male population for a long time. Correlations: population losses co-relate to increases in male deaths by auto accident, increases in Indian male jail and prison populations, larger ratios of male-to-female military enlistments, more males than women working away from home and shorter life-spans for all Indian males.

It only takes a few in each category to have a significant impact. One significant social impact (effect) is that there is a shortage of men for marriage; females are competing for fewer men so "getting a man" is harder and more women are willing to settle for less secure arrangements demonstrated by more children in single-parent situations.

It is harder to get into the school issue because the prison-like fence is not a demonstrated success-response to any known educational concern. Does a fence improve attendance? Does a fence improve learning?

Who or what are you fencing in or out? Does a fence keep out alcohol, tobacco or drugs? Does a fence inspire good teaching? Does a fence promote school, community and Tribal spirit and pride? Are all of the other schools on the reservation going to build fences?

Being aware of the turmoil in tribal government I looked at the other governmental elements of the community (Shannon County Public Schools, Red Cloud Indian School, Indian Health Service, Bureau of Indian affairs, etc.) to see if they were experiencing similar turmoil, and I see a clear correlation between OST-BIA-OCHS situations.



All institutions are created and governed by real people. Most public institutions are governed by board members elected by the public. Private institutions are governed by the owners-investors.

In either case boards first set goals for institutions and then adopt policies and procedures to reach those goals. In most cases the boards then employ men and women with knowledge and skills in appropriate disciplines to administer the institutions by implementing the policies and procedures.

Problems can occur for several reasons: Unclear goals, confusing or conflicting policies and procedures, poor or incompetent administrators, or the deadliest cause of all: interference by board members in the administration of unclear goals, confusing or conflicting policies and procedures, and poor, weak or incompetent administrators.

I will continue to search for our missing men AND the guilty parties who are causing our problems.

The colonized pot calling the kettle black

Dear Editor:

I have been reading with dismay, some of the previous pieces written by Tim Giago. Awhile back, I decided the man just wasn't worth responding to. However, the man has grown more irresponsible with every word he writes regarding the tribal council and the Lakota oyate in general.

He has become part of the problem, which therefore renders him useless in regards to being a positive contributor in seeking badly needed positive solutions which will benefit the Lakota oyate at large.

On his behalf, I apologize to the Lakota oyate for his chastisement of you for as he puts it, "voting in uneducated dummies." I suppose he feels that the people are dummies for voting the way they do, I know that's what the former president thought of us. For a so called educated man, he sure is hard to understand. He seems to be empty of spirit and lives in a world known only to himself. Maybe it's because he writes for a wasicu reading audience. Le wasicu oyate kin, they are his bread and butter.

There are some educated Lakota people who become blinded by their own egos. They have lost the sense of who they are as Lakota oyate in the process of becoming educated, thus rendering them of no use to the people.

Without wisdom, their education is incomplete. In a sense they are little more than smart dummies who know a lot of things, but have not the wisdom to apply their education to real life situations. Such is the case with Giago, his education benefits no one but himself.

Giago's contention regarding the "Christian led council of the Oglala Sioux Tribe" should suffice to serve as evidence that Giago is completely ignorant in what he ascertains. He is completely devoid of facts and relies totally on speculations and bitter doses of poutiness. It is well known to women that men are slow when it comes to obtaining maturity. In some cases, some men never mature, am I right sisters? Need I say more?

I do not know what Giago has against the many Lakota Christian believers we have here at home. Perhaps he can muster the courage to visit them in their places of worship and tell them to their faces everything he thinks is wrong with them.

I respect my Christian friends and relatives, they are all Lakota. As human beings, we all have the spiritual right to pray in any fashion we hold close to us.

Perhaps Giago is still pouting over the tribal council's decision to ban abortions on the Lakota homeland. He mistakenly assumes the tribe followed the state in taking this stand. So, one more time for the record, and all of you who support abortion, please try to get this through your colonized, assimilated minds.

We could care less what the state does, it never benefits us anyways.

The impeached president, not the state, along with her supporters had the audacity to think they could build an abortion clinic on our lands, where every year we hold ceremonies promoting life. We suffer and bleed for the unborn generations. Le Wakanyeja heca, we will not let them suffer and bleed.

What does Lakota culture say? Life is sacred. That's it, the end of story. I am proud of the Lakota people who made a stand to protect the lives of the unborn Lakota to come. I am equally proud of my colleagues on the council who supported the wishes of the people they represent.

Our culture advocates that life is sacred, I am Lakota so I abide by what our culture teaches. I am not colonized like those who wish to shove wasicu ideologies down, I will not cast away my people's teachings and become nothing.

Nobody is telling any woman they can't get an abortion, they just can't get it here, where that murderous act contradicts with what the people are praying for. Many of us in the Lakota nation are governed by something that is so much bigger than what I.R.A., state, federal governments dictate. Even the colonized Indians will never be able to offer us anything greater than what we already have.

Personally, it is those things, as well as the love for the people that makes me strong. I won't back down, I haven't thus far, I hope the people have seen that. I'm like Giago, there are a lot of people who don't like me, but unlike Giago, I rise to the challenge, I don't hide from them. I will continue to stand strong regardless of the knives in my back, wopile. My love and wishes for the people are greater than their hate for me.

Friends and relatives, don't let them fool you. Even Giago has learned the language of the people he despises most, the Laktoa activists. He has been trying to utilize that language to distract our minds from the graft and corruption that remains in tribal governments today. He had his chance to make a difference, but he chose to maintain the status quo, to the white man he is viewed as the "Indian expert" to the Lakota oyate, well, let's just say we didn't just crawl out of the cradle board yesterday. We are not as gullible as his wasicu admirers. Cecelia Fire Thunder once said there was a difference

School is open next week

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

Our children are headed for school next week and the start of a new year can be a stressful time for the youngsters.

Son number two is in the eighth grade and it has proven to be an especially difficult time, socially, for children of that age. The schools on the Rosebud are also in the midst of meeting the criteria of the No Child Left Behind legislation and it will be interesting to see what progress they make this year. Many of them do not read Lakota newspapers, so it will be equally as interesting if I get any feedback from my opinion piece.

As I was saying, the NCLB act is going to kick in at some point in terms of its punitive measures and hopefully our schools are not going to suffer any irreparable damage.

It is interesting that there were only a couple of schools nation wide that reported their minority achievement scores. I wonder what the Education Department will do about that.

It seems some school districts are failing to properly show the extent of some student's scores as they might reflect poorly on the district.

In this era of accountability, the burden is on teachers, parents, and students alike to meet the several criteria that have been mandated and it is certainly 'do able.' I say that if teachers in Sioux Falls and in Rapid City can teach their students well and have them improve reading, science, and math scores our teachers on the reservation can too. We can have a blue ribbon school on the Rosebud, too, I believe. It is getting to the point that we may just have to teach to those topics that come up for testing.

Parents and children also can help in this endeavor. My son's school is a beautiful structure that is well maintained and the children seem so dynamic and energetic and I look for them to do better than last year in meeting NCLB. I have been on the parent committee for two years, so I have a sense of where the school is. I also share a sense of the urgency that schools feel under the act as compliance must be achieved.

The teaching profession has always struggled to be viewed as true professionals on par with lawyers, accounts, and architects; it often has trouble being viewed as such because salaries have been notoriously low even though teachers spend time in a third of a child's life.

If salaries were much higher and equal to that of other professions, teaching would attract more talented and dedicated teachers. South Dakota is at the bottom of the salary scale for teachers and it makes me wonder if our standing under the NCLB law reflects a similar relative standing; I certainly hope not, as the state has made strides in being connected technologically speaking.

Good luck to our Lakota parents as we also factor into the equation that is school clothing. On the Rosebud, we have not heard if our children are going to receive clothing vouchers this year.

I hope so, as that is just one more little push for the children who need to look good on the first day of school.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Living in the past and justifing resentments is unhealthy

By Patty Pourier

Living in the past? During my early recovery days, the exploration of my past seemed to be important and the key to unlock the mystery of my misery today. However, this is 25 years later. Dredging up old hurts are okay when used in a direct specific way to address an issue. But using them to justify resentments is unhealthy.

The "Woe to me -I am this way because when I was 10 years old --- blah blah blah… etc etc etc. happened and the pain is still real today." That may have been helpful to me once or maybe 10 times to process my childhood hurts, and abuse and help to explain some of my present day dysfunction, but give me a break, how many years or decades can we continue to go back to the wrongs of our childhood and puke them out as a justification for our present day resentments.

A friend of mine recently had an encounter with an angry sibling. The anger stemmed from something that happened between the mother and the aunt of the two, 40 years ago. Kind of like the second generation of the on going feud of the Hatfield's and MaCoys.

In this case the players were all dead from the original incident and the second generation was fuming and ready to fight a cousin of his that was not even born when the "original sin" took place by his deceased mother and aunt. Sounds ridiculous doesn't it? But this is how a resentment works or maybe I should say doesn't work.

Resentments are feeling the same feelings over and over again, sometimes even decades or centuries later. Carrying of generational resentment produces a very sick, very angry person or society. Anger comes from the fact that resentment had to be birthed from something that happened in the past. And the past IS engraved in stone and cannot be changed. The feelings over what happened in the past CAN BE changed by a willing person to pass up the opportunity to be a victim or carry on a feud.

My brother in law used to say, "Do we always have to live in the past?" This comment usually came after someone brought up a less than desirable incident he wished people would forget about concerning his behavior. It really is a good saying, "Do we always have to live in the past"? Can we let go of the emotions that continue to impact our lives from the actions of generations past and start to concentrate on the present and building a future that will be better for all persons concerned.

Can we explore and take responsibility of our part in the problems of today because of emotionally charged resentments left to us by our parents, or grandparents?

We are responsible for ourselves. We cannot blame our aunties, mothers or grandfathers for how we are today.

There are very few of us who have been dealt a fair playing hand. The only thing we can do is to take care of ourselves. To allow and recognize that others need to make decisions that will take care of themselves, and then realize there is a healthy boundary between the two.

I am not advocating throwing out historical treaties or legal documents that are binding.

However, I am proposing the emotional charged energy around past situations, which we personally had no control over and did not take part in, be kept in the proper context and that we concentrate more of our energy on our children's future and our present situation.

Resentments do not heal, they separate and hurt.

Eighth Circuit decisions defy reason

By Hazel Bonner
Guest Columnist

Again two decisions of the Eighth Circuit Court of appeals defy the reason of reasonable people. Strip searches of juveniles in detention for minor offenses were allowed in South Dakota. In a second decision, the death of a baby in foster care in Missouri was determined to not be the responsibility of caseworkers.

Judge Lawrence Piersol ruled that the strip searches were not tolerable for juveniles accused of minor violations in the Minnehaha County Detention Center.

The Eight Circuit said that detention officials are responsible for making sure juveniles are not hiding weapons or drugs. It appears a pat down search could identify both weapons and drugs.

Jodie challenged the policy. She was 16 at the time of her detention for a curfew violation in 1999. She had to strip to her underwear. Some members of the class action lawsuit said juveniles were naked when Detention Center officials searched them.

The case triggered changes in the Center's search policy. Searches are no longer done if parents agree to pick up their children within two hours.

The legislature prohibited strip searches of juveniles held for curfew violations unless there is probable cause.

However, the attorney for the child says the case will be appealed because the rules are simply not reasonable. Matt Piers of Chicago, said the changes at the center are "absolutely not good enough." He further said, "The issue is really much broader than curfew violations."

On Aug. 10, the Court of Appeals granted summary judgment to Department of Family Services officials in a case which involved the death of a baby living in a foster home in Missouri.

The natural parents of the baby had complained to DSF officials of injuries visible on the child during visits. In this case only two members of the three judge panel agreed. Justice Lay filed a strongly written dissent. When the child was hospitalized an emergency room doctor also complained about injuries to the child.

The baby was released back to that foster home after a four-day hospital stay during which complaints were claimed. On Aug. 18, 2002, the baby was rushed to the hospital where it was determined that he had suffered from abusive head trauma, subdural hemorrhage, and massive-bilateral retinal hemorrhage. He died on Aug. 21.

The foster father, John Dilley was later convicted of child abuse resulting in death and of second degree assault, charges that arose from Dominic's death. In spite of this the Eighth Circuit upheld the grant of summary judgment to the officials of DFS saying they did not exhibit deliberate indifference in the injuries and death of Dominic.

The major dispute here involves the refusal of the caseworker Alysha Friend to move the baby from the abusive foster home. It was agreed by the Family Services Team that Dominic should be removed form the Dilly home. Friend met with her supervisor and the decision was made to not move him. No other members of the team were informed of the failure to move the baby.

Judge Lay said that the actions of the caseworker showed deliberate indifference to the safety and well being of the baby.

He said that there was little doubt Friend's conduct violated a clearly established right to protection. Lay said "James Constitutional claim against Friend presents …genuine issues of material fact on the issue of Friend's deliberate indifference."

That means simply that in his opinion, the case should have been heard by a jury because a jury may have awarded him damages.

In the meantime Indian juveniles continue to appear in adult incustody court here in Rapid City. Judge Kern thinks it's okay even after her Indian Child Welfare Commission service. Juvenile prosecutors have made no effort to meet with me.

With the South Dakota Child Protection Service being determined to not be in substantial compliance with the protection of children, it seems that it is a matter of time before a child will die in the custody of our CPS in South Dakota. Children have already died in foster care here. Who, exactly, will protect our children from Child Protection Services?

Kind of seems like the fox is guarding the chicken house!

between respected elderly people, and old people, I think I know who she was talking about.

In closing, to all political observers, please don't mistake me for a career I.R.A. politician.

I come from a people who come from a long time ago. I was voted in by the Lakota oyate who think along the same lines.

My loyalty is to them first, it's almost time to take yet another step in the direction of corrupt free, stabilized tribal government.

Be careful in your selections, don't be fooled by those who already had the chance to bring positive change, they claim their Lakota blood for convenience sake only.

We are the ones who do all the sufferings so that they might live.

BEAR BUTTE -Many Nations of Indigenous Peoples, NGOs (non-governmental organizations), and government representatives gathered at the sacred mountain Bear Butte.

Traditional healers, tiospaye headsmen, matriarchs, traditional societies, and community leaders camped together to have good talks, debates, and form agreements on how indigenous peoples can work together to strengthen the pockets of resistance across Turtle Island.

All are working to stop the desecration of sacred lands and sacred places. While we camped at Bear Butte for those 42 days, we saw a rainbow surround the Sacred Mountain.

A rainbow surrounds Bear Butte during the Aug. 1 to 4 summit. Hundreds of tribal members from South Dakota tribes and other supporters attended the summit and the rally. Photo by Deb White Plume.

At the Summit of Indigenous Nations August 1-4, respected elder and leader Carrie Dan of the Western Shoshone Defense Project encouraged everyone to take a strong heart and keep working to protect sacred land, "We have to learn to use new words to educate the world about how indigenous peoples view our land-all land is sacred, but we have these special places that are tied to our identity".

She spoke of how the Western world has a difficult time comprehending how native peoples have a relationship with sacred places, such as Bear Butte.

An elder from Canada, Wolverine, addressed the people to remember that the fight is not over, as long as there is one sacred place still threatened, we must all come to the aid of our allies to protect these places and the ceremonies conducted there.

Wolverine's history of struggle includes an attack on his Sun Dance ceremony by the civil authorities in British Columbia in the mid-1990's, who laid land mines on the road to his Sun Dance, exploding the vehicles driven by people traveling to the ceremony.

An action item for consideration by the full Summit was the Papal Bull of May 3, 4, 1493 Inter Cetera. The papal bull has been the basis for the extinguishment of aboriginal land title and the subjugation of indigenous peoples of North and South America.

The implementation of the papal bull evolved in the United States through the Supreme Court decision of Johnson v. M'Intosh [1823] which established the precedent for the denial of aboriginal title to American Indian lands in the United States.

Delegations of indigenous nations and ngo's, by consensus, adopted a resolution condemning the historical use of the doctrine of discovery as an instrument of genocide. Tupac Enrique Acosta, coordinator of the Tonatierra ngo based in Phoenix, AZ stated that this effort at Bear Butte continues the indigenous battle to halt genocide of indigenous peoples and seizures of their homelands in the Americas. "It has been resolved by 23 Nations and NGO's and 100 individual signatories that the 'Doctrine of Discovery' is a legal and political fiction in violation of the rights of indigenous peoples and intellectual act of oppression which continues to serve to suppress and repress the indigenous peoples in the Western Hemisphere," said Tupac Enrigue.

Santiago Delacruz, vice president of Confederacion de Nacionalidades Indigenas del Ecuador/ Confederation of Indigenous Nationalities of Ecuador).

CONAIE is a formation of 28 indigenous nationalities and Pueblos of Ecuador said "We have come from the southern part of this continent Abya Yala which we share with you all as indigenous nations of this hemisphere on a mission to strengthen and re-establish our ancestral ties as a continental confederation of nations and pueblos". Delacruz offered support for rescinding the papal bulls and support from the south for the protection of Bear Butte. "It is with great concern that we have come to be informed of the threatened desecration of the Sacred Mato Paha, also known as Bear Butte, where we now gathered in summit as indigenous nations. "This sacred area must not be allowed to be destroyed or desecrated by the proposed construction projects of 'biker bars' and the like," Delacruz said.

Current Miss Rosebud Willow Marshall ends her reign

Rosebud Pageant deadline extended

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The 2005-06 Miss Rosebud, Willow Marshall, will be ending her reign as the currently royalty representing the Rosebud Sioux people.

She said that she had initially competed for the title of Miss Rosebud in order to represent the tribe and carry its name.

She admitted that she had not undertaken a lot of traveling to represent RST in the last year, however she had attended a number of local powwows on the Rosebud. She said she went to work at the Mesquakie casino for the last eight months and is finally missing home.

Willow did provide a recorded message on KINI FM announcing the upcoming Ms. Rosebud Pageant to be held at the SGU multipurpose on Monday, August 21.

According to pageant coordinator, Sheri Wright, the deadline to apply for the Ms. Rosebud Pageant had been extended to Friday, August 18 as there had not been any applicants as of today. The new Ms. Rosebud will vie for the title in competition to be held on Monday. She will be crowned and announced after the Friday evening grand entry on Aug. 25.

Marshall said that she had attended the 2006 Indigenous Games in Denver and served as a chaperone for Team South Dakota, the midget girls, and participated in the grand entry with her crown and sash.

She said she had also had an opportunity to speak with students in Tama, IA at her niece's school where she was the student of the week .

Willow has plans to return for the Rosebud Fair and her future plans include possibly moving to Salt Lake City, Utahto attend the University of Utah. She said she enjoyed the experience of working at the casino and greatly enjoyed her co-workers and the customers she met.

Election of Flandreau Sioux Tribe put on hold

SIOUX FALLS - An Aug. 29 hearing is scheduled on a challenge to the results of the election for president of the Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe.

Josh Weston defeated incumbent Mark Allen 122-109 in the Aug. 1 election.

Allen's supporters are challenging the election, said Richard Nesje, a member of the tribal election board, which ruled last week that there is sufficient merit to go to a hearing.

``The issue primarily was whether Josh Weston had established residency for a year prior to running,'' says Rollyn Samp, tribal lawyer.

At the hearing, the election board will listen to arguments from both candidates and issue a decision.

Either side can appeal the board's decision within three days to a tribal judge. The judge's decision also can be appealed to a tribal appellate court.

``According to our constitution, the incumbent stays in office until this is resolved,'' Nesje said.

Big Foot rumor dismissed

RAPID CITY (AP) - Ignore the reports _ the South Dakota School of Mines and Technology said it does not have the body of the legendary Bigfoot.

An Internet site ``reported'' that one of the mythological creatures had been shot near Slim Buttes on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation and that the body was taken to a School of Mines laboratory for studies.

The school has $14 million in research projects under way, but ``no facilities dedicated to Bigfoot or other cryptozoology research,'' the School of Mines and Technology said in a statement.

The body of Bigfoot was supposedly seen and given a ceremonial treatment by three Lakota elders, including Wilmer Mesteth.

``Tell them it's a bunch of baloney,'' Mesteth said. ``I think someone is playing a practical joke.''

Chief Oliver Red Cloud of the Black Hills Sioux Nation Treaty Council said the Catholic church has continuously made money for the Red Cloud Indian School at Pine Ridge and has not helped the communities that are most in need for daily survival, not to mention the long term reservation needs to help address the causes of poverty.

Nongovernmental organizations presented the work they are doing at the frontline on the grassroots level. Rosalie Little Thunder, President of the South Dakota Peace and Justice organization encouraged all the delegates to continue in their struggle, that ancient ways of life will continue as we protect our sacred places.

Kent Lebsock and Chris Soverow from the American Indian Law Alliance presented, with Debra White Plume from Bring Back the Way, research data on the Cameco, Inc. uranium mine operating an Insitu Leach Mine through the company Crow Butte Resources, located near Crawford, Nebraska. "This uranium mine has had a leak which lasted from several months to two years, leaking radioactive contamination into the air, water, and land" said Severow to the stunned audience.

"This mine is located on 1868 and 1851 Ft. Laramie Treaty territory, this mine uses up to 5,000 gallons of water each minute," said White Plume. "Our Oglala Sioux Tribe must take the lead in fighting this mine, and lead the "Great Sioux Nation" in this fight. This contaminated land is just a few miles from where Crazy Horse was killed. This has to be a national issue as well."

Young adults all the way from Canada down to Arizona participated in the Summit of Nations, giving speeches about sacred site protection work they are involved in which includes fighting the Sun Peaks Ski Resort, to the Snow Bowl Resort, to the bars and concert amphitheaters near Bear Butte, and the "Divine Strike" proposed 700-ton bomb the US plans to detonate on Shoshone Nation's Ruby Valley Treaty land. The common linkage to these developments all revolve around business owners not only making money, but increasing profits that are already in the millions per annum range.

The final day of the Summit the delegations marched on Sturgis and had a rally downtown in order to educate the bikers about the Bear Butte desecration issue. "Don't Ride Highway 79" and "Bear Butte is Sacred Land" were the major messages of the protest.

The Summit of Indigenous Nations delegations will take home to their communities the collective action taken at the Summit for increased public awareness, and more discussion at the grassroots level. The Summit will reconvene in the summer of 2007 for the delegations to gather again, the 2006 Summit served as a starting point for collective action and the making of allies.

We honored Carrie Dan and Wolverine as elders who have committed their entire lives and who also have risked their freedom and lives to protect their ancestral land and ways of life.

Both are tireless in their commitment and are a great encouragement to everyone who is in this for the long haul. We say wopila to them.

In memory of Jason Lee Two Eagle

When tomorrow starts without me
And I'm not there to see
If the sun should rise and find your eyes
All filled with tears for me
I wish so much that you wouldn't cry
The way you did today
While thinking of the many things
We didn't get to say
I know how much you loved me
As much as I love you
And each time you think of me
I know you'll miss me too
But when tomorrow starts without me
Please try to understand
That an angel came and called my name
And took me by the hand
And said my place was ready in heaven far above
And that I would have to leave behind
All those I dearly love
As I walked through heaven's gates
I felt so much at home
When God looked down and smiled at me
From his great golden throne
He said "This is eternity
And all I've promised you"
Today my life on earth is past
But here it starts a-new
I promise no tomorrow
But today will always last
And since each day is the same
There's no longing for the past
So will you take my hand
And share my life with me?
When tomorrow starts without me
Don't think we're far apart
For everytime you think of me
I'm right here, in your heart
(author unknown)……

We love you and we miss your handsome face and big hugs. You were truly a blessing.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I have not been happy in my marriage to be honest since I got married. I honestly think I married him because I was scared at the time to lose a handsome man.

I've only been married for about nine months, with about three of them spent fighting and arguing over the phone. We were together for about three years before getting married.

I got pregnant and at the time we really did not know each other. At times I think that I still love him but at other times I just want to be alone because I like my independence. Sometimes I think that I need to just stay with him because I do not want my daughter to grow up without a father especially with him being so far away. I sent them to live with his parents because at the time my parents were fighting us over our daughter.

I am the one who wanted to initiate a divorce but I think it was mainly because of the distance and now I am seeing another man, who by the way has the same problem with his wife.

Will any good ever come out of everything I am doing for my daughter; will my parents ever leave us alone so that I can raise my daughter without being in fear of what they are going to do next ?

It was never my intention to keep her from her grandparents at all but I think they too are a reason why we started fighting and growing apart. Will this man I am seeing now be better for me or is it just another obstacle in my problem ?

What do I do move forward with the plan I made back then with my husband or go on with this new plan on my own with my daughter?

Dilemma

Dear Dilemma:

What a mess. The solution to the marriage issue is not in the arms of another man; it is within the heart. I see you eventually seeking a divorce. To stay married "for the sake of the children" is really a very precarious and usually an unhealthy reason to remain in a long term commitment.

By staying married, not only are you denying the man you are married to the right to be loved in his life in the way that anyone deserves; you are also cutting yourself off from loving anyone with a full commitment of life and heart. You are also ignoring the fact that your daughter is an intelligent, aware and feeling human being.

In a home where there are vast differences between two mates there is always stress that manifests in silences, outbursts, criticisms, and other unhealthy behavior. The stress level and the effect on your daughter is much more serious than living in a quiet, balanced, peaceful single-parent home. Also, the example of how mates relate: respect for each other, thoughtfulness, gentleness, forgiveness, compassion, loyalty, and the fine art of give and take (compromise), release of ego and attitude are absent.

You are demonstrating the fine art of war, not love, which will become her model for adult relationships. The battle with your parents will subside after you clearly demonstrate that your interest in life is prioritized with: 1. Home and children first; then: 2. self, social and outside life.

You are not in a healthy emotional balance and keep seeking verification of self through half-arsed relationships.

Please seek counseling to find your true identity - a loving, generous, compassionate woman who can stand alone and will feel worthy enough to have a mate that is equally balanced. I see you moving ahead with your own life plan and developing patience and the strength to wait for the right man rather than trying to create the right man out of anyone who is conveniently located.

I see you continuing your education and possibly moving to the Denver area for expanded independence, education and top level employment.

Dear Anna,

What does the future hold for me and my soon to be? We're both Libras and we both get along really well and we also like to joke around.

She says she never met anybody like me who cares and makes her laugh all the time. You see, she has two boys and a daughter, just like me, she had a bad relationship before, and as for me, my ex girlfriend died of alcohol.

I was wondering will we be together anytime soon? We're both patient for now until the time is right.

Being patient

Dear Being Patient:

I like you. This time is for both of you is to heal yourselves of co-dependent behavior. It is a time to stretch yourselves into becoming the true and best people you can be so that when you join together it will be in harmony and unity. Anyone who is single, and over the age of 12 has had a bad relationship and heartbreak. These are the experiences of life - not excuses for bad attitudes, intolerances and insecurities (jealousy). With both of you working on yourselves for balance you stand a wonderful chance of being married successfully and living together well. I see the two of you together off and on for a while - and I see marriage - probably next summer. Please work on your insecurities and life will be a lot easier and your relationship healthy and successful.

God Bless.

Dear Anna,

I got something on my mind, I need to know the truth about, a guy.

I knew this guy in high school but we never really talk like friends do or I mean we never talk at all, he was always playing basketball or with his friends, but even when he wasn't playing ball or with friends, he never said what's up to me, or he never called me. I'll have to be the one doing first, and when we did talk he will always be looking around to make sure nobody saw him talking to me, was it because he didn't want his friends to make fun of me, or was he just ashamed of me because of my disability.

At the basketball game he was there playing ball with his friends, after he was done playing ball he said what's up to me but I didn't know what to say to him, I guess I was speechless with no words to say, but I regarded it later, is he afraid to hurt my feelings by telling me he doesn't want to go with me because of my wheelchair Is that what he hiding from me? Will we become more than friends ever, what do you think I should do Anna?

I want to know the truth

Dear Wants to know the truth:

He wants to be just your friend. He is not mature enough to handle a relationship with you. He is a good guy (more or less), and he is not cruel, and he has too much sympathy for you for anything to happen between you. You will find a man that loves you for your beautiful heart, soul and mind, as well as everything about you; and does not feel "sorry" for you - but instead, sees you are strong, brilliant and determined.

He is not located around you; you will find him when you are in college - not in high school. There is a good aspect to this though - crushes are good things. They wake us up: make us notice how we look, put a spark in our eyes, and keep us a little "lighter" and "funnier" than we would be without a romantic interest in another.

Dear Anna,

What do you think about the Big Foot that everybody saw and was talking about in Pine Ridge. What does it mean?

Curious

Dear Curious:

I saw it. I was with two friends and it attached itself to our car on the back road to Batesland from Kyle. It was very tall, wore a black cape, had a hat on, and a translucent face and glowing eyes.

It was not Big Foot. It calls itself Tall Man. It growled in our window and started to talk to me but I did not listen to what it was saying. My own guides told me it was very old, it is a shape-shifter, it feeds on fear, and was trying to create havoc and fear so it could feed itself on us. I was told that it was searching for the weak ones. I thought it was trying to cause us to wreck our car.

I don't understand how come this spirit is on the rez but I have been told by one medicine person that he was released through some bad medicine which got mis-directed.

I was also told by another medicine person that it is a sign of the confusion and anger that has settled around the rez from drug and alcohol use and abuse, child and elderly neglect and abuse and the gang mentality of the youth. Whatever the reason, if you are centered and strong in your relationship with the Creator you have nothing to fear.

If you are whacked out on drugs and alcohol or involved in gangs and revenge I would quake in my boots: because it is looking for hearts that do not have the Spirit of the Creator strong within them. Sleep well kids.

MARTIN - Evelyn (Krohn) Whirlwind Horse, 99, died Aug. 11, at the Bennett County Nursing Home in Martin. Evelyn was born to William S. Krohn and Sarah Gibson Krohn, March 18, 1907, on a farm near Monmouth, Ill. She had ten siblings.

She attended public schools in Illinois through grade school and high school and attended college at Western Illinois State Teachers College at Macomb, Illinois, and received her master's degree in education at Chadron State College, Chadron, Neb.

After teaching five years in a rural community in Illinois in grades 1-8, Evelyn entered the Bureau of Indian Affairs Boarding School in 1930 at Pine Ridge as an elementary teacher in grades 5-8 for the next 12 years. In 1942 she was assigned to the position of Elementary Education Specialist and served in that position until her retirement from the Bureau of Indian Affairs in 1972. During the summers she did course work at Black Hills Teachers College, Spearfish; Colorado Agricultural College, Ft. Collins, Colorado; State College of Education, Greeley, Colorado; and Chadron State College, Chadron, Neb. She held a South Dakota Teacher's and Administrator's Certificate until 1972. In the position of Elementary Education Specialist, she was responsible for assisting and supervising 75 elementary teachers and developing and evaluating the curriculum for the six outlying day schools and the boarding school in Pine Ridge, on the Pine Ridge Reservation. During this period, she also assisted with the In-Service Training of Elementary Teachers in various workshops: Carson City Indian Agency, Stewart, Nev.; Chemawa, Ore.; Santa Fe, N.M.; and Riverside, Calif. Upon retiring in 1972, she was awarded a certificate of Honor for Meritorious Service by the United States Department of Interior. Evelyn continued working five more years through 1977, implementing the Title 1 Education Program in the Bureau of Indian Affairs Elementary Schools for the Oglala Sioux Tribe. This extended a project the tribe had begun several years prior, in the Headstart Program. By 1977 more than 100 tribal members were getting their first "hands on" experience in classrooms throughout the Pine Ridge Reservation. Their training was enhanced by course work in Tribal Community Colleges which were getting well-organized across the reservation. The best was yet to come: the time when these same teacher aides would become fully trained certified teachers in some of those same classrooms. Evelyn supported the Oglala Lakota College in its beginning by allowing all Title 1 staff to attend college classes on Release Time. She also made room in her budget to pay for the costs.

After retiring she concentrated on her life at the ranch which she dearly loved and remained there until 1987 when she and her husband, William Dick Whirlwind Horse, whom she married on Aug. 2, 1934, moved to Martin, where she spent her final years.

Her husband Dick died April 21, 1990. Evelyn is survived by many nieces, nephews and wonderful friends. From 1930-1972, a span of 42 years on the Pine Ridge Reservation is the time and place covering the career of this person Evelyn Whirlwind Horse or from 1930-1990, 60 years of her life. According to Evelyn's wishes her remains will be cremated under the direction of the Bennett County Funeral Service in Martin and funeral services will be held at Our Lady of the Sacred Heart Church, Martin, on Friday, Aug.25, at 10 a.m.

Homer was preceded in death by his father Homer Two Teeth, Sr.

George was preceded in death by his mother Carlene Sharp Fish; an infant brother; and an infant son, the twin of George IV.

Holmes Funeral Home was in charge of the arrangements.

Prinnice White Bear

ROSEBUD - Prinnice White Bear, 28, was born in Rosebud on July 21, 1978. Though he is the son of Frank Roubideaux, he was raised by his uncle Tim Roubideaux, Sr. along with his mother Myrna White Bear. Tim and Myrna raised Prinnice along with his older sister Jolene and his five younger brothers Peter, Tim Jr., Jesse, Gabriel and Brett, in Mission on the Rosebud Reservation.

At the age of 13 years, Prinnice and his family left the reservation and moved to Sioux Falls. The family relocated because Prinnice's baby sister Myrna was in need of medical attention from the Children's Care Hospital. He attended Whittier Middle School. Prinnice became a father on Dec. 19, 1997 with the birth of a daughter, Shannon Marie White Bear. He was blessed three years later with the birth of daughter Angelic Shaw. In 2005 another blessing occurred with the birth of his third daughter Precious White Bear.

Prinnice leaves this world as an artist who loved his daughters and family very much. He had an overwhelming respect for all of his friends.

Wake services were held Tuesday, Aug. 8 at Miller Funeral Home in Sioux Falls and Wednesday - Saturday at the SGU Mulitpurpose Building in Mission.

Funeral service was Sunday, Aug. 13 with burial at Two Kettle Cemetery. Holmes Funeral Home was in charge of the arrangements.

Geneva Eloise Gonzalez (Winyan Waste)

RAPID CITY - Geneva Eloise Gonzalez, Rapid City, died Friday, Aug. 11, at the Beverly HealthCare - Meadowbrook Manor in Rapid City. She was born on Feb. 20, 1924, to Fred John Wilcox and Anna Quiver-Wilcox at her father's ranch east of Wanblee, on the Pine Ridge Reservation. She attended elementary school at Pine Ridge and graduated from Oglala Community High School in 1943. She also earned six hours of college credit from Oglala Lakota College. Geneva was raised around her great-grandparents, Robert Quiver and his wife Rattling Hawk (A/K/A Annie or Ada Quiver), who were participants in the Battle of the Little Bighorn and other battles between the Sioux and U.S. Cavalry. She was a fluent Lakota speaker. Geneva explained that when she first attended elementary school at Pine Ridge at the age of 6, she only knew her Lakota name Winyan Waste (Good Woman). Due to her upbringing in a traditional Lakota environment, she was able to pass many Lakota beliefs, traditions and values on to her children and grandchildren. Geneva was also very proud of her father, who was the son of pioneer parents of Scottish-Irish descent that settled in the Norris-Wanblee area in the early 1900s. Her father used to cook Scottish griddle scones. She often told of her great-grandfather Quiver riding to her parent's home just to eat her father's cooking, especially his griddle scones. The scones became know as "Gabubu bread." Eventually, families in the Wanblee area and throughout the reservation were eating Gabubu bread. She attributed the popularity of the bread on the reservation to her father's cooking. In 1943, shortly after she graduated from high school, Geneva traveled to Alliance, Nebraska to baby sit for Bernard and Florine LeBeau. It was there that she met Gabriel Gonzalez, her husband of 62 years. Gabriel, of San Antonio, Texas, was serving in the U.S. Army Air Force and stationed at the Alliance Glider Base when they met. She learned to speak Spanish from her husband and his family members. After the end of WWII, they moved to Wanblee, and did seasonal farm work in the Nebraska panhandle. In 1951, Geneva and her family moved to Kadoka, where they lived until 1963. In 1963, she and her family moved to Box Elder and later to Rapid City. Geneva and her husband resided in Lakota Community Homes from 1970 to the time of her death, and were the oldest tenants in the housing subdivision. Geneva is survived by her husband, Gabriel Gonzalez of Rapid City, four sons, Mario Gonzalez of Black Hawk, Leonard Gonzalez and Larry Gonzalez of Rapid City, and John Gonzalez of Phoenix, Arizona, four daughters, Margarette Rasch, Olivia Gonzalez, Debra Wilford, and Brenda McGlynn of Rapid City, 49 grandchildren and 33 great-grandchildren. Also surviving are two sisters, Zona Brown of Pine Ridge and Florence Dillon of Denver, Colorado, and one brother William Wilcox of Rapid City. She was preceded in death by her parents, two sisters, Ollie Smith of Des Moines, N.M. and Irma Kukuk of Parker, S.D., and two brothers, Leo Wilcox of Pine Ridge and Albert Wilcox of Rapid City, one granddaughter Tammy Rasch and one great-granddaughter Haven Wilson. During her lifetime, Geneva also had several Hunka (Lakota traditionally adopted) children that included Robert Rasch of Peoria, Ill., Joseph Hogg, Jr. of Murphy, N.C., Gregory Yates of Los Angeles, Calif., Jeff Flannery of Orlando, Fla., and Jon Kilpatrick of Denver, Colorado.

Wake services were Tuesday, Aug. 15 at the Mother Butler Center. Funeral services will be at 10 a.m. Wednesday, Aug. 16 at the Mother Butler Center with the Rev. Paul Sneve officiating.

Burial will be at the Mount Cavalry Cemetery where both Christian and traditional Lakota graveside rites will be conducted. Services are under the direction of the Osheim-Catron Funeral Home.

Delane P. Stands

OGLALA - Delane P. Stands, 31, Oglala, died Wednesday, Aug. 9, in Oglala. Survivors include his wife, Carmelita Yellow Thunder, Oglala; one son, Lawrence Stands, Oglala; one daughter, Delena Stands, Oglala; his mother, Colleen Long Wolf, Oglala; five brothers, Craig Chase In Winter, Aberdeen, and Ernie Stands, Johnston Bear Robe, William Bear Robe and Monte Good Voice Flute, all of Oglala; and two sisters, Johncina Bear Robe, Oglala, and Carlene Long Wolf, Sturgis. Wake services were Aug. 11, at Brother Rene Catholic Hall in Oglala. Funeral services were Saturday, Aug. 12, at Brother Rene Catholic Hall, with the Rev. Asa Wilson officiating. Burial was at Makasan Presbyterian Cemetery in Oglala. Sioux Funeral Home of Pine Ridge was in charge of arrangements.

Sylvia Lee Shirley

DUPREE - Sylvia Lee Shirley, 56, Dupree, died Friday, Aug. 4 in Philip. Wake services were Friday, Aug. 11, at the cultural center in Eagle Butte. Funeral services were Saturday, Aug. 12, at St. John's Episcopal Church in Eagle Butte, with the Rev. Jeffry Barnes officiating. Burial was at On The Tree Cemetery near Green Grass. Oster Funeral Home of Mobridge was in charge of arrangements.

Runtento Olivia Garcia-Muchena

PINE RIDGE - Runtendo Olivia Garcia-Muchena, infant, Pine Ridge, died Sunday, Aug. 6, in Pine Ridge. Survivors include father, Shengai Muchena, Scottsbluff, Neb.; mother, Cassandra Garcia, Pine Ridge; one brother, Jesse Cruz, Pine Ridge; four sisters, Faro Muchena, Silvina Cruz, Jazmine Cruz, and Alyssa Cruz, all of Pine Ridge; maternal grandparents, David and Linda Garcia of Pine Ridge; and paternal grandparents, Olivia and Samuel Muchena, Zimbabwe. Graveside services were Aug. 11, at Red Feather Family Cemetery at Cheyenne Creek with Charles McGaa officiating.

Nine take out petitions for OST presidency

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - PINE RIDGE - In a flurry of activity, the OST council met two days last week in Allen, two days this week in Pine Ridge and a day at the casino; running parallel to the council activity are the activities of the election board in coordinating the 2006 OST election.

Halfway through the petition process, nine tribal members have taken petitions out for tribal president including current president Alex White Plume, current vice president Eileen Janis, past vice president Dennis King, current tribal attorney George Patton and first term council representative Will Peters from Pine Ridge who chairs the education committee. Denver American Horse, Larry Swalley, Gary Lays Bad and Joyce Sun Bear have also taken out petitions for president.

Wayne Weston, Frederick Cedar Face and William Shorty Brewer have taken petitions out for vice president while Lisa Adams is the only person taking out a petition for chief judge.

As of Wednesday afternoon, a total of 18 candidates had taken petitions out for council representative in Pine Ridge Village including Fred Brown, Lena Hart, Doug Bissonette, Jerry Bordeaux, Peggy Mousseau, Carol Crazy Thunder O'Rourke, Gerald Big Crow, Don Garnier, Leon Matthews, Nakina Mills, Gary Janis, Irving Provost, Ella John Carlow, Robert Palmier, Michelle Tyon, Lawrence Eagle Bull, John Mousseau

Council selects Twiss for chief of police

Grazing ordinance defeated again, Class II gaming regs accepted

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE/ALLEN - "You know, I don't expect to get selected," said James Twiss, a candidate for the chief of police position, "I don't play politics, I don't care who you are or whose son or daughter broke the law, I want to apply the law fairly to everyone."

On Monday, the Oglala Sioux tribal council listened to seven applicants for the vacant chief of police position for the Oglala Sioux Department of Public and after two rounds of balloting, selected James Twiss as the new chief of police. Twiss served in an acting capacity earlier this year and now has the position on a permanent basis with an evaluation scheduled after the first year.

The selection of Twiss hopefully clears the air around public safety; the council originally interviewed 10 applicants for the position on July 13 and selected Darla Black as the chief and Hermus John Mousseau as the alternate. Due to a problem with Black's background investigation, Mousseau was made the acting chief. In late July, the council rescinded the choice of both Black and Mousseau and re-advertised the position.

In addition to Twiss, Mousseau, Milton Bianis, Stanley Star Comes Out, Pat Mills, Stanley Little White Man, Grace Her Many Horses and Wilmer Buzz Youngman, Jr applied and participated in the interview process. Eugenio White Hawk and Marvin Afraid of Bear applied but did not come for the interview.

Each council representative had two votes in the first go around - Little White Man, Her Many Horses and Twiss received five votes each, Mills and Bianis tallied four each, Star Comes Out and Mousseau finished with two and Young Man one. The council took the top three for the second round in which Twiss received nine while Her Many Horses and Little White Man got three each.

"My top priority is getting more certified officers out on the street," said Twiss as he was being interviewed by the 15 council representatives in attendance at the council meeting on Monday in the council chambers of the Red Cloud building in Pine Ridge; "we need to have somewhere between 100 and 150 officers, right now we have 69 and we need to work at increasing salaries and benefits, today an officer goes through training at Artesia, comes back works for a while and then takes a job somewhere else where he gets higher pay and better benefits."

Lakota mother seeks to educate public about dangers of attack dogs

PINE RIDGE - On July 25, the Oglala Sioux tribal council unanimously passed ordinance 06-16 prohibiting individuals residing on the Pine Ridge from owning any unaltered or part-mix attack dogs, including pit bulls, rottweillers, and Doberman pinschers. If the dogs they do own bite, chase or attack an individual, the owner shall receive a criminal sentence not to exceed one year or a criminal fine not to exceed $5,000 or both.

The ordinance which established "Braedon's Law" makes reference to the OST law and order code which requires dogs to be kept on a leash or muzzled and not allowed to run free in the streets. The ordinance also specifies the dimensions for sheltering dogs that also takes into consideration protection from the elements.

During the council meeting, Ellen Fills Pipe and her son, Braedon Rodriguez presented emotional testimony for passage of the ordinance. Braedon was attacked by a pregnant Pit Bull while riding his four-wheeler in a field north of Sharp's Corner in 2003. A second male Pit Bull then joined in and began to maul him. Braedon required 200 stitches after he was ripped and bleeding from his head, shoulders, and back. It also took several surgeries over the last three years to repair the damage. Nothing ever happened to the owners at that time and prompted the efforts of

Twiss brings 17 years in law enforcement to the job, he started as a patrolman in Wounded Knee and Oglala, he became a sergeant in Wounded Knee then spent five years as a tribal ranger and returned to public safety to serve as captain for three years then went to the BIA as a chief of police for the Eastern Nevada agency in Owyhee, Nev. Returning to Pine Ridge after 11 months, Twiss served again as a patrolman, a sergeant and a lieutenant before serving as acting chief for 43 days early this spring. Twiss is 39, married to Mona Bush and has five children.

No one seems to have a definite figure but there have been at least 11 different police chiefs in the last ten years. In 1996, John Steele, OST president set in motion a restructuring of public safety with a review committee that included 50 people from the community and public safety, a committee representing all facets of the community. After a review and restructuring, Everett Little White Man was selected by the council to head up the new public safety in 1997. Little White Man was suspended in 1999 and since then public safety has seen Glen Gibbons, Stanley Star Comes Out, Milton Bianis, Marvin Badwound, Ron Duke, James Two Bulls, James Twiss and John Mousseau serve in the position.

"Public Safety craves stability, we need it, the lack of it affects everything," said Twiss, "during my three years as captain from 2000 through 2003 we had nine different police chiefs; the lack of stability affects morale out in the field and here at central, officers sometimes do not even want to come to work much less work at doing the best job possible."

The council met last in Allen and took a number of actions including: voted 11-1 to require all chartered organizations to have a qualified internal auditor to ensure that tribal and federal regulations are followed, voted 9-3 to require a forensic audit of the Oglala Sioux Lakota Housing to ensure compliance with both tribal and federal regulations, voted 13-0 with one not voting to ask that Nancy Davis be transferred out of the Aberdeen Indian Health Service regional office or that she be prohibited from working on any health care related matter concerning the Oglala Sioux Tribe and the health care facilities or clinics on Pine Ridge Reservation;

Voted 15-0 to honor Johnson Holy Rock and Rhonda Two Eagle for their dedication and strong leadership role to improve and satisfy the housing needs of the membership of the Oglala Sioux Tribe; 15-0 to give them both a tribal flag and a star quilt.

Also in Allen the council voted two for and 11 against a new grazing ordinance proposed by Ruth Brown and the land committee; voted 11-4 to advertise the executive director position after appeal process is completed and that a masters degree is required; 15-0 supporting the financing, acquisition, construction and completion of a nursing home for Pine Ridge Reservation; voted 10-2 authorizing a timber permit policy statement ordinance; voted 12-2 with one not voting to put Austin Watkins on the land committee; voted 13-0 with two not voting to rescind the action taken by the council on May 31 that put seven terminated public safety employees on suspension with pay until an appeals hearing and put it in the hands of the chief of police and voted 12-1 to approve the Class II gaming regulations.

as well as the arena director. He said, "It was one of our biggest powwows, yet. We served 500-600 people during meals. In the past we had 3-4 drums and this year we had 11. Half of the drum groups were from the Pine Ridge reservation.

Three specials were held, including one for tiny tots, a men's fancy shawl dance and a rabbit dance special. Some of the drum groups in attendance included, Red Leaf, Eagle Voice, Charging Horse, Eagle Nest, Porcupine, Lecala Wakan, and Cheyenne Creek of Oglala.

There was no royalty contest for the pow-wow, however, there were a number of royalty who attended. Francis Morrison of Norris was the emcee for the event. Black Elk explained that Morrison was tempted to tell Oglala jokes but had to restrain himself.

Black Elk said that he would like to extend his appreciation to the dancers, singers and families involved. The pow-wow was supported by donations from several RST programs, however, more donations are needed in order to pay some of the drums who participated.

The pow-wow season on the northern plains is winding down with the annual Rosebud Fair and Rodeo this weekend in Rosebud, and concluding with the United Tribes and Technical College in Bismarck in early September.

Assault on Braedon

Braedon's family to support the legislation.

It was a nightmare for Fills Pipe when her other son was attacked recently and the family had to relive the horror of seeing another family member hurt.

Fills Pipe said, "Just two weeks ago, my four year old son was bitten by a Pit Bull on a school campus. He, along with his cousins, were sitting on the porch and he had just walked into the yard when the Pit Bull came out of the darkness and went for my baby."

She said that in recent years, there seems to be an increase in the number of such attack dogs because society sees it as cool to own one. The outside influence is due to television and music which portrays such ownership as being in. The dogs look cute when they are puppies and they look harmless, but the owners fail to educate themselves on the genetic makeup of the animals.

In Braedon's case, Fill Pipe noted that the OST Attorney General's office has not filed any kind of charges on behalf of her son, although their office has had the charges in their possession since a week after Braedon was released from the Rapid City Regional Hospital in August 2003.

She said that she was told that the statute of limitations has expired even though the Attorney General's office had the complaints the entire time.

In her other son's case, he received puncture wounds in his calf and behind the knee. Fortunately, the dog was current on his vaccinations and her son did not have to undergo any rabies shots. The owner agreed to move the dog out of the country, and if they do not "Braedon's Law" goes into effect on August 24 according to Fill Pipe. The owners will have to move the dog off the reservation or be charged with criminal violation of the ordinance.

Fill Pipe is working to educate the public about the dangers of vicious attack dogs by telling the story of her children's anguish. They were simply doing what all children do when they wish to play outside, yet, they were the victims of attack dogs which should have properly restrained by their owners. The owners were not charged with any criminal violations; however, the new ordinance will seek to rectify future criminal violations.

Apparently, the OST council has discussed the full ramifications of OST ordinance 06-16. Such things as its enforcement, funding, and related preparations were discussed and the ordinance will be in effect on Aug. 24 which is 30 days from the original legislation.

The following testimony was given to the Oglala Sioux Tribal council on July 25 and is published below partially.

Good Afternoon, Mr. President, Madame Secretary, Ladies and Gentlemen of the Council. My name is Ellen Fillspipe and I come from the Two Bulls-Broken Nose-Bad Heart Bull Tiyospayes of Oglala. My children are a part of the Jumping Eagle-Looks Twice Tiyospaye's of Manderson.

On July 29, 2003, my son Braedon Rodriguez, then 5 years of age, was out visiting his paternal grandparents in Sharps Corner. He had been helping the children next door run the horses in. Then, the four-wheeler he had been riding on the back of, ran out of gas.

While waiting for the other child to get help and gas, Braedon was pulled off the four-wheeler by a pregnant female pit bull and was mauled. She was joined by a male pit bull, both of which had been allowed to roam free on several properties.

An adult in the house, noticed what was happening and attempted to pull the dogs off of Braedon. When she couldn't, she ran to get her brother, the owner of the pregnant female Pit Bull.

They tried using their hands and shovels and sticks to beat the dogs off, but could not pull the dogs off. Finally, they got the dogs off and called for the police and an ambulance and Braedon was taken back to his grandparents next door.

The first officer on-scene, relayed Braedon to meet the ambulance. His face and head mangled from the dogs. He also had wounds to his arm, entire backside, and his legs; he also had puncture wounds on each side of his windpipe. His entire body was covered in blood and mud; he was almost unrecognizable to those who know him.

Braedon was stabilized, cleaned up and transferred to Rapid City Regional Hospital, in Rapid City. He had to undergo two emergency surgeries that resulted in over 200 stitches to his head, face, arm and the doctor's reattached both ears. He was in Regional for over a week. Luckily, the injuries to his right eye and ears did not leave any lasting effects.

Upon awakening from the first emergency surgery, Braedon asked if the dogs had been killed yet; when he was told no, he asked for help "to do something so that no other little kid like me gets hurt".

Due to the owner of the female Pit Bull not being able to prove his dog had updated vaccinations, Braedon had to undergo the seven shot Rabies Series. Two of the series were put directly into each wound during the emergency surgeries. The other five left him unable to walk for a day and a half each time because they were so painful.

He has since had eight reconstructive surgeries and will undergo at least five more surgeries before the age of 11. As a result of the attacks, he still attends therapy twice a week.

After he was released from the hospital, Braedon, still heavily bandaged and on pain medication, his eyes almost swollen shut, insisted he come with me to the OST Attorney General's Office to file the complaints. Statements were filed along with pictures of what Braedon had survived and we even provided research, using the OST Law & Order Code, of other possible charges that could be filed against the dog owners.

To this day, no one has been formally charged. The complaints have been in the OST Attorney General's Office since the second week of August 2003. I checked monthly to see if any warrants had been issued. We have gone through two attorney generals and still nothing. Now the statute of limitations has run out….and nothing was ever done by the OST Attorney General's office.

We have been ridiculed by the dog owners, saying, "why are they making a big deal…it was just a little dog bite"? Not once did the dog owners call to see how he was doing or offer any support of any kind. Nor did they offer any apology. Did Braedon have to die in order for someone to do their job? For someone to accept responsibility for what had happened to my five year old child?

Braedon's medical & therapy bills now total over more than $250,000. Thanks to Medicaid, his bills have all been paid. But what happens when we no longer qualify for Medicaid? My son and our family live with this every day, trying to help him deal with all his fears, his nightmares, the pain and re-living the attack after every surgery, the pain he suffers when he grows and his skin doesn't stretch because of all the scars.

Is it the lack of funding for more animal control employees? Is it keeping the number our pet population down? Is it the lack of educating our officers in the OST Law & Order Code and the Animal Code? I asked the current OST Attorney General to show us where the system failed my son, so we can correct it, so another family doesn't have to go through this the way we did. Is it us, as humans, not providing the care and attention that our animals need? Did you know that even a change in your animals eating habits, whether it is a change in the type or amount of food it receives, can cause any animal to become vicious?

This is what he has wanted to do for the past three years….to make sure that nobody ever got hurt the way he did. I can only hope you understand the seriousness of this issue. And I hope you can help make his dream a reality by banning Pit Bulls, Rottweilers, and Doberman Pinschers from this entire reservation. Thank you.

and Richard Bark.

Wakpamni candidates include Tom Conroy, Kim Killer, Richard Mousseau, Joann Sierra, Vienna Red Feather, Charles Pourier, Sandra Two Lance, Walt Big Crow, Tammy Hunts Horse and Lonnie Bettelyoun.

Oglala/Whiteclay candidates include Frank Two Bulls Sr., Deb Mousseau, Valerie Janis, Darlene Helper, Will Garnier, Wendell Youngman, Jason Jake Little, Gerald One Feather and Jackson Ten Fingers.

Porcupine includes Bridget Mills, Randy Lays Bad, Philip Good Crow, David Pourier, Bernard White Face, Marlin Moon Weston and Harvey Iron Boy.

Wounded Knee candidates include: Eldon Forney, Garfield Apple, Garfield Steele, Jeanette Eagle Hawk, Melvin Adams and Kathy Janis.

Additional candidates taking out petitions include for Pass Creek-Lydia Bear Killer, Ron Duke and Clarence Yellow Hawk; for Eagle Nest-Billy Amiotte, Jim Meeks, Phylis Wilcox, Tom Poor Bear, Edward Randall and Bruce Brown; for Medicine Root-Daryl Mesteth, Carrie Romero and Austin Watkins and for LaCreek-Mary Poor Thunder, Kim Clausen and Craig Dillon.

The deadline for petitions is Tuesday, Aug. 29 at 5 p.m. One change, potential candidates now do not have to come up with a third money order of $26 for the federal background check.

The primary election is set for Tuesday, Oct. 3 with the general set for Tuesday Nov. 7. This will be only the second time the tribal membership have voted for a chief judge. The constitution was changed in 1997 that required a vote of the membership for chief judge. Patrick Lee defeated Diane Zephier in the first election in 1998. In 2002 there was only one candidate and Cheryl Three Stars ended up as the chief judge.

Two presidents have been removed in the last seven years; in 2000 the council suspended Harold Salway and never scheduled a hearing, Wilbur between Lodges served out his term and in 2006, Cecelia Fire thunder was impeached and Alex White Plume is serving out the term.

Fire Thunder's appeal to supreme court denied

PINE RIDGE - "It is clear that this court does not have jurisdiction to entertain a Writ of Mandamus - although we may be sympathetic to the Plaintiff's/Appellant's cause for a speedy hearing on the issues, this court does not have jurisdiction" said the decision handed down Monday, Aug. 14th, by the Supreme Court of the Oglala Lakota Nation in response to Cecelia Fire Thunder's request to reinstate the temporary restraining order issued by the lower court that reinstated her to the position of president pending a hearing to review the issues.

The court ordered adjudged and decreed that a Special Judge be appointed in order that Fire Thunder can have her complaint for a restraining order heard post haste.

Fire Thunder was suspended by the council on May 30th and impeached on June 29th. Fire thunder went to court citing the councils disregard for their own policies and procedures, in particular formally filing the complaint after she was suspended, not giving her the formal complaint with backup materials until the day of the hearing and impeaching her with less than a two thirds vote.

Lisa Adams, the chief judge originally granted Fire thunder a temporary restraining order and reinstated her to the president's position, later on that same day, she vacated all of the orders except the one setting up a hearing for July 28. Adams eventually recused herself and started the process to find a special judge, the hearing was postponed. At this time there is no special judge or hearing date set.

Fire Thunder has stated privately that she is going to run again for tribal president but has yet to take out a petition.

Ms. Rosebud Pageant held during RST fair week

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - Despite being a bit uncomfortable from the day's heat in the SGU multi-purpose building, the creativity and enthusiasm of the thirteen young Sicangu women competing for Sicangu royalty in the Ms. Rosebud Pageant was very much in evidence. The new Little Miss Rosebud, Ms. Teen Rosebud, and Ms. Rosebud will be presented on Friday after the grand entry.

The pageant coordinator was Shere Wright who is the current reigning Ms. He Sapa.

The activities began early in the day at 4:00 p.m. on August 21 and ran well into the evening. Contestants were awarded points if they were in full regalia. The judges for the annual event were Rosebud police chief, Charles Red Crow, Frances Gordon, Dixie Big Eagle, and Tina Martinez.

The agenda included a public speaking segment, a personal interview, dance competition and talent competition. The emcee during the talent competition portion of the evening was the 2005-06 Ms. Rosebud, Willow Marshall of Rosebud. Her parents are Harvey and Linda Marshall.

Tyler Makes Room For Them, 15, of Antelope community wore a beautiful white traditional dress with colorful horses. Her parents are Marty and Ophelia Makes Room For Them. She was competing for Ms. Teen Rosebud and during the talent competition she explained the history of the RST flag that was designed by Lloyd B. One Star, Sr. She said, "I want to represent the tribe and let them know we exist."

The girls competing for the title of Little Miss Rosebud included, JaKayla Hesse, Darian Quick Bear, Sydney Horse Looking, Manitula Brave, and Rhaya Big Crow. The Miss Teen Rosebud contestants included, Tyler Makes Room For Them, Olowan Win Bad Hand, Toni Tamayo, Brianne Herman, Mary Douville, Jamee Meclison, and Reann Kills In Water. The only contest for Ms. Rosebud was Simone Crow Good Voice.

Simone Marie Crow Good Voice, a senior at TCHS, is the daughter of Millie Crow Good Voice of Parmelee. She said, "After high school, I want to spend one year at SGU, and then transfer to USD. After that, I would like to study to be a pediatrician." Being the only contestant competing for the title of Ms. Rosebud, Simone will likely be crowned after the grand entry during the first evening session of the Rosebud Fair on Friday.

Brianne Herman of Antelope community is the daughter of Hattie Dunham and Bryan Herman. She is in the 10th grade at TCHS and appeared upbeat and positive about her chances of winning the title of Ms. Teen Rosebud. During the talent segment, Brianne explained her involvement in the Indigenous Games in Denver and he role with Team South Dakota. He showed off her jerseys, a jacket, trophies and beadwork.

During the talent competition, Toni Tamayo, a freshman at TCHS sang a hand drum song. Her parents are Mary and Steve of Rosebud. She said, "I am doing this for my grandma, Buelah Buckman of Council Bluffs, IA. She is originally from Milk's Camp." Toni was flashing a pleasant and hopeful smile as she was obviously proud to be a part of the festivities.

Olowan Win Bad Hand of Two Strike community sat outside prior to the competition with her father, Pat Bad Hand, of the prominent Red Leaf singers. She was practicing the Lakota National Anthem which had been authored by her grandfather Ellis Chips. Olowan Win's mother, Mary Bad Hand was also in attendance.

South Dakota ordered to comply with voting rights act

ST. LOUIS, Mo. - The American Civil Liberties Union on Aug. 22 welcomed a final federal appeals court decision affirming the redrawing of legislative district lines in South Dakota to ensure there is no discrimination against Native American voters.

The decision came in Bone Shirt v. Hazeltine, a case originally brought by the ACLU on behalf of four Native American voters in December 2001, after the South Dakota legislature redrew the boundaries of the state's 35 legislative districts.

"This is a victory for all South Dakotans because it reaffirms the importance of fairness at the ballot box, which benefits everyone, Indians and non-Indians alike, said Bryan Sells a staff attorney with the ACLU Voting Rights Project and lead counsel in the case.

Alfred Bone Shirt of St. Francis who was named in the original suit said, "The Lakota audience knows that there is racism in all facets in South Dakota. With their expertise, it painted the true nature of South Dakota in discriminating against Indians.., everyone of voting age should register to vote regardless of party and use the leverage that was accomplished by the ACLU. It will not take away from our sovereignty. "

A year ago, on August 19, 2005, U.S. District Judge Karen E. Schreier ordered South Dakota officials to implement a redistricting plan that was fair to Native American voters, but the state refused and appealed the decision. Schreier s ruling was upheld today in a unanimous 3-0 ruling by the Eighth Circuit in St. Louis.

"All voters want the integrity of their community preserved, not fractured, by redistricting. This decision will ensure that legislative districts in South Dakota keep communities together and will give Indian voters the opportunity to elect representatives of their choice. When citizens have confidence that their vote counts and that their voices will be heard, then democracy works better for everyone, said Sells.

The Eighth Circuit ruling in the Bone Shirt case is the second decision issued by the federal appeals court this year upholding the rights of Native American voters. In an earlier case, Cottier v. City of Martin, the court ruled in favor of Native Americans who claimed that the City of Martin had violated the Voting Rights Act and the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments by drawing city council districts that dilute Indian voting strength.

"This decision will give our Lakota people an opportunity to elect our candidate of choice to the state legislature, said Bone Shirt, a named plaintiff in the case. Discrimination against Indians has been part of South Dakota politics for so long that it is only through cases like this that we have been able see any positive change."

South Dakota is one of 16 states covered in whole or in part by Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, which requires specific jurisdictions to get federal approval before making changes to their election laws and procedures.

In 2002, a three-judge court held that the state had failed to submit its 2001 redistricting plan to federal officials for pre-approval. The state then submitted the plan to the U.S. Department of Justice, which cleared it for implementation, but the ACLU said it was discriminatory nonetheless because it created a 90 percent supermajority of Indian voters by "packing" them into one district. Judge Schreier later agreed with this claim and in a lengthy 144-page opinion issued September 15, 2004, she gave the state an opportunity to fashion a new plan that did not discriminate against Indian voters. After the state refused to do so, the judge issued her August 19, 2005 remedial order that new lines be drawn to comply with the Voting Rights Act. It is this decision that was affirmed today.

"This decision clearly shows that Congress did the right thing last month when it voted to reauthorize the temporary provisions of the Voting Rights Act," said Sells.

Patrick Duffy of the Rapid City, South Dakota, law firm of Duffy and Duffy also served as counsel on the case.

Our views

We have the ink for the blueprint for successful economic development

The entrepreneurial spirit that goes into small business development in Lakota country or Lakol Oyanke needs to be erected one block at a time. Lakota-owned small business is probably the way of the future and most desirable in order to build a solid network of cafes, stores, and other creative ventures.

Not the kind that comes to town and quickly takes our money, and does not give back to the Lakota community. But one which is destined to stay, make a positive cultural impression and serve as a spring board, a demonstration project of sorts, and give back to the people.

The Lakota Oyate of the Tetowan have traditionally been entrepreneurs going back hundreds of thousands of years. Our ancestors bartered with each other and knew what it meant to network with other campfires.

We know this from the stores of food and agricultural items which have often been excavated by archeologist who should leave such things undisturbed.

And today that is still there in the small entrepreneurs we see dotted through Indian country with the vendors from along side the road, to the stands at the pow wows to the individuals who walked their crafts around to sell.

Undoubtedly, as time went by the Lakota branched out and roamed farther away from home and traded with other allies within the Oceti Sakowin or seven campfires. There is evidence that the Lakota went to Cherry Creek in Colorado during harvest time and picked cherries and other fruit.

Most likely they also gathered cherry saplings for use in ceremony and in kniknick which is a mixture of tobacco and cherry wood bark.

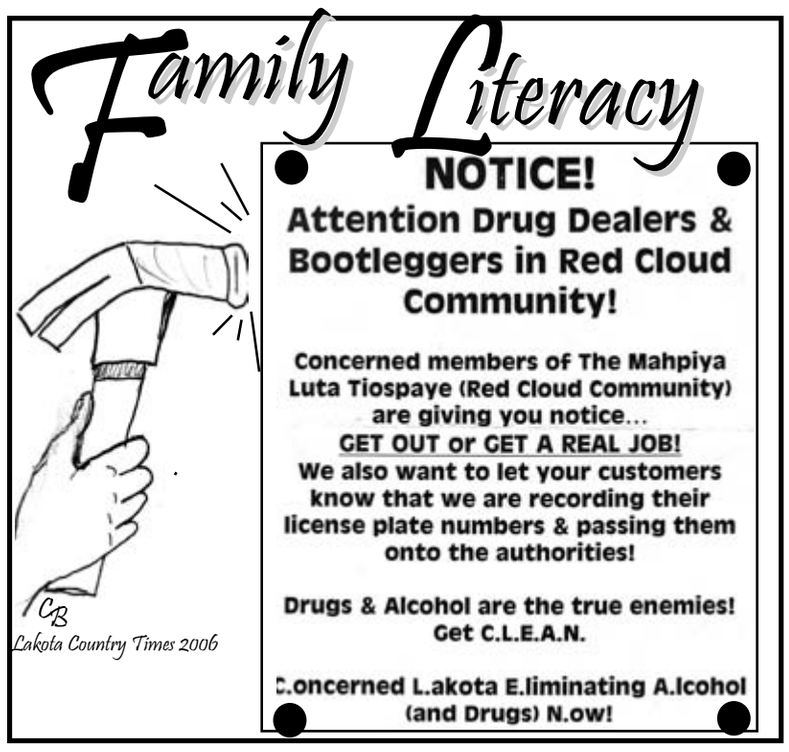
There are rumors that the Lakota traded for sea shells from the west coast and their contacts with southern tribes may have resulted in cooking utensils and some weaponry.

Obviously, they also traded pipestone and maybe even dried buffalo meat which would have plentiful.

The Lakota were a powerful nation and possessed resources that were supposed to keep us connected in a good way to Ina Makoce to use a term that Charmaine White Face might use. Those tremendous resources were in the form of the sacred he sapa and which was supposed to sustain our future generations.

We have moved on and adapted to the voice of a new generation. We still need the blueprint for successful economic development in Lakota country.

We need young voices and a new energy that will recognize that in order to survive without our Black Hills, we are going to have to create small business ventures that are uniquely our own, not someone who comes around and exploits the immediate needs of our people by selling fried foods that are too fattening or who fill our stores with soda pop and potato chips and other high fat foods which are not good for us.



There is a strong foundation of being an entrepreneur in our communities and it takes commitment to make it fruitful.

Building strong communities

The editorial cartoon space depicts a flyer that was sent to the Lakota Country Times to be published.

It is from Red Cloud community members who want to take a stand against drug dealers in their communities.

If we want clean communities, community members taking a stand such as this flyer's message could make a difference.

Things to empower yourself

Establishing healthy boundaries

"You don't have to attend every argument you are invited to."

By Patty Pourier

Quote from Hazelton Recovery Lecture.

Opportunities to align yourself with family against other family members, the workplace invitation to take inventory of co-workers faults, these situations are no win. I did not always know this. I grew up with dependant and co-dependant behaviors.

I still have them and have to continue to address them- daily. Knowing what is my business and what is not my business is a lesson in detachment I continue to repeat.

To realize that I do not have to participate in any argument unless I choose has been a healthy step to me in detachment.

Other people have to be responsible for their choices and the consequences of them, and I have to be responsible for my choices and their consequences.

A dysfunctional family creates the circle of chaos in which the centrifugal force keeps people captured in the whirlwind, like a tornado growing with strength.

Deciding to jump out of the circle of chaos is not an option without establishing healthy boundaries.

I had a counselor tell me that chaos is to a dysfunctional family like chocolate is to a chocoholic.

I think that describes the chaotic circle of dysfunction well.

When a family member does jump out of the circle of chaos, other family members are uncomfortable.

The old family dynamics are disturbed. There may be invitations to arguments that some family members no longer choose to attend. The urgency, the drive to have them join the familiar unhealthy circle can be very strong.

Healthy boundaries are just that "healthy." There are visible and invisible boundaries.

Boundaries start with the layer of our skin that creates the boundary for our bodies. Sexual abuse is a violation of this boundary.

Have you ever had someone get too close to you for your comfort when talking to you?

The boundary they violate is invisible, but is certainly there. It makes one uncomfortable to have your personal "space" violated.

The emotional boundaries in a dysfunctional family are usually unclear. They can be intertwined with each other. They can become like a ball of yarn, overlapping and mixed up. It starts out innocently enough.

We are born to a family unit. When children's needs are not met or their boundaries are violated (many times as a result of alcohol and drug abuse), unhealthy patterns develop.

As adults we are responsible for re-establishing healthy boundaries through the choices we make. One way to start is to choose not to enter into an argument when you are invited.

Being conscience of the choice is half the battle.

Then being aware that you may receive numerous invitations to join the argument may also be helpful in declining the invitations.

Unhealthy people can be very persuasive, and manipulative in their recruitment of allies for arguments.

The cunning ways is only limited to the hosts intelligence and imagination.

Just for today, I am choosing peace through creating healthy boundaries that will lead to serenity and love.

I may not be able to do it for a lifetime, but I can choose to concentrate on positive matters and give my energy to positive thoughts, today.

I can choose through healthy boundaries not to be used by others to support their co-dependant behaviors.

It is up to me.

Faith helps with struggles

Dear Editor:

When we go through the battles of life we struggle with it all and it seems like no one cares, but God cares. Here is God's word to help us along in life.

I am sorry for not writing another article for the paper, the last one was for Mothers Day and was going to write one for Fathers Day but too many things came up and I could not sit down and get it done.

I went through a time of rejoicing when three of my granddaughters graduated from high school and another who graduated from the eighth grade in May.

Then came a time of sorrow when my youngest daughter passed away the end of May. I had a time of healing and comfort and getting close to God at a camp meeting in June. Then a time of disappointment when my car quit and no money to get it fixed in July. But I did not tell anyone about no money to get it fixed.

Instead I took it to the Lord Jesus and told him all about it and asked for his help, then I waited. One month after my car quit the man who gave me the car called and said he heard that it quit and asked what happened? After I told him, he said he was praying about it ever since he heard and God wanted him to let me use of the cars he has and take mine home and get it fixed and bring it back to me and then take his car back. When I heard that, it was a time of praising the Lord, and thanking that man of God for listening and when God spoke, he heard. Because when I was praying I was telling the Lord I had no money to get my car fixed and wanted it fixed because it is a 4-wheel drive one that can handle these roads and I never had to walk home anymore when I got stuck.

When we are praying we never know how God is going to answer. He answers in his time not in ours, and sometimes he doesn't, and when that happens we need to pray and ask him what is in the way of our prayer not getting answered, maybe what we are praying for is not good for us or we need to ask for forgiveness from God and the one we wronged.

Here is God's warning for how we live. (Be careful, or your hearts will be weighed down with dissipation, drunkenness and the anxieties of life, and that day will close on you unexpectedly like a trap. For it will come upon all those who live on the face of the whole earth.

Be always on the watch, and pray that you may be able to escape all that is about to happen, and that you may be able to stand before the son of man.

Northern Perspectives

The end of summer; assessing the impact of tourism

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

It feels like the incredibly rising gas prices may have cut into the tourist trade on the Rosebud reservation. I can imagine that is the case on Pine Ridge also. Other than the large groups of Christian and private school students coming to assist in many capacities, it generally appeared that the flow of traffic was less than previous years.

It will be interesting to see it anyone at the tribal tourism office is able to provide a snapshot of the actual impact that tourist may have had on the reservation.

There did not seem to be any tour buses at the Rosebud Casino in any large numbers. During May and June it was reported that casino gross profits were down and that may have been a trend for the region.

It will be equally as revealing to see what the state tourism trade may have experienced also in terms of visitors and their related spending for lodging, food, gas and incidentals. Much of this information will probably be forthcoming once Labor Day has gone by and such agencies are able to look back in hindsight and conduct an analysis of profit and loss in the industry.

On the Rosebud, some new small businesses popped up over the summer and they will likely increase local travel into Mission for services.

The Lighthouse on Main Street owned by Ray Stewart is a new computer service and sales store. A new laundry mat was opened across from the NAPA store called the Express Laundry and the new Family Dollar store, of course, was a big hit when it had its grand opening.

There is a new lumber yard and new Rosebud Log Home business opening also and more information will likely be available through advertisements about their business.

All in all, the addition of any new enterprise is good for Rosebud people.

It would be especially exciting to see some young Sicangu Lakota entrepreneurs take the lead and work hard to make that almighty dollar. There is such a need for the young to get into leadership roles whether in business, education, medicine, politics, or law.

The new hotel and café west of Kyle appears to be rather popular also. The Lakota Prairie Resort is a oasis on the prairie. We had lunch there and it is great to see such a quaint hotel and café. I always say that such places serve as great role models for young Lakota entrepreneurs who want to get their businesses off the ground.

The Alliance for Tribal Tourism Advocates in Rapid City could also provide a sense of how tourism panned out for them. They work with several reservations and may be able to assess how many tours and tour buses they may have arranged to visit any of the Lakota reservations in the state.

On the Rosebud, there are very few places to get a healthy and wholesome home cooked meal and that may be an area that some young entrepreneur may want to explore and conduct a feasibility study.

The service industry like restaurants, cafes, delicatessens and coffee shops are apparently difficult businesses to make it in as it takes hard work, commitment and relatively lean profits.

Places like the All Stop in Rosebud and the Antelope Country Inn in Mission are the only two places where one can experience a sit down meal. There is not what you would call a fine dining restaurant in the area where one can bring friends and family and spend a leisurely couple of hours in the evening at dinner time.

White folks call it dinner and Lakota and rural people call it supper. Speaking of food preparation, the Lakota call it "lolihan" and it refers to not only the gathering of foods for the meal but also the preparation of it.

Lakota people pray with food prior to eating like many other cultures as a way to give thanks for "tunkasila" for its sustenance. Often times, someone who is versed in Lakota will be given a plate of food which he will pray with and place in a private location for those who have gone to the spirit world beforehand. It is what makes Lakota people all the more unique.

There are plenty of places like the Ampride, Gus Stop and Buches in Mission, the Paul Mart in Rosebud and some of the smaller C-stores where one can purchase deep fried foods like chicken, fries, potato wedges, etc.

Such foods obviously have to be eaten in moderation as they are contributing to obesity and the potential for diabetes among Lakota people.

During the week, the Paul Mart is known for its excellent chili and other soups. The fried chicken is also delicious.

The All Stop in Rosebud offers home cooked lunch specials and attracts a significant working crowd. It also serves a full selection of other menu items.

Finally, 180 miles away from Sicangu Oyanke, on west North Street in Rapid City there is the new C.J's Tacos which is creating excitement and talk among those who want a traditional Lakota meal.

They also serve a taco salad and wojapi for those who long for a traditional Lakota meal. The price is $6.95 for a meal and it is apparently well worth it.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Guest Column

Mentally ill in prison

By Hazel Bonner
Guest Columnist

The November Coalition has launched a campaign to keep mentally ill inmates out of solitary confinement. They tell the story of Ray Ortiz who was placed in a tiny solitary-confinement cell.

He was deprived of daylight and human contact as a way of controlling the symptoms of his mental illness. (See "Campaigners Fight to Keep Mentally Ill out of Solitary Confinement," by Michelle Chen, August 18, 2006. See also, http//www.november.org.)

The South Dakota State Prison locks mentally ill inmates up in their Security Housing Unit, the "Shoe" on a routine basis. They are held in confinement 23 ½ hours per day-longer than any other SHU. Of course, they are difficult inmates because of their mental illnesses.

Mentally ill inmates at the South Dakota Women's Prison are routinely placed in segregation and confined away from the general prison population. While it may keep other inmates and guards safer, it does nothing to assist the inmate.

Ortiz recalls how his time spent in isolation allowed his bipolar disorder and a borderline personality disorder to consume his mind until he contemplated suicide. Ortiz said, "You're left with your demons all by yourself."

On Aug. 16, New York Governor George Pataki vetoed a bill that would have banned solitary confinement for prisoners with severe mental illness. In New York and around the country thousands of mentally ill inmates are routinely locked in isolation cells.

Chen states, "In solitary confinement, they are detained for at least 23 hours a day in settings that survivors have described as intolerable for any human being, and especially devastating to a person with mental illness. The desolate condition-which many activists deep a human rights concern for all inmates-are sometimes compounded by abusive guards, food deprivation and physical restraints."

The American Correctional Association passed a resolution on Aug. 13, 2003 that would require treatment of the mentally ill in jails and prisons. They said.

WHERAS, the Bureau of Justice Statistics estimates that more than 16 percent of adults incarderated in U.S. jails and prison have a mental illness; and WHERAS, The office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention reports that more than 20 percent of youth in the juvenile justice system have serious mental health problems and many more have co-occuring mental health and substance abuse disorders."

The bill supported by ACA was called the Mentally Ill offender Treatment and Crime reduction Act. That act was signed into law on October 30, 2004.

In spite of this legislation the American Correctional Association (ACA) found that the state-prison inpatient psychiatric program has enough beds to treat only about a tenth of the mentally Ill inmate population. The few prisons that offer special treatment services inside their solitary confinement units can accommodate only a few dozen.

In addition to inmates placed in the SHU, there are many inmates with serious mental illness locked in jails in this country. In 1996 a publication entitled Diverting the Mentally Ill from Jail was published. It stated, "Over 600,000 inmates with serious mental illnesses are admitted to U.S. jails each year. …Many of those charged with nonviolent crimes could be diverted to community based mental health programs."

Dawn Around Him was locked in the Pennington County Jail for months, never receiving the anti-psychotic medications prescribed to her prior to her being placed in jail. Now she has received 15 years in the SDWP. Hopefully she is now receiving some treatment, though it is unlikely.

Community based mental health programs have received less and less funding from the Federal government.

The Human Rights Watch advocates diversion programs to place mentally ill offenders into treatment programs as an alternative to incarceration. Allison Parker, acting director of US programs for HRW said recently, "Obviously prison is not the right place for someone who is seriously mentally ill."

Ortiz now works as a mental health advocate with the legal group Urban Justice Center. He helps lead the campaign to keep mentally ill prisoners out of solitary lockdown. He says, "Take the Shoe away: now what do we do with them?...Now we have to have a plan, now we have to start doing something you see. Before we used to hide them in solitary confinement.

Placing mentally ill inmates in confinement is another of the amazing acts of cowardice in the land of the free and the brave.

Red Cloud opens golf season with three straight wins

Sierra, Morgan lead Crusaders to victories at St. Thomas More quad, Red Cloud Invitational, West River Conference meet

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Red Cloud opened the 2006 high school golf season with a win Friday at the St. Thomas More quadrangular at the Elks golf course in Rapid City. Montana Sierra, a freshman at Red Cloud, took individual honors with an 83.

With a team score of 714, the Crusaders squeezed out a one stroke win over the host Cavaliers who finished with a 715. Custer was third with 771 while Little Wound did not have enough golfers for a team score.

"It was a great way to open the season," said Lenny Clifford, Red Cloud coach, "and to have a freshman step up and earn medalist honors in the first meet was an added bonus."

A.B. Morgan, a Red Cloud junior, scored an 85, he's been playing on the Crusader varsity since he was in the eighth grade. Joe Richards finished with a 90, Cory Mills 101, Geoffrey Black Feather 102 and Mike Twiss 110.

Little Wound was led by Napolean Lays Bad's 94; he was followed by Michael Lays Bad 100 and Josh Mousseau 111.

Morgan stepped up with a 79 for individual honors on Tuesday in Gordon in the Red Cloud Invitational and the West River Conference Invitational. Red Cloud's team total of 332 earned the team title in both meets on Tuesday; Little Wound and Custer took second in the Red Cloud Invitational with 363 while Little Wound was second in the West River Invitational and Bennett County was third with a 443.

Alex Prue, Ernie Whipple, and Tiny Man Lafferty made up the Todd County School Team.

Right: Napeleon Lays Bad, a senior of Little Wound High School lead with a 94. Left: A.B. Morgan, a Red Cloud junior, scored an 85. He has been with Red Cloud since junior high.

Golfers from Red Cloud, Pine Ridge, Little Wound, Todd County, Bennett County and St. Francis competed in the West River Conference while Custer joined all of those teams for the Red Cloud Invitational.

Joe Richards and Mike Twiss helped Red Cloud with 83's while Montana Sierra finished with an 87. Cory Mills carved out a 93, Geoffrey Black Feather 103 and Dustin Brewer 104.

Little Wound was led by Michael Lays Bad 86, Josh Mousseau tallied an 88, Catlin Clifford 89, Napolean Lays Bad 100 and Donnie Whirlwind Horse 134.

Tiny Man Lafferty led Todd County with an 86, Alex Prue and Ernie Whipple each finished with a 91.

St. Francis and Pine Ridge each fielded two golfers as Taylor Brushbreaker led the Warriors with a 94 and Austin Prue scored a 113; Joe Keith led the Thorpes with a 105 and Eric Long chipped in a 112.

Red Cloud travels to Custer on Thursday and to Spearfish on Monday for the Pre-regional meet for Class A. Pine Ridge will be at Lead on Tuesday and travel to Mission for the Todd County Invitational on Thursday, Aug. 31.

KINI 96.1 FM is sporting new equipment

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - On a recent visit to KINI, station manager, Richard Iyotte, was at the control board and in control of the airwaves. He gladly paused for a bit and graciously spoke of the new state of the art automated digital equipment which had been purchased by St. Francis Mission. Iyotte introduced Troy Manning of Calhoun Communications of Sioux City, IA who explained that his firm has been providing the engineering consulting for several years now to KINI. During this particular trip to St. Francis he and a co-worker had been at the station since Sunday installing the new digital equipment.

It is a pivotal time for Lakota radio programming in the state, as others such as KILI FM in Kyle are also gearing up for the new school year and winter months. KINI has been fortunate as it has endeavored to be responsive to some new changes in format and program delivery.

High school sports, the LNI tournament in Rapid City and other cultural programming will occupy the air waves as KINI delivers quality programming to the Rosebud.

Iyotte said, "I'm proud of the step up. It is better for the 'rez.' The system here is more modern and newer than other stations close by." The station has also been undergoing some interior improvements in its physical appearance.

KINI FM station manager, Richard Iyotte, explains the state of the art equipment which was recently purchased by the Rosebud Education Society in order to upgrade program delivery. The equipment is all digital and is being installed by an engineering firm from Sioux City, Iowa. Photo by Archie Beauvais.

During winter storms or when there is 'down time' and something has to be repaired at KINI, Manning says that it has been his firm which has been providing that work. Over the years, KINI has been a valuable resource for tribal members on the Rosebud in broadcasting road conditions and weather forecasts. When that service is interrupted most people seem to be aware of the repairs that might be occurring.

The automated equipment that is being installed was manufactured by Scott Studios of Texas and they will be providing technical assis-

Some prosecutors, victims seeking justice outside military system

Elk files lawsuit against military using 1868 treaty

By Martha Mendoza
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - Dissatisfied with the military's handling of sexual assault cases involving recruiters, some local prosecutors and victims are challenging the misconduct on their own, charging everything from a violation of an Indian treaty to racketeering.

Most such cases are handled administratively by the military - for example, 13 of the 19 Air Force recruiters whose misconduct was confirmed since 2004 received letters of reprimand in their personnel files and fines that ranged from $200 to $1,200.

In seeking greater penalties, victims and local authorities have taken unusual tacks.

In South Dakota, a young Oglala Sioux woman, Laveeta Elk, is suing the federal government under an 1868 treaty which says that if ``bad men'' among government officials commit ``any wrong'' upon the person or property of any Sioux, the United States will reimburse the injured person for the loss sustained.

Elk chose to have her name released when she filed her lawsuit. She says she was assaulted by Army recruiter Sgt. Joseph Kopf in his government car, when he stopped in a remote area while driving her to a military evaluation center. Kopf has been demoted and reassigned within the Army, officials said. Kopf could not be reached for comment.

``I decided to file a lawsuit because I know I'm not the only girl he did this to. I want to put a stop to it,'' Elk said. ``He has no excuse for what he did. It shouldn't happen to anybody.''

Her attorney Adam Horowitz said this is the first time this law has been tested. In April, a federal judge denied the government's request to dismiss the lawsuit.

In another case, prosecutor Barbara Trathen of Hamilton County, Ind., has charged National Guard recruiter Sgt. Eric Vetesy _ accused of assaulting seven young women _ with racketeering along with 31 charges of rape and sexual battery. His trial is scheduled for later this summer.

Vetesy, a married father of three, met most of his alleged victims, ages 16 to 20, while recruiting at Indianapolis-area high schools, according to the indictment. Victims told the grand jury he threw them against a wall of the armory, raped them on a countertop and forced them to fondle him.

Trathen said she charged him with racketeering under the section that bans corrupt business influence and official misconduct. ``It's rape, yes, and it's sexual assault. But it's more than that. He had a pattern of misusing his position of power,'' she said.

In another case, two teenage women who claim a pair of former Marine Corps sergeants raped them

tance and training for the other three disc jockeys once the equipment is fully installed and up and running. A Dolby Audition machine which records and edits, a new control board, and other peripheral equipment were installed, as well as a couple of new monitors which touch screens were in evidence. One even continuously displays the current weather and temperature conditions across South Dakota.

Iyotte and Manning explained that in recent weeks, KINI had been operating on low wattage output because the transmitter had been putting out more heat than the air conditioner could contend with. A new air conditioning unit has been installed and now the station is back up to 100,000 watts of power. KINI now ranges up to Pierre, over to Wall, onto most of the Pine Ridge reservation and into northern Cherry County in Nebraska.

KINI has been using a satellite feed to deliver a program entitled Westwood One after hours or on weekends. It is a pre-recorded program that plays contemporary music for the young. However, Iyotte says that it will not be relied upon later on, as the new automated equipment will allow KINI to produce its own music which can be broadcast 24 hours a day if needed.

He also noted that phone reception has been clearer and this has made live remotes, interviews, and other promotions better. The music that is played came with the new system and in the future all music will come via the computer. Compact discs will not be used as it will all be delivered digitally, except for Native American music.

As an example, an interview had been conducted on-air with Ben Black Bear, III who is stationed in Iraq. It is a way to honor our servicemen from Lakota country, and as Iyotte noted, "All across the country, they honor their servicemen and we can too."

All this new equipment and programming capability is not only good for the listening audience, but Iyotte says that the station's sponsors will also be happy at the quality.

The other dee jays who are the 'Voice of the Sicangu Nation' include Mary Lee Fast Horse, Wesley Valandra and Roger Crow Eagle, Jr. A new secretary will be coming on board also.

in a recruiting office sued the military in federal court in San Francisco in May. They're seeking a requirement that all Marine Corps recruiters receive proper training and supervision.

Both recruiters were demoted after court-martial proceedings, but acquitted of the most serious charges they faced. Both have since left the military.

Fires burn 12,300 acres on Pine Ridge

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) Two lightning-caused wildfires that burned more than 13 square miles on the Pine Ridge Reservation have been contained, the Northern Great Plains Fire Information Center reported Friday.

The Little John Hill fire, caused by lightning, was detected Aug. 12 northwest of Kyle and has burned almost 6 square miles, or 38-hundred acres.

The Red Water fire, also detected Aug. 12 on the reservation, burned 7,500 acres.

The Red Shirt fire, two miles south of Red Shirt Village, burned 1,000 acres.

Sicangu Vietnam veteran needs shelter before winter snows

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

Vietnam veteran Gerald Boneshirt owns this shell of a trailer house west of St. Francis. He is asking for donations to be sent to PO box 285, St. Francis, SD 57572. He is currently living in a tent and is hoping to renovate the home before winter.

ST. FRANCIS - Gerald Bone Shirt is one of those Sicangu veterans who patriotically served his country in Vietnam in the late 1960's and then, returned home to spend a lot of his ensuing lifetime trying to establish a home for his children. Because of stringent income guidelines and other bureaucratic red tape, Bone shirt has come up against a stone wall many times when requesting assistance.

Bone Shirt said, "I'm trying to get some help and materials to get my home fixed up for my children. I never had my own home, but I want to get mine for my children before I pass on." His great-grandfather was known as "Sa la" in Lakota and his ancestors are buried along Grass Mountain road, thus, his enduring ties to the land. His Grand father Arthur Isaac and dad Alfred Sr. were veterans as well as several sisters, brothers and niece. They include, Pauline, Iglaka Win Hacker, Myron, and Almona who served in the U. S. Army.

He thought the Tree of Life agency would assist him with materials, but they seemed to have backed off in recent weeks. He also hoped that the Sicangu Wicoti Awanyakape Corporation might be able to help him, but one has to have an income to qualify under their federal guidelines. He says he has never been assisted by the RST Veterans Affairs program and at present, in the process to get a doctor's statement concerning his health problems, as he gets older.

Statistics show that Native Americans serve in the military at a higher rate than any other ethnic group in America and some espouse the idea that veterans should be taken care of and that the country should give back to them. That is not always the case, however, as Bone Shirt has been frustrated at the lack of services for Sicangu veterans on the Rosebud.

During an apparent mortar attack in Vietnam, Bone Shirt was struck in the foot and his comrades were able to stop the bleeding. They inquired as to whether or not he wanted to pursue the awarding of a Purple Heart for the injury, but he refused, it did not seem important during the confusion. He might have been eligible for some form of compensation; however, his sergeant who was present during the attack is probably retired or may have passed on. This will require research.

He is a product of the old St. Francis Mission days when it was winding down, just like the Vietnam War. He said, "A lot of people complain about the boarding school, but when I went into the service I was prepared. They could holler at me and it didn't bother me."

Bone Shirt does not necessarily like publicity so he did not want his picture taken, however, he has a desire to draw attention to the apparent contradiction that he sees in programs that are funded to assist veterans but do not. Many have as their goal, reaching out to veterans, but often times it turns out to be an empty promise.

Making Lakota craft items and stone sculptures and selling them has often been a source of income for Bone Shirt. He said he worked at the Rosebud Casino for a time, but was discouraged that after taxes, child support and other expenses were paid for, there simply was not enough to pursue the dream of owning a home for his children.

In a day and age when most families, especially families of veterans, should be safely lodged in adequate shelter, Bone Shirt is feeling some anxiety about spending another winter sleeping in his pickup truck or imposing on relatives who want to help. He has done both, but as a Lakota warrior who in theory is held in high esteem by Lakota society, he respects his relatives too much to burden them with his need for shelter.

After pleading with the tribal council for help and getting little response, he was able to secure the assistance of Rosebud council representative Fern Bordeaux-Boltz. She was able to help in getting a two and a half acre home site assignment on the road west of St. Francis and which winds down and north toward Grass Mountain community.

Gerald said, "They honor athletes and veterans, but they never follow through. When vets ask for help, they don't help. No council representatives ever came to see me."

He said Eric Nixon gave him a trailer house, which has a door missing and is in great disrepair. He was able to get a tent donated to him from the Tree of Life ministry and in establishing some communication with them he was under the assumption that they would donate some materials to him to initiate the renovation of the trailer house. That is not the case as the Tree of Life prefers to have someone on site supervising the project, according to Bone shirt.

Gerald's brother, Alfred, said that HUD grants a lot of money to the Sicangu people using a formula that is based upon tribal census figures and the SWA should be more responsive to the plight of such tribal members as Gerald. Alfred said that Representative Stephanie Herseth has taken up the cause of Native American veterans and that he would like to extend an invitation to her to come back to the Rosebud and to see what conditions many Sicangu veterans have to contend with.

Brother Alfred is hopeful that the SWA Corporation may be able to help Gerald as Homer Whirlwind Soldier is on the board of directors now.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

What does it mean when you run into three snakes in one week?

This past week some friends and I ran into three snakes at Oglala Lakota College in the Bookstore area. We saw two in one day then like a few days later we saw another one.

I am just curious. Is someone placing bad medicine on us (the ones that saw the snakes) or is it because there may be a snake den around there? What do you think?

Snake curious

Dear Curious:

Well logic dictates that yes, there is probably a snake den around there. Beyond that, what does it mean? I would take it as a warning to be cautious and careful.

Snakes are messengers from the "underworld," and in some context (should it be a rattle snake that comes close to you) I would take it as a possibility that someone was sending you a "bad" thought or medicine.

However, I don't see these incidents in that light. I expect that another snake sighting in of contacts four.

I see it as a warning that there is underground movement (behind the scenes) or gossip working against you. Do not spend any time near an area of snakes (the real ones) and friends that act in a snake-like way.

Please avoid contact...the next "messenger" could be one that bites, with the other three being the warning.

Also, please tell the administration about the snakes so they can ascertain if there is a threat to any students or personnel on the campus.

Dear Anna,

I read your article every Friday and I like what you say to people. Well I need some help on stuff going on in my life. Let's see, I'm pregnant and I have a boyfriend.

My boyfriend doesn't think the baby I'm carrying is his. But it is because he was the only one I've been with. He thinks I was messing around on him but this is the TRUTH I was not. I haven't even told my mom I'm pregnant.

Will he get over it and realize it's his? Will he still want to be with me? I'm not scared to raise this baby myself but I just need to know will he stay with me?

Confused

Dear Confused:

I am glad that you like what I say and appreciate your comments.

In that light, you might have already guessed what I am going to say to you:

1. Yes, your boyfriend will finally realize that this baby is his after you do a DNA test, and

2. Why would you want a man in your life that does not trust you? Kick him to the curb girl! A partner and a mate that feels forced to be in a relationship due to pregnancy or birth will not be a good one. Healthy and balanced relationships are created on equal trust, love, honor, respect, passion and compassion along with mutual spiritual understanding and common goals.

They suffer if they do not start with these ingredients. There must be a high regard for each other and a mutual desire to create a good life with each other. Most, if not all, of these ingredients are lacking from your relationship. I think the only one that is present is passion or physical attraction.

That by itself, will never sustain a loving relationship. You will be a good parent and work hard to provide a good life for yourself and your daughter. You will return to school and your family will help you.

True love will come your way, but not for awhile. Have patience, in about three years you will meet him. Blessings to you.

Dear Anna,

I've been in a long term relationship with a man who is loving and caring for eight years.

And we have two children and have been happy, until recently that is, when I ran into an old male friend from high school.

Since then, we have been chatting on IM and he told me that he has always loved me even though we were never together.

While in high school I always had feelings for him but never thought I had a chance. And now that an opportunity has come about to be with him, I don't know what to do.

So, Anna, should I stay in my happy relationship or explore a new opportunity that I have always wanted?

Searching

Dear Searching:

Please don't follow through with your "fantasy" friend. He is not of the stuff that you dream. Restlessness within a relationship usually attacks each partner about the seventh year. It has been around for so long that there is even a name for it; it is called the "seven year itch ."

You would end up feeling guilty and stupid and could totally end your current relationship. That ending would create a life-long regret. The man of the internet is an "air-only" man. A man of no substance or real regard for you. He might be a nice guy, but basically, he is just there for a certain reason and will not be there to support you or your children.

Part of the commitment of a good relationship is the ability to sustain loyalty; even in the eye of temptation. Have compassion for your mate, consider how devastating this action would be to him. and to your children who would find out. Also consider that he would lose the trust he has for you.

Please add into this mix the fact that both his and your family would be so disgusted with your behavior that your own life would be a living taste of hell.

Consider your losses; consider the truth as just being physical adventure, then make your decision.

Dear Anna,

I lately have discovered that when you actually try to plan things out and really try to do it, sometimes things interfere.

In my case, I had plans I wrote before and informed of what you knew and I was happy with that but now there has been some incidents that have happened and I have no idea how they are going to turn out and all I can do is hope for the best.

I really had my heart set on leaving and moving to another location for better opportunities and now I find myself with no decision except staying right where I am… in a job I don't enjoy. Do you see me possibly moving still and how will the outcome of a legal issue turn out?

Sincerely wondering

Dear Sincerely Wondering:

There is an old adage that I truly enjoy: If you want to make God laugh, tell him your plans. God will contribute every opportunity for you to create what you desire; but you have to do the work. Obstacles are opportunities to consider the alternatives. They help to create flexibility and imagination. They give us a chance to "think outside the box."

There is nothing really that has interfered with your decision to move except your attitude of limitation. Everything seems to present you with a cause or reason of why you can't. Time is the rub. Time is the essence of God that creates friction between the imagining and the happening.

Have patience: First you must conceive of the idea; second: you must take action to begin the momentum of the dream; third: you must take the time it takes in the physical world for things to happen.

You will move. You will take a job in another area. Logically then, begin to explore your options: Get on the internet and look at the want ads in the area where you want to go; look at the schools, investigate tuition opportunities. Talk to friends, open doorways for yourself and follow the dream.

Sitting and complaining doesn't create anything except a feeling of being defeated.

You can also broaden your dream by enlarging the target area to include other cities, other types of jobs and other types of schools.

Limitation is in the mind only.

Flexibility and imagination along with a strong belief in the Creator with the understanding that the Creator does not want limitation in your life; therefore all good doors will be opened for you.

Good Luck!

In memory of Eloise Ruff, Apple, Garnette

Mom, we all miss you very much. You left us July 19, 1977, that's when our family circle has been broken, time and time again.

When we're parted from our family, separated from our loved ones. We seem to feel life slipping through our fingers. We know our life time is a brief touch, no ore than one soft whisper on the wind.

We love you dearly Mom, Wish you were here with us.

There is a place for our broken dreams, disappointments, and loss, since you left us. 5 brothers and 2 sisters have left us, we have thankful hearts, they went to be with you. We will take our tears as an offering of love for you. Knowing you're near by. We'll love you always.

Carl,Ramona,Charlotte (Sister Wee),Alise(Baby Alise), Jackie, Phyllis (Sissie), (Vara Jo), Elvira.

In memory of Harlan P. Garnette

He left his world August 5.

If tears could build a stairway.
Memories a lane.
I would walk right up to heaven
And bring you back again.
No farewell words were spoken,
No time to say "Goodbye."
You were gone, before I knew it,
And only God knows why.
My heart still aches with sadness,
And secret tears still flow.
What it meant to love you.
No one can ever know.
But now I know you want me to Mourn for you no more,
To remember all the happy times.
Life still has much in store
Since you'll never be forgotten.
I pledge to you today-
A hallowed place within my Heart-
Is where you'll always stay.
Love your sister
Ramona (Tiny Babe) and family
(author unknown)

In memory of Jeanette Tallman

In loving memory of our Mom Jeanette Tallman

If roses grow in Heaven Lord
please pick a bunch for us.
Place them in our Mother's arms and tell her they're from us.
Tell her we love her and miss her,
and when she turns to smile,
Place a kiss upon her cheek and hold her for a while.
Because remembering her is easy,
we do it everyday,
But there is an ache within our hearts that will never go away.

We love you and miss you so much mom!
Love, Dave, Sissy, Pheobe, Della and Nate

The Family of Jeanette Tallman would like to thank all who assisted and remembered them in anyway during the loss our mother, grandmother, sister and aunt.
Thank you to our mom's friend's and family that visited her while she was in the hospital.
Your acts of kindness will never be forgotten.
God bless all of you.

John Around Him honored by state

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett and Archie Beauvais
Times Staff

RAPID CITY - The Office of the Governor of South Dakota presented an Executive Proclamation to John Around Him of Kyle in an honoring ceremony on Tuesday at the Oglala Lakota College He Sapa college center. A "John Around Him Day in South Dakota" was proclaimed by virtue of the proclamation.

The Executive Proclamation read in part, "Whereas John Around Him has played a vital role in assisting Native American state prison inmates, maintain their connection with their culture by helping to lead inipi ceremonies and spiritual conferences, by serving as master of ceremony at prison powwows, and…,whereas John has served his state and country proudly during the Vietnam War. And, whereas John is memorialized at the Smithsonian Museum National Museum of the American Indian where his voice and words are proudly displayed representing Lakota spirituality and culture. Whereas it is fitting and proper as Governor to recognize the leadership and commitment of John Around Him to his fellow South Dakotans for his dedicated and outstanding service to this country and state."

John Around Him spoke at a honoring on Monday.

Meanwhile, a gathering of some 60 people, including the media arrived to a crowded parking lot to honor the highly regarded Lakota 'Wicasa.' The term is used in Lakota society to denote someone who has earned great distinction and societal status by virtue of their contribution to preserving Lakota culture, language, spirituality and leadership.

Around Him is also a Vietnam Veteran who is well known for his advocacy for incarcerated Native Americans in South Dakota prisons. Native Americans appear to represent

Restraining order allows Prairie Hills to remain open until hearing

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Prairie Hills golf club owner, Deb Boyd, was issued a 'cease and desist' letter on Aug. 24 to stop selling liquor off-sale without a state off-sale liquor license by the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Revenue Office.

The business is located south of Mission and has been the subject of past hearings by the RST liquor commission due to an accumulation of back taxes owed to the tribe.

This matter, however, was not a liquor commission action, but one that originated from RST's Revenue Office.

Whitney Meek, director of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's revenue office ordered the club to cease conducting business.

The letter asked that the business comply with tribal laws and also noted that there was a failure to pay sales taxes and also to file tax returns.

The next day, Boyd filed an application for a temporary restraining order through an attorney requesting that the business be allowed to remain open pending a hearing on the 'cease and desist' order.

Judge Sherman Marshall of the RST tribal court issued a temporary restraining order which will allow the club to remain open and to do business.

Judge Marshall ordered a hearing on the matter at 1 p.m. in RST tribal court on August 30.

However, according to Meek, the matter was continued until Friday, Sept. 1. The latest word is that it has been moved up again to Tuesday at 1 p.m.

She indicated that she would be present for the 'cease and desist' hearing. She had no further comment about the matter.

The hearing is open to the public.

ROSEBUD - The 130th annual Rosebud Sioux Fair and Rodeo was held on August 25-27 at the fair grounds. It got off to a good start on Thursday night with the carnival area fully lighted and it ended late afternoon on Sunday in a disappointing way due to an intermittent drizzle. A full slate of activities was held, from a horseshoe tournament, an All Indian multi sanctioned rodeo, a hip hop concert, and the Ms. Rosebud pageant held earlier in the week on the campus of SGU.

The points that had been accumulated by the dancers as of Saturday evening in the respective categories were used to tally up the final winners, according to Lenard "Shadow' a disproportionate percentage of the inmate population in the state. One inmate put together a piece of art done in the prison and it was also presented to Around Him.

Around Him

He has been ill lately and noted that he had come from treatment earlier in the day. He has been diagnosed with cancer and as of today is in the Rapid City Regional Hospital.

As he arrived shortly after 1 p.m. on Monday, and he was assisted into the building by several young family members. One visitor greeted him and he replied, "Hau, 'tunska'. Le waicunkte. Sa miciyinkte. Nahankci he'p-sni." In English, it translated, 'Hello nephew. They are going to do something here. I am going to get ready. They have not arrived yet."

Inside, a Lakota prayer was said by Charlie White Elk and the honoring quickly moved to the reading of the Executive Proclamation which was signed by Mike Rounds and attested to by Secretary of State, Chris Nelson. His words as relayed by Mr. Reisch, Secretary of the Department of Corrections revealed that Governor Rounds was, indeed, quite familiar with Around Him's work in the state's prison.

It was an emotional moment for Around Him and those who came to honor him. A pipe was laid on the desk and he prayed with it. OLC president, Tom Shortbull, read a letter of appreciation on behalf of the Board of Trustees, while the college's television was set up to capture the ceremony.

Stacey Phelps explained that his family had been greatly influenced by the encouragement and music of Around Him and as he sang a song with the help of another, the people lined up and shook hands with Around Him. Phelps said, "John has really been somebody on our reservations and all across our state who has encouraged young people to sing. We were young starting out singing John was always was one of the announcers who supported us, asked to go…, we want to give back to John to honor him." An OST tribal flag was also presented to him by Austin Watkins, Sr. of the Medicine Root district.

Around Him said, "Winyuskinya unpo. Otehike uelo." Be happy, there are hard times coming. He continued, "This is a great honor for me today.., to see something like this. My daughters and sons, and to say thank you. The greatest privilege, 'tunkasila' bless you. Carry on, continue this way of life. Share, they need to learn. Thank you very much."

After those in attendance shook his hand, Around Him concluded by saying, "I don't know when I will journey home, but I want you to continue on with my work. They all need to learn. They will carry on. They will learn and words and the songs."

He spoke of his work at the prison in Sioux Falls. "In the next generations to come, we have to make changes. I visit a lot of the men, women and elders there and it is sad when I leave and that door shuts. I don't know who this person is but I cried."

He said it has to stop and we have to make changes. Changes has to be made back over here, at home. Changes have to be made here and all of the reservations, as that is where it starts.

They need love and guidance at home, so they wouldn't be there.

Aside from his work at the prison system, Around Him has taught many, many students Lakota language and culture at Little Wound School and for the last several years, has been an Lakota studies instructor at Oglala Lakota College.

Recently, John formalized a longtime relationship with KILI Radio by agreeing to serve on the board of directors.

"We really welcomed John to the board," said Melanie Janis, station manager, "for years he has listened to KILI and never fails to call and advise us on what we are doing, encourage us to continue when times are tough and tell us when he hears programming that really doesn't contribute to our community - it always is a delight when John comes to KILI to speak, he is always so positive and a great role model when it comes to Lakota culture and way of life."

Wright.

Other special events included the Men's softball tournament, the Saturday morning parade, a road run sponsored by the RST Diabetes Prevention, mud volleyball, and an open door ministry. There was also a trail ride from the home of Eddie Farmer, Sr. to Rosebud sponsored by the RST youth affairs program.

The emcees for the annual event were Everett "Butch" Felix and Jim Clairmont, both from the Rosebud reservation. The arena director was Royce Yellow Hawk, while the head men's judge was Stephen Horse Looking, Sr. The head women's judge was Della Spotted Tail who is employed in the RST education department.

The cash prizes included $47, 600 for the "wacipi" and $23,000 drum split. The Chairpersons for the special events committee, the rodeo committee and the wacipi committee included Whitney Meek, Dennis Spotted Tail, Jr. and Ruben McCloskey, respectively.

A couple of other special events that were seen for the first time at the Rosebud Fair were the "Handgames" contest coordinated by Florentine Blue Thunder and the display of the past RST administrations and councils sponsored by the special events committee. Darlene Kills In Water of the RST vice-presidents office along with the help of Gwen Herman had put together the past officers and council going back to 1936. The project was the idea of the RST special events committee.

The lists of past Sicangu leaders brought up some interesting statistics, such as the fact that the first group of council and administration included Mary Scissons. Another female was not elected to the council until the 1970's. Archie Fire served as the sergeant-of arms and also as an RST council representative during 1944 and 1946. Also, Thomas Bone Shirt served as the sergeant-at-arms for eight administrations. Also, there were more than sixty female council representatives and officers during the span from 1936-present day with some of those being counted more than once.

During the first grand entry on Friday evening, South Dakota Governor, Mike Rounds, was the guest of honor. He was given a star quilt and an honor song. One emcee was heard to tease Rounds when he said no political speeches would be allowed.

The Sicangu Lakota Warriors were very much in evidence during each grand entry as Lakota veterans from every modern war were honored. The honor guard is rather prominent on the northern plains and beyond as they often get invited to other events in the region.

The Sicangu royalty unveiled during Friday evening included Simone Crow Good Voice of Parmelee as the new Ms. Rosebud for 2006-07. Her mother is Millie Crow Good Voice of Rosebud. Antonia Tamayo is Ms. Teen Rosebud and JaKayla Hesse of Mission, the new Little Miss Rosebud. JaKayla parents are Bill and MiKayla Hesse.

Shere Wright was the coordinator of the Ms. Rosebud Pageant. She is the current reigning Ms. He Sapa representing the annual powwow in Rapid City. She is employed in the RST revenue office.

Douglas earlybird run opens 2006 Cross Country Season

Wohlleber, Webber, Mendoza, Wilson-Pine serve notice

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - The 2006 cross country season opened Friday with the Douglas early bird run on the Rapid City Executive Golf Course in Rapid City; Kiko Mendoza, a sophomore at Takini who won the State B cross country championship last year as a freshman, took second in the high school boys division, five and a half seconds behind Rapid City Central's Mike Krsnak who ran the 5000 meters in 15:56.59.

Jordan Wohlleber, a freshman at Cheyenne Eagle Butte, took second in the high school girls division behind Jessica Engel, a Sturgis runner who was over 53 seconds ahead of the pack.

Pine Ridge runner, Robin Webber, announced that she was back with a fifth place 16:09 finish; Webber won the Class A cross country championship as a sophomore but struggled with leg injuries last year. The Pine Ridge girl's team included Christian Janis 23rd, Sophia Janis 24th and Aimee Pond 38th.

Jordyn Cook finished in 6th and with Wohlleber led a large contingent of Eagle Butte runners on Friday including: Erica High Bear 16th, alli Moran 27th, Ashley Iron Moccasin 2th, Marisa Landreaux 3th, Emma LaPlant 40th and Harlee Morgan 43rd.

Kyla Marshall, Todd County, followed up on her success during the summer North American Indigenous Games in Denver with an eighth place finish in her first run as a Falcon freshman. Todd County also included: Julie Bernie 13th, Emmy Her Many Horses 25th, Kylie Wilason 26th, Morganna Running 35th and Anna Two Hawks 44th.

Kayla Weston, a junior, led the way for Red Cloud with a 20th place finish followed by Saige Pourier's 24th . Little Wound was led by Mikayla Mitzel who finished in 39th; the Lady Mustangs included: Katana Rooks 45th, Miriam Lays Bad 46th Jessica Spotted Eagle 47th and Sheila Montileaux 48th.

Pine Ridge's Alex Wilson-Pine won the Class A cross country championship last year as a junior and opened the season with a 6th place finish. The Pine Ridge contingent included: Jeff Pourier 40th, Farron Swiftbird 4th and Shawn Keith 51st.

Marc Whirlwind Soldier led the Todd County Falcon team with an 11th place finish and was joined by Wes Running 26 th and Steve Antoine 33rd. Red Cloud's Jared Weston won gold in the Indigenous Games and now as a freshman at Red Cloud opened his high school career with a 17th place.

Sean Red Elk's 32nd place led Little wound and was joined by Todd Phelps 47th, Denny Spotted Eagle 48th and Trevor Lone Hill 50th. Cheyenne Eagle Butte was represented by Carl White Eagle in 35th.

The Red Cloud Invitational run and the Northern Hills cross country run in Spearfish are set for Thursday, Aug. 31st while the Pine Ridge Invitational is scheduled for Tuesday the 5th.

Pine Ridge, Little Wound, Todd County want to build on past success for new season

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINEPINE RIDGE RESERVATION - Pine Ridge and Little Wound wrapped up their 2005 seasons with a playoff game, both teams want to continue the momentum of a successful season into the new year.

Bulldawg tackles the Bison should describe the Thorpe opener on Friday as they host Hot Springs while Little Wound, behind third year head coach, Darrell Hunter, host the Hill City Rangers, a young team with a strong running game.

"We had a great 'Red-White' scrimmage to prepare for our opening game against the Bison;" said head coach Dave Michaud who is starting his third year as head coach of the Thorpes; "we have a young line and by the start of the third quarter they were really getting the feel of the game.

Pine Ridge finished the year at 7-2 last year and has one of the strongest players in the region in senior Dave "Bulldawg" Michaud who will start at quarterback because of an injury to Harley Cortier but will step into the running back role whenever possible as well as anchoring the defense.

"With the loss of Ryan Pourier, we have a big hole to fill," added Michaud, "we started practice with 51 players but were down quickly to 36 after we started to get serious about getting into shape;"

There will be a fleet of runners with Bulldawg getting help from Juan and Louis Ramos, Wayne Trueblood, DJ Clifford and Joe Bissonette. DJ Big Crow, Michael Jack, Kenny Apple and Wayne Trueblood will lead the receiver corps while JD Two Bulls will anchor the line.

"We have the core of our scoring offense back from last year," said Darrell Hunter, Little Wound's head coach, "Johnny Cloud is back at quarterback along with Bryce Hornbeck, first team all state at wide receiver as a sophomore and we have 41 players out right now, a big difference from last year when we traveled to Hill City with only 15 players and finishing the game with only 11 after sustaining four injuries."

Players looking to stand out this year include JC Mesteth, a 5'11" 160 lb.fullback, Shilo Pierce, a senior running back, Devon LeBeau, a senior on defense and at wide receiver and Marcus Lamont anchoring the line. Hunter says 6'2" senior tight end, Rich Big Boy will block for the running backs and add to the passing offense.

Friday's game with Hill City in Kyle is set for 1 p.m. and next week the Mustangs travel to St. Francis to take on the Warriors.

Nick Dressel returns for his second year as head coach at Red Cloud and welcomed 55 players to the start of practice. Red Cloud lost their all around quarterback/running back/return man, Johnny Crow to graduation and now has the task of filling a big hole in the lineup.

Mike Cuny and AB Morgan will share duties at quarterback while Billy Scott and Wade O'Bryan will start at running back with Dave Giago and Marlin Kelly at the tight end and Art Vitalis and Christian McGhee at wide receiver.

All Runner, Jacob Frank, Bobby Twiss, Ryan McLaughlin and Cory Tibbitts will be on the offensive line and on defense Lenny Lone Hill will join them along with Wyatt Blacksmith with Andrew Twiss, Roman White Calf and Billy Scott at the linebacker position.

Rich Charging Crowd will be a defensive back and get a lot of time at running back while Art Vitalis and McGhee will man the corners and Blaine White Eyes will play strong safety.

Red Cloud hosts St. Francis on Friday and hosts Hill City next Friday.

Todd County opens their 2006 season on the road traveling to Bennett County on Friday and Cheyenne Eagle Butte on Sept. 8th. Bob Kornely returns for his 14th season as head coach, the Falcons were 4-4 last year, 2-3 in conference. Gunner Krogman returns for his junior year and will lead the running game and set the tone for he defense from his linebacking position.

Jarret Allen, Chris Rahn, Charles Redday, Dusty Old Lodge, Brent Larvie, Vernie Menard, Jaden Allen, Mike Neiss, Jesus Duran and Charlie Moe are returning starters.

Children of 'Oz' apologize for racism

By David Kranz
Column reprinted from
Sioux Falls Argus Leader with permission

Many generations of people have walked L. Frank Baum's Yellow Brick Road, but two of his ancestors took another path through the Native American reservations of South Dakota last week, apologizing for him.

The issue is about two editorials Baum wrote in his Saturday Pioneer newspaper that he published during the three years he lived in Aberdeen during the 1890s.

His commentary on Sitting Bull and Wounded Knee, written in 1890 and 1891, called for the extermination of Native Americans.

Two descendants of the author of "The Wizard of Oz," Mac Hudson, a great-great-grandson from Tucson, Ariz., and Gita (Dorothy) Morena, a great-granddaughter from San Diego, came to the state accompanied by Sally Roesch Wagner, who did research for the Wounded Knee Survivors Association. She works for the Matilda Joslyn Gage Foundation. Baum was the son-in-law of Gage.

"We are here to apologize, to bear witness to the suffering to that kind of thinking and attitude and make reconciliation and begin healing. We felt called to do that, make a connection with the descendants' survivors," Morena said.

Baum's Sitting Bull editorial said in part: "The Whites, by law of conquest, by justice of civilization, are masters of the American continent, and the best safety of the frontier settlements will be secured by the total annihilation of the few remaining Indians.

Why not annihilation? Their glory has fled, their spirit broken, their manhood effaced; better that they die than live the miserable wretches that they are. History would forget these latter despicable beings, and speak, in later ages of the glory of these grand Kings of forest and plain that Cooper loved to heroism."

Does this diminish his works, such as "The Wizard of Oz"?

"We all have a mixture of things that we are proud of and that are wonderful and things not so great that reveal our weaknesses, the dark side. His became visible. Healing is admitting to our weaknesses," Morena said.

Hudson has a master's degree in Native American studies. He wrote his thesis on Baum and his writings while in South Dakota.

"I was proud of his accomplishments, and then I heard he did this. He was part of a racist environment of the day," he said.

Education and contrition are their goals.

"We're really hoping to create a greater awareness of the editorials, let Native people, Lakota people, know we acknowledge this, apologize that our family was a part of this, listen to them, find out about how the environment led to something like Wounded Knee and existing conditions," he said.

It is an emotional experience talking with the Wounded Knee descendants, Hudson said.

"Leonard Little Finger, a descendant of his great-great-grandfather, Big Foot, wept. I have read accounts of Wounded Knee, but listened to a man surrounded by his family, to hear him tell the story of his grandfather.

It was quite an emotional experience and has left an indelible mark. It was very powerful."

A highlight of their trip was their visit to Cheyenne River, Wagner said.

"One by one (Native Americans) came to accept their apology," she said.

A group of the Wounded Knee descendants also asked Baum's descendants for their assistance in getting medals rescinded that were given to those who fought the Native Americans at Wounded Knee, Wagner said.

But what is the effect of the apology many years later?

A. Waller Hastings, professor of English at Northern State University, researched Baum's years spent in Aberdeen.

He said he thinks the visit by Morena and Hudson will be productive.

"They are the only people who really can offer such an apology. It is more than unjust empty symbolism, but from people in a position to apologize for their ancestor," he said.

Say no to alcohol sales on Sicangu land

A new trend sweeping through the country is the ability to hold people responsible for their actions involving alcohol.

In the S*ioux Falls Argus Leader* a story by Melanie Brandert dated Aug. 17, a Canton convenience store clerk will serve six months in jail for selling alcohol to a teenager who died in a February accident, the man was sentenced to one year in jail with 185 days suspended for a misdemeanor charge of furnishing alcohol to a minor.

In a story that appeared in a Seattle, Wash. newspaper on Aug. 24, also has a story by Tracy Johnson Man charged after boy drinks lethal amount of whiskey.

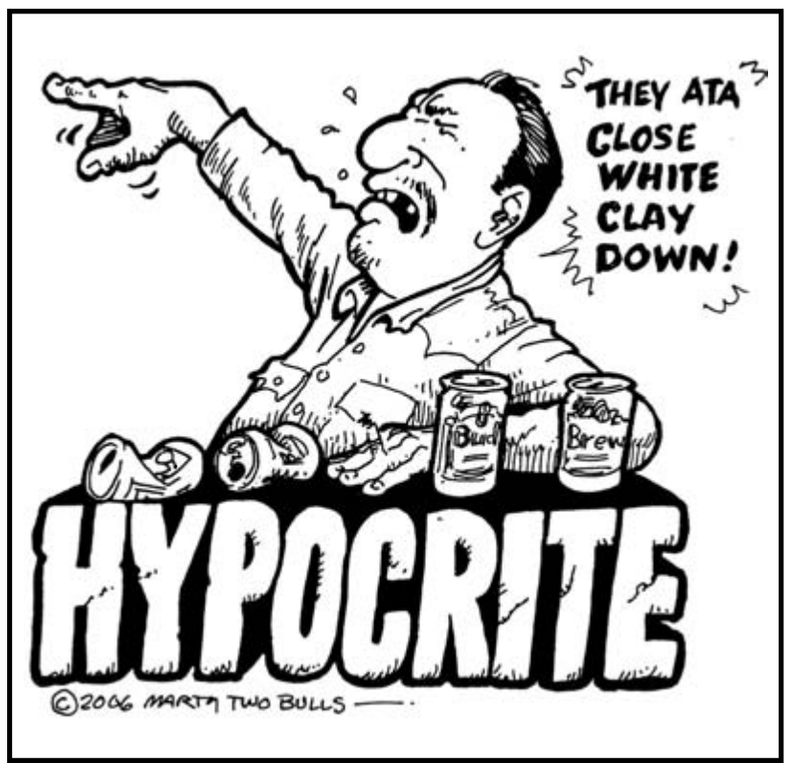
These stories tell me that people who are concerned like we are about the alcoholism and drugs abuse problems can hold those who sell and provide alcohol to People liable.

Our Rosebud Sioux Tribal council could update and develop new, stricter laws to hold those who may or sell alcohol to people here on the Rosebud Sioux Indian reservation before any new liquor licenses could even be considered.

We should stop the process until our people decide, a reservation wide referendum vote for or against. Alcohol and drugs go hand in hand, we don't even have the necessary programs in place to help in recovery, healing of individuals afflicted with alcohol, drug additions.

Our Rosebud Sioux tribe continues to shoot it self in the foot by having council members using and drinking, Not very good examples, as well as questionable police officers,

It is obvious with certain people doing a dance around the drug testing.



A concerned Lakota elder mentioned to me that our people should go down there when the council is in session and lock the doors and not let any out until they do a legitimate drug test by a respectable drug testing unit where the results wouldn't be tampered with.

Our Oglala relatives have the Wasicu exploiters in White Clay to contend with over their rampant alcohol problems, Over here in Sicangu country we have wasicu's with a few drops of Indiansblood attempting to do the same exploitation of Indians illness of alcohol and drug addictions.

It is sad to see those types of individuals exploiting our people, especially with so many car accidents, maiming and killing our relatives, youth, and not to mention the on going rise in crime and loss of freedom for many who got drunk or high and did things they wouldn't do sober.

We don't need any more alcohol outlets here on our reservation. Let those individuals go some where else and do their dirty work. The blood will be on their hands

The next election will be critical

Dear Editor:

Once again the voice of male poutiness reeks the air via Tim Giago's column. What is this man's fixation with the seventies?

That is the decade when Indigenous peoples across the country stood up for the rights of Native People everywhere. If you can remember, that is precisely when Tim became a hater of those Lakota he thought he was smarter and better than, he truly marches to the beat of a drum only he can hear.

When was the last time any of us here at home saw him pitching in to improve the well-being of all Lakota Oyate? Indeed, if he is so concerned about tribal government corruption and the role that the B.I.A. plays in it, why did he not accept my public challenge to expose it? Why will he not even respond as to why he cannot accept the challenge?

Do nothing council? I beg to differ big time, but it is not the Lakota Way to toot ones own horn, let the people and the elders of the Lakota Nation who live here be the I recall with great pride the one thing we accomplished together, and that was to impeach the former president Cecelia Fire Thunder. It was a deed that was cleanly done and can be attested to by those in attendance.

As one of the co-complainants, I faced her without fear as I was blessed to have many Lakota women supporting me as I made my case on behalf of the unborn Lakota generations to come.

You want to talk about dirty deeds, well, it doesn't get any dirtier and evil than promoting the extermination of your own kind.

I have never been shunned in the old way as the former president was, therein lies the great shame.

If that ever happened to me, I don't think I could show my face in public, let alone take out a petition for the presidency of the very people whose future generations she attempted to eliminate.

So, as one of her accusers, I will gladly welcome any opportunity to face the former president any day of the week and twice on Sunday.

I still have more than 40 pages of evidence of wrong-doing, that evidence hasn't changed and comes from quotes directly from the former president's mouth.

Shame on you Tim, walk a mile in any Lakota's moccasins right here at home.

Who are you hoping to fool? It was not just an idea that was articulated, the evidence I have indicates that efforts were underway to attack our unborn within the womb. Care to have face to face with me and go over the documents?

I'll be happy to buy the coffee. It's done with Tim, she loses, the unborn Lakota win, that is as it should be.

Where have all the leaders gone? Well, the greatest ones have left us more than a hundred years ago.

Those leaders were not elected, they were born. The new leaders are coming, and with them bring change, but it will be a change that many benefiting from the tribal gravy train will not like.

I agree with Tim on two points. The priority of any tribal government should be the people.

As a councilman any power I had belonged to the People, they were the ones who told me what to do, they were the ones who kept me accountable.

I too am disappointed with the lack of commitment given to education by this current administration, they are aware of it as I have verbalized it on a consistent basis. Education needs to be one of the top priorities as it represents an opportunity for our young Lakota to overcome the despair of poverty.

I'm sure if called upon, the full council can elaborate on what they have accomplished without the benefit of an effective leader. In some cases friends and relatives, you can listen to what Tim has to say.

However for the most part, well what can I say? He actually thinks we don't know who he is, but I guess he has to keep up appearances for his wasicu reading audience.

I personally am proud of all that you have achieved as a Lakota. It is good you can be a name-dropper, yes we all know who Wilma Mankiller is, but really Tim, what good is that going to do any of us?

Yes the next election is going to be critical, the Lakota Oyate themselves have seen what each candidate is about in the lives they have lived thus far. They will make up their own minds as to who they will support.

Since you obviously know so much more than us blanket Indians, why don't you take out a petition and come save all of us from ourselves?

Or is it so much easier to sit back, pout, and criticize? Not that bad en-it?

In the spirit of Ta Sunke Witko.

Translation of a Lakota language story

By Francis C. Apple
A' S'a KuWapi

The Powder River Country was the home of the Oglala ever since time immemorial

1. In the origin story, the Oglala emerged from a cave in the Black Hills called Wind Cave. At one time they were a subterranean people. The white people have their origin story, this is our origin story.

2. The Oglala Lakotas home land was on the west side of the HeSapa from the Black Hills to the Rocky Mountains. They would venture north into Canada and south as far as the Mni Luta wan Kaiyakabtekiya Kaluze the Santa Fe River. But they always returned to the Powder River area.

3. All that was necessary for a good life grew abundantly along the Powder River country. It was the Oglala's Supermarket-Drugstore, Toys-R-Us, Housing and especially the Buffalo Tunkasila the Creator made sure that they had enough. And again there was no pegi nor Evil Eye. They were a drug free nation.

4. The sicknesses that are killing our people were not heard of ten.

5. This was due to the fact that their diet was sugar and fat free.

6. The Oglala were mounted way back then. There is all kinds of proof that they had the Mustang-the SunkNuni. I might add that the Horse Dance Ceremony is so ancient that no one in this day and age can explain how it was done. Tunkasila (The Creator) put the horse in that area for the Oglala to domesticate and use in the great Buffalo hunt. (the wanasapi).

7. The Oglala revered the Black Hills as most sacred (Wakan Kilapi). It was their cathedral.

8. And then gold was discovered in the Black Hills and as Paul Harvey would say…we know the rest of the story.

9. The conquerors wrote the books, so naturally they said that the Black Hills didn't belong to the Sioux because they also came from the east.

10. There are many reasons to refute this mentality, but I'll share one.

11. I would encourage our New Agers to understand this reasoning.

12. Today there aren't hardly any full bloods that like fish, duck, turtle, fish eggs, land crabs, etc.

13. Prior to being settled on the Pine Ridge Reservation, our people were marched to the Missouri River-the Pickstown area for one winter. Many of them died there because they were plains people. Just as when our children were taken to Carlyle Pennsylvania, many died from a broken heart.

14. The white man's history books say that the Oglala Lakota came from the state of what is called Minnesota. We are not canoe people, we were mounted and powerful. I might also add the Chief Red Cloud was the only Sioux Chief that fought the US government to stand still - the result was the 1868 Treaty.

15. My knowledge comes from oral tradition, so I wanted to share what I heard from the old ones with the professors at our various colleges.

16. The White man's books were written maybe 300 years ago. Our oral tradition goes back 200,000 years ago.

When does the protection of the unborn stop?

Dear Editor:

Communities on the reservations on the North and South Dakota Prairies are very much small town in demeanor and laid-back in nature.

We often aren't sticklers when it comes to rules and regulations that we deal with unless it impacts our lives in a direct nature.

Our reservation roads are also rural in nature with patching here and there and with a few side roads, some graveled and not, offering some suspense in our travels.

There are those of us who realize the dangerous nature of our roads and act accordingly and strap in our young and also our selves "just in case." Reservation residents also do what is necessary to not get a ticket from the highway and county law enforcements patrolling the roadways

Where have all the leaders gone?

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

October 3, 2006 is an important date on the calendar of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, but Tuesday, November 7 looms even larger.

After two years of strife, turmoil, finger pointing, unethical behavior, vicious politicking from one of the most "do nothing" tribal councils in the history of the tribe, petitions are now taken out by the candidates hoping to win the Primary Election on Oct. 3 and move on to the General Election of Nov. 7.

Hopefully some candidates fed up with the hypocrisy and lethargy of the present tribal council will prevail and bring some semblance of order back to a once proud tribal council. At a time when the Lakota people of the Oglala Sioux Tribe needed, nay demanded, strong, honest and decent leadership, this council became so enamored of its own power that it threw out all of the rules of good conduct and sank into a mud puddle of indecision and a viciousness unseen since the 1970s.

By first suspending and then impeaching the first woman ever elected to serve as President of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, Cecilia Fire Thunder, and doing these dirty deeds while she was not even present or was never given the opportunity to face her accusers, this tribal council has brought great shame upon itself and tarnished those members of this same council that did not go along with its shameful acts of self-indulgence.

The list of presidential candidates includes a few members of this disgraced council apparently hoping to win the presidency in order to carry on their chicanery on a higher level.

As of last week those vying for the presidency of the tribe included current acting president Alex White Plume, current acting vice president Eileen Janis, and current tribal council representative Will Peters. Dennis King, George Patton, Denver American Horse, Larry Swalley, Gary Lays Bad and Joyce Sun Bear rounded out the rest of the president hopefuls until ousted president Cecelia Fire Thunder tossed her hat into the political cauldron late last week.

Former Principle Chief of the Cherokee Nation, Wilma Mankiller, told Fire Thunder two weeks ago to forget trying to get a fair hearing from the present tribal council and judiciary, but instead to concentrate on her efforts to get re-elected.

I agree. There is an old saying that is senseless to kick a dead horse and that is where Fire Thunder's efforts to get re-instated now rest.

With only two months left to campaign it will take all of her will power and persuasion to re-enforce minds and to clear her good name.

Every member of the tribe who cast ballots for the current members of the tribal council should re-examine the reasons they supported those candidates.

They should be asking themselves the following question: What did those people now serving on the tribal council accomplish for them and their districts in the past two years?

And more important, what did they accomplish for the good of the Oglala Sioux Tribe?

If this sounds like I am supporting any single candidate it is not intended that way. I am a strong believer in justice and the way this council used its power to defraud the legal president of the OST, Ms. Fire Thunder, draws my ire.

She did nothing that was deserving of this harsh and unfair treatment. As I said in a previous column, she was punished for her thoughts instead of her deeds.

But if every member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe would take an open-minded look at the things she did accomplish while under siege, I think they would be sufficiently impressed to re-consider her position as president.

Emotions play a large role in tribal politics often to the detriment of facts. But the essence of Democracy is the ability to separate personal prejudices from the grim realities of facts. There has been a shocking lack of leadership in Indian politics and tribal government over the past 20 years. I have often asked, "Where has our leadership gone?" Could it be as the song goes, "Gone to graveyards everyone?"

At a recent meeting in Tulsa, Oklahoma I heard one influential Indian woman say that she places the priorities of tribal governments in this order; the casino, jobs, housing, health and finally, education. Has the new tribal leadership turned the priorities of the people totally upside down?

When a tribal government places its casino at the top of its priorities it skewers the traditional and cultural precepts of the Indian nations. It indicates that wealth takes precedence over culture.

The reach for money and then more money then subverts the cultural, spiritual and traditional needs of the very people it was elected to serve.

The Oyate (People) of the Oglala Sioux Tribe need to go back to their roots when they choose their next president and tribal council.

They need to look for courage, honesty, integrity, generosity and wisdom in the next line of leaders they choose.

Where have all the leaders gone? They are out there somewhere and it is up to the Indian people to find them. The future of their nations depends upon it.

Northern Perspectives

The eyapaha as transmitter of culture

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

There are a number of superb powwows em-cees on the northern plains whom I consider to be great transmitters of Lakota culture. If you listen closely, you can hear Everett "Butch" Felix tell about the courage and sacrifice that veterans have made through out the ages. Or, you can listen as Jim Clairmont speaks pure Lakota in telling the powwow audience that what you are witnessing is a cultural 'moment' and one that should be cherished as it may not be seen again.

The eyapaha was traditionally a camp crier of sorts, who apparently was good at what he did and would go about the camp and announce the latest or perhaps speak for someone in a leadership capacity. Information that was meant for the good of all and which impacted the public health and welfare of all members of the 'tiospaye' was certainly worth transmitting correctly.

Pat Bad Hand is another Sicangu Lakota who is learning his craft as an eyapaha and he admits that he was taught by his elders never to turn down a request to serve the people whenever asked.

And, that most certainly meant serving as an emcee or spokesman for a particular gathering. Pat sang a song at my brother's funeral and I appreciated his honoring my request.

Over on the Pine Ridge, announcers such as Chris Eagle Hawk, Robert Two Crow and John Around Him are highly regarded as wonderful Lakota speakers in their own right.

Many a Rosebud joke has been transmitted over the public address system and many a chuckle can often be heard, especially when leksi John Around Him is left to himself at the controls. Sometimes we can't wait to hear a Oglala joke here on the Rosebud, but it has to be the right time. Maybe we'll spring one on John the next time he comes to the Hollow Horn sundance.

I am simply your usual powwow goer and certainly not in any position to correctly judge the skills of these esteemed Lakota men.

However, as someone who comprehends Lakota to a large degree, I know that what they put out there in Lakota is a way for them to teach the people.

They command respect and control the context and setting of what occurs in the arbor. It is kind of their domain and it may look like chaos at times, but rest assured these guys are in control.

Their enthusiasm, personality, and character seem to show through all the conversation and humor and often times it can be quite hilarious.

At the same time, we can also learn something new in Lakota that we may have never heard before. Jim Clairmont uses the Lakota word "ihank ihan" and it means the way something was carried out long ago in a cultural manner.

Simply observing the manner in which respect, honor and pride is displayed by such eyapaha we can assume that much of that is evident from the Lakota cultural world view.

Much of what we hear is the carry over of ancient teachings that needs to be perpetuated and protected as it is what makes us unique from all other ethnic cultures of the world.

Where else can you hear Lakota women display their own victory cry, while the men take the opportunity to teach us something about humility or some other lesson in etiquette.

Pat reminded me that years ago, an elder when given the opportunity to speak would always 'wahokokiya' or take the opportunity to illustrate a lesson or simply use the occasion to lecture the people about the proper way to do something.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Protection

after all, that money could be used for other things we reason.

The paradox I see is we pay more attention to not getting a ticket than the simple realization that we are in a fast moving piece of metal on four wheels subject to deer jumping in front of us, a tire blowing out, or simple inattention such as cell phone use and other distractions that exacerbate and make our daily trips an actual practice in risk assessment.

We've heard the radio ads where the young girl explains that of the thousands of motor vehicle crash fatalities each year, almost half would of those people would still be alive if they wore a seat belt restraint.

The common motor vehicle around the reservations is almost always a one car rollover which almost always equals ejection of the occupants(s) and usually severe injury or death of those ejected.

Being stopped by law enforcement on the roads for any reason is something we all find disconcerting but I applaud the highway safety checks that will go on nation-wide including on reservations through the Labor Day weekend and beyond for the simple reason that as human beings we have to be reminded that human bodies have a poor chance of survival when tossed out of a vehicle.

Kids not restrained with a child passenger seat are also at risk and we literally practice child endangerment with not using child seats even on our home reservations.

Instead of saying "that's too bad" when one of our loved ones loses their life with not having a restraint on we should be making that connection that three seconds of snapping on a restraint is worth the effort in the long run and should be supported.

Our respective traffic codes should also be supported and upgraded as needed to reflect our interesting preserving human life.

During the recent blowup over a prospective abortion clinic on one of the South Dakota reservations people dug down deep into the cultural bin to say we need to protect the unborn.

I'm asking, when does that protection stop?

When the kid is out breathing air?

I say this because the rate of child seat use is ridiculous compared to state and national levels.

We get a seat then only put it in use when we are heading to Rapid City, Bismarck, or Pierre. Then we as adults look for excuses not to use it ourselves.

The 2005 country motor vehicle crash and fatality statistics are now out and I challenge those who care about human life to take a look at those and realize that many of those fatalities would be enriching or even just bringing simple humor and caring to our lives.

It's election time again

Dear Editor:

It's hard to believe that another two years have gone by and its time to vote for the tribal president, vice-president and all the tribal representatives.

Just a word of advice to the voting members of the Oglala Lakota oyate.

When you go to the polls to vote make sure you know that the person you are voting for, think real hard and make sure you make the right choice.

Remember what the past council did, they impeached a good president.

If it wasn't for her how would the tribal treasurer find enough money to pay the bills and all the employees that work for the tribe. Would the casino and the hotel be built?

Think of what the past administration did, I am referring to all the administrations before Cecilia and Alex's.

They spent all the money a year ahead so the tribe was broke when Cecelia didn't take any money for her self except for the pay check she got every two weeks and when she had to travel to Washington to find money for the tribal programs operations and to ask for debt forgiveness.

Also, she never asked for travel to go to meetings on or off the reservation like some of the council did.

If anything the people that got the tribe in so much debt should be made to pay the people back or they should pay by going to prison for the crimes.

I believe that anyone that takes something that doesn't belong to them should have to pay it back.

So you all know who you are so you better start making restitution for what you did to the members of the Oglala Lakota oyate.

I think the members of the reservation are counting on every one of the people that are eligible to vote will make a good choice.

I am an elder and I was taken to jail because I asked one of our council men from Manderson two questions in front of the Red Cloud building.

Please make sure the people you are voting are mature enough to be on the council.

Now is that any way to councilman should treat an elder?

Why can't we ask questions of the council?

It seems that when some of the members get elected to the council they forget their role.

As council representatives they are suppose to take care and protect the members of the Oglala Lakota oyate.

Another thing I want to point out is when I was doing my job as district chairperson, by carrying out orders from the members of the Medicine Root district council, the people wanted our council woman suspended and then they wanted her impeached for things she did to harm some of the programs on the reservation.

She had a restraining order filed against the chairperson and the treasurer of Medicine Root district.

Elected council members are suppose to take care of the tribal members not haul them to court or jail because you ask them the wrong questions.

So when you go to the polls to vote take a good look at the names and make sure you make the best choice.

Vote for the candidates that will work for the Oglala Lakota oyate.

Don't vote for anyone that wants to grab all the money the can from the Oyate. Remember any money that comes into the Pine Ridge reservation belongs to the Oglala Lakota oyate.

The money has to be used for the programs so there will be employment and to build the reservation so we can be proud of our homeland.

Another thing we have to think of is how the alcohol and illegal drugs are effecting all the members of the Pine Ridge reservation.

Think about an alcohol and drug council. People who are alcohol and drug free have a healthy thinking process.

ESPAGE VOICE

The opinions expressed in Letters to the Editor are not necessarily that of the editor or staff of the Lakota Country Times.

Life is a matter of give and take

By Dr. Jim Wilson

Philosophers are people who search for answers to questions like, "What is the meaning of life?" Most of us do not think of ourselves as philosophers, but we are because every one of us is on an endless search for the meaning of the many pieces of our lives which when organized into a wholeness, like a Star Quilt for instance, will give us a wholeness of understanding, clarity and meaning. Science searches for the truth and Philosophy searches for meaning.

We need both.

Life is an endless series of problems we must solve in order to survive.

Some people seem to glide smoothly through life while others seem to be battered like the losers of lopsided boxing matches.

Some people learn early how to solve problems and some never learn because they fail to see any connections between causes and effects; if you play with fire you may get burned, etc.

In the search for methods of solving problems there are only three broad choices: dealing directly with them ourselves, asking or letting others deal with them or doing nothing and hoping for the best.

Of course, prevention is always the best course but we often fail at that because we are too busy dealing with the problems at hand. Dealing directly with problems is the hardest because it requires us to face things (or people) we probably should have already faced.

Letting others deal with our problems is easier and gives us a chance to shift responsibilities while doing nothing and waiting for the outcome lets us plead total ignorance and accept the victim or martyr role.

It is that middle course that I am most concerned with because it is the most common choice the majority of us make. We are continuously asked to align ourselves with groups or parties which have already defined courses of actions in religion and politics.

For the newcomer both areas can be like quicksand largely because the already committed members seem to have all of the answers and we are like neophytes searching in the dark with but dimly lighted candles.

And, to complicate our lives immensely there are many who want to mix religion and politics.

My point here is to remind all of us that any choice but the first is to GIVE up some or all of our options to those who would TAKE from us our rights to act on behalf our selves.

By letting others speak or act for us, we are forfeiting our rights to represent ourselves.

History has shown us numerous occasions of mass suicide where a single leader has made a decision for all of his/her followers. One can also observe that historically group philosophies have swung like the proverbial pendulum. What is right today may well be wrong at some point in the future.

In a recent discussion with some friends I was asked my opinion on the South Dakota Legislature's action against abortion.

I mumbled something to the effect that I thought it was wrong and men had no business deciding things that affected only women. But, the question made me have second thoughts and helped me clarify my "philosophy" to align more with my total view of life.

We have to accept as fact that we cannot keep religion or politics neatly in separate boxes .

We will probably always have conflicts between science (evolution) and faith (creation). If we truly believe what we are saying, we must accept that there is some room for differences and one of those differences is how much choice is allowed on the religion (creation) side.

The answers can only be none or some. And, that is how I can move forward to frame my philosophy, or belief.

I believe we have brains so we can make choices. And, going around the barn, so to speak, we come back to the give and take of life.

I will not take away women's right to make their own decisions.

I do not believe that most women want to give up that right. I do not believe most women will choose abortion but do want to the right to make that choice on the rare occasions when they feel it is the appropriate course to choose.

I will vote for women to keep their options by voting against legislation to take from them the option to choose. If a woman wants to give up her options, that is her right but not mine.

Voting for their rights is not voting for abortion.Since I seem to enjoy wading in quicksand, let me proceed onward into the jungle of politics.

Social Scientists, like most other professional people whom we are taught to respect, have obligations and responsibilities to both earn and maintain that respect.

One responsibility we have is to give clear answers to questions we seek to answer and to explain how we get those answers.

However, some questions are perplexing and do not have easy or clear questions. One of my favorite examples of such a questions is, "Have you stopped beating your wife/husband yet?"

Like most Americans I love my country, warts and all. But, I am quick to say that I do not believe we can do no wrong. I am not a dyed-in--the-wool baseball fan who believes that hitting .300 gets you into the Hall of Fame. I dream of a system of five nines; pure gold is rated as 99.999 percent.

One of the reasons we are having trouble exporting our versions of Democracy and Capitalism is that many people in other parts of the world are seeing too much corruption in our Democracy and too much criminal activity in our Capitalism. They don't like what we are selling.

Both systems are presently operated so that a third system (special interest lawyers, accountants and lobbyists) can make lucrative careers "gaming" both Democracy and Capitalism. Ike was right.

President Eisenhower warned us of a growling Military-Industrial Complex which today seems permanently imbedded in our system.

General MacArthur was wrong; Old Soldiers do not just fade away, they go to work for Big Bucks with companies making zillion dollar tanks, rockets, guns, bombs, ships and airplanes.

The sad result is that the United States is the only Military Superpower left in our modern world and the old men make wars in which our young men die!

While spreading geopolitical strife does not bode well for the broad market, it is greatly boosting demand for both conventional and anti-terrorist military hardware and technology," writes John Burke, a former marine intelligence analyst. "Since 2000, the U.S. defense expenditures have soared 82 percent to an estimated $536 billion in 2006. That's an increase (as a percentage of GDP) from 3 percent to 4.1 percent of GDP. In fact, U.S. defense spending exceeds that of the rest of the world combined, despite significant arms buildups in the Middle East and Asia - which total over $4 billion in military equipment sales."

Here is where my 11 years in a US Government Boarding School pays off again; the Boys' Advisors (and Girls' Advisors, too) were the Superpowers in our lives.

Some were very good and some were very bad.

I became a skeptic and a philosopher at an early stage when I both saw and experienced the big disconnects between the talk and the walk of those we depended on and trusted!

I have two problems with our nation's present courses of action on the international scene: the unilateral assumption of the Head Cop role and the very questionable effort to force "freedom" on other nations.

My friend and classmate Calvin Jumping Bull laughed as he told me that he once said to two boys fighting at Red Cloud School, "If you don't stop fighting I will beat you up!"

We need a chance to break out of this pathetic existence

Dear Editor:

Soon we will be sifting through tribal candidates trying to pick who is best suited to serve the people. We will replace old representatives with new hopefuls while others will vote current officials back in.

Some will even vote for their relative simply because they are related. Our government will spend a significant amount of money to ensure a spectacular event.

Sadly, the forged air of optimism, buoyancy, and pomp, with which we partake in these events is keenly distressing to the mind.

Without a doubt, as soon as the accolades and speeches are over, we will return to our homes and continue our struggles under this government system.

Most of us will endure patiently until the next election in another two years.

One would think that after repeating this static cycle for seven decades, we would know better. As we have done since 1935, many of us will have to cope with disappointment and despair as soon as the oath of office is completed.

When we see that our candidate is not up to our expectations, frustration and resentment will fog our vision and consume our time.

Someday, we will have to realize that the Indian Reorganization Act is such that it benefits a mere handful of tribal members.

Our history tells us this fact, yet we seem to ignore it with every election. Regardless of whom we vote into office, the system will surely overwhelm them and the old status quo will prevail for another two years.

I am not rebuking anyone with this, all I am doing is pointing to our 70 year history with the so-called IRA.

Our candidates are prone to repeat the good-old-boy antics of previous campaigns. I don't know of anyone campaigning yet; however, I do know nothing is going to change for us voters in the districts.

Also, I think it is time we give our officials a break and realize that they have done all they are capable of in terms of providing jobs on the reservation. All available jobs now are with our schools, law enforcement, public utilities (water, solid waste, etc), and the public services our tribal government provides. Actually, these areas should be our government's only concerns.

We should not expect our legislature to do more than its capability. Someone, however, will campaign on the promise of "more jobs" or a "better economy".

We, as voters, must be wary of such candidates. Some will try anything to secure themselves a decent salary. These people are either immoral or they simply do not know what they are doing.

We have to change our thinking too. For one, we have to understand that an economy does not rest on the shoulders of government.

The so-called "private sector", meaning those eking out a living in the districts, must stand up to this challenge and start thinking about selling and buying Lakota; about keeping that dollar circulating here on the homeland.

Although Prairie Wind Casino handles millions of dollars a year, it does not contribute to a homeland economy. All of it goes back into off-reservation economies.

Our casino pays for products and services from vendors from our border towns and abroad and its employees take their paychecks to Rapid City and other places for the things they need.

Essentially, small businesses providing basic needs or products and/or services to the Lakota people should rely on other local businesses to provide them with the materials, products, and services they need.

If this were to happen, we can keep that valuable dollar on the homeland. As it is now, we simply take our money and inject it into our border town economies.

These municipalities are happy to take our money.

On the other hand, it is a humiliating and tiresome task trying to borrow some of it to build our own circulation on our homeland. I know a few of the little people who experienced rejection in their bid to make small business loans. In this manner, "local" banks seemingly control our destiny.

I have come to realize that this humiliating and fruitless soliciting for money may not be the way to go.

Perhaps we have to develop innovative and unconventional methods to raise startup money. Of course, we have to start small and gradually build up, but we have to start now with the vision that our children and grandchildren will grow up into a genuine homeland economy.

For whatever it is worth, I do caution voters to be wary of your candidates. No one person can make drastic improvements for us. That is ours to determine and it does take time.

Also, it won't matter one way or the other as to who we elect for our president or representative. Real affirmative change can occur only with a constitutional separation of powers amendment.

Look at our extreme unemployment rates! I have not found an exact percentage, but it is constantly fluctuating between 75 percent and 90 percent.

These figures are shocking by United States standards. What does this mean to us? The devastating economic depression during the 1930s was the last time US rates equaled ours… and people were starving.

Understandably, when current US unemployment levels reach 15 percent there is near pandemonium. On the homeland, though, it is just another day.

Two or three generations of poverty and we are still struggling with a meager existence on the Pine Ridge. Yet, our candidates will again ask for your vote so they can draw a good salary for the next two years.

A series of pre-election round-table discussions in every district could prove beneficial. Such event will give every voter an opportunity to discuss among themselves the important issues facing us today.

It will pave the way to making wiser decisions about who should represent them on the Tribal Council.

Beyond that, what we desperately need are relevant community level economic education programs. I do not mean some program that will give us "economic development" money.

What will benefit us most is a training regimen that will teach families how to raise money for business and what types of business will work in a community such as ours.

We do not need any more "free" money because it only supports our addiction to the welfare state many people have to live with. Furthermore, it encourages and solidifies our dependence on the federal government. We need a chance to break out of this pathetic existence.

The bottom line is we either make it on our own or become a part of the larger community.

Sicangu showcases past tribal government during fair

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The idea to visually "showcase" the past RST tribal administrations and council going back to the very first council in 1936-38 apparently was the idea of Darlene Kills In Water of the RST vice-president's office and the RST special events committee. There is not a lot of documentation or narrative about the inner-workings of past Sicangu leaders and the list will serve to remind people of who the prominent political Sicangu leaders were. Kills In Water did the research at the SGU Heritage Center. She said, "It was something we wanted to give back to the people."

She said that Ben Black Bear, Jr. of the Rosebud Educational Society also provided pictures for the display.

One interesting note is the fact that the initial list contained the name of a woman, Mary Scissons.

Left: Archie Little and Homer Whirlwind Soldier in front of RST display of past officers and representatives during 2006 RST Fair. Both Sicangu elders are descendents of principal chiefs of the Sicangu Nation.
Above: Tripods listing past RST officers and council representatives back to 1936 went on display at a recent RST council meeting. The project was the idea of Darlene Kills In Water and the RST Special Events committee. Photos by Archie Beauvais.

Another female was not seen on the council until 1973-75 when Christine Dunham and Julia Lambert were elected to serve. It would have been interesting to see if the council had marked the special occasion.

Other interesting facts include the fact that there was an Antoine Roubideaux listed at the first RST president. There was also someone with that name listed on the signing of the 1868 Ft. Laramie Treaty. It is likely that he was a direct descendent of the interpreter. Many of the descendants seen on the list have descendents whose name are still prominent today; familiar names like Eagle Bear, Whirlwind Soldier, Quick Bear, and Left Hand Bull. It was also interesting that John Fire served as a sergeant-at-arms in 1944 during the Youth Funday rodeo brings new riders to world of rodeo

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Between 40-50 young competitors opened the 2006 Oglala Nation Fair and Rodeo on Thursday, Aug. 3 at the Pine Ridge rodeo grounds with a fun day rodeo. Stick horse barrels, regular barrels, flag races, pole bending and bull riding were spiced up with pop and watermelon races and boot scrambles in three divisions.

"The late Bogie Carlow and I got together to put on the first youth rodeo in 1993," said Michel Melvin, a local rancher and agricultural specialist at Oglala Lakota College, "this tradition has continued over the years and I have watched as many young participants developed the skills to participate in and go on to larger rodeos."

Results from the youth rodeo included: PeeWee Stick Horse Barrels-1) Lante Wisecarver; PeeWee Stick Horse Poles-1)Jhet Janis, 2) Lante Wisecarver; PeeWee Stick Horse Flag Race-1) Lante Wisecarver, 2)Jhet Janis; PeeWee Barrels-1) Kade Bettelyoun, 2)Arielle Clifford, 3) Jimi Swallow, 4) Khet Janis; PeeWee Pole Bending-1) Kade Bettelyoun, 2) Arielle Clifford; Pee Wee Flag Race-1) Kade Bettelyoun, 2)Arielle Clifford, 3) Alehandro Rama; Junior Barrels-1) Carlee DeWolfe, 2) Monica Tibbitts, 3)Taryn Lessert, 4) Shandra Stromer; Junior Pole Bending-1) Shandra Stromer, 2)Taryn Lessert, 3) Carlee DeWolfe, 4) Jachandra Begay; Junior Flag-1)

Bennett County Schools list attendance policy

MARTIN - The following the policy regarding the daily attendance of students attending Bennett County Schools.

DAILY ATTENDANCE OF STUDENTS IS REQUIRED PER SCHOOL BOARD POLICY; STATE LAW AND THE NO CHILD LEFT BEHIND ACT. Following are a few state statutes and a summary that deal with school attendance.

13-27-1 Parents and guardians of children, ages 6-16, are responsible for making sure students regularly attend school. This statute mandates compulsory attendance for children ages 6-16.

13-27-11 Parents/Guardians that fail to send children, ages 6-16, are guilty of a Class 2 misdemeanor for the first offense. For each subsequent offense, the parent/guardian is guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor.

13-27-14 School Boards are authorized to appoint Truancy Officers to enforce the compulsory attendance laws.

Lisa Rotert is the Bennett County School District Truancy Officer.

Any day that a student is absent, if there has NOT been a call from the parent/guardian, Mrs. Rotert calls each home to inquire as to the student's absence. Documentation of these phone calls, parent calls to the office, and other attendance documentation is kept on file with Mrs. Rotert, MGS office or the Bennett County High School office.

Students who are truant may be referred to the Martin City Police, Department of Social Services, Bennett County Sheriff's Department, Oglala Sioux Tribal Officers or Court.

When a student has an unexcused absence, Mrs. Rotert will contact the parent/guardian. The second unexcused absence will result in a phone call and a letter from Mrs. Rotert. A third unexcused absence will be referred to the Bennett County States' Attorney's office.

When students have missed FIVE and TEN days of the semester at the HS and FIVE, TEN, FIFTEEN, and TWENTY days of school at MGS, parents are sent a letter informing them of their child's absences, the reasons for the absences and any other attendance information needed.

Copies of these letters will be sent to the Bennett County States' Attorney as warranted.

Parents are invited to schedule a meeting with Mrs. Rotert, Mrs. Ready and Mr. Semmler to discuss attendance issues at any time during the school year.

Regular attendance is ESSENTIAL for students to succeed in school. Martin Grade School staff would like to meet with parents and students to ensure that all students are in school and becoming successful.

As school begins, so does lice, a sign of the season

By Lynn Taylor Rick
Reprinted with permission from the Rapid City Journal

A lot of things mark the beginning of the new school year.

Head lice is one of them.

Rapid City pharmacist Chuck Fortier said the peak time for lice outbreaks is two weeks after school begins. Once under way, he expects to see as many as 20 parents a week visiting the pharmacy at Boyd's looking for head lice treatments.

But that doesn't mean that summer is a lice-free time. "It's so prevalent. We have had two or three parents looking for the products just this week," he said.

Those products include shampoos such as Rid and Nix, but there are some common household products that can be used as well.

For parents who want to use store-bought products, Fortier recommends Nix for children. Nix contains pyrethrum, which is derived from the chrysanthemum flower. When it comes to children, Fortier suggests they stay away from products such as Rid, which contain more dangerous chemicals. Do not use products that contain lindane on children, Fortier said.

As for household treatments, some people use mayonnaise, which they rub into the hair and leave overnight.

This old treatment will likely work, but Fortier believes that mayonnaise has as many dangerous chemicals in it as do the shampoos. "Preservatives in mayonnaise are huge," he said.

A safer alternative may be heavy oils, such as olive oil. People can apply the oil to hair and scalp, cover with a plastic for a time, then wash it out. Fortier said. The oil smothers the lice and nits.

The hair should then be combed through with a nit comb, and any existing nits or eggs should be removed. The hair should be checked in a couple of days for any remaining nits, and the oil treatment should be done again to smother any newly hatched lice in about a week. The key is completing two cycles of the treatment, Fortier said.

"Oils would definitely smother them," Fortier said.

Because lice are contagious, every person in the household should be checked for lice. If nits or lice are discovered, those members also need treatment. There are also pyrethrum sprays that can be used on furniture if needed, Fortier said.

The most important thing to remember when it comes to lice is that the critters don't discriminate. Despite the bad press they get, lice aren't a sign of bad hygiene. "It has nothing to do with cleanliness. It has to do with someone being in close proximity with someone who has lice," Fortier said.

And since school has plenty of close proximity, it's not a surprise that children pick up lice at school.

Fortier said about the only thing parents can do to prevent an outbreak is encourage kids not to share their coats and hats. Don't hang their coats with other coats, and don't visit the home of children with an existing lice outbreak. "Don't go in a friend's house until they get rid of them," he said.

But most of all, don't worry, Fortier said. As soon as cold weather rolls around, the lice will disappear … until next year, that is.

end of World War II and also as a council representative. Leaders such as Mike One Star, Homer Whirlwind Soldier, Elmer Compton and Isadore White Hat served prior to 1952. The elder Homer Whirlwind Soldier was the first vice president in 1936.

Another interesting note is the fact that there has only been one four year term going back to 1936 and that occurred during the Alex Lunderman administration. The late Aloysius Larvie of Antelope community also served six consecutive terms and during that four year span.

Darlene Kills In Water is on the RST special events committee for the 2006-07 Rosebud Fair along with Gwen Herman, Norman Running, Whitney Meek, and Donna Hollow Horn Bear.

She researched the archives and had all of the respective officers and council listed for each two year segments and was assisted by Gwen Herman, also of the vice-president's office.

Kills In Water was also a former RST council representative during the Charles Colombe administration and represented District 6 which is Spring Creek and Two Strike.

The eight and a half by eleven sheets were mounted on tripods which were created by David Halmi of St. Francis Indian School who teaches vocational educational.

He is a former faculty member in the fine arts department at Sinte Gleska University. Halmi was assisted by Kills In Water's nephew Ray Sigalla.

The tripods or easels were displayed during the RST council meeting last week for public viewing and then, were transported to the site of the annual RST Fair where they were displayed just south of the powwow arena. Copies of the RST administration officers and representatives were made available to the public at a table which was also set up. The tripods were displayed in front of a red and blue tipi and elders, Archie Little and Chief Homer Whirlwind Soldier, were named as tribal historians for the event. They were willing to share their historical knowledge.

Chief Whirlwind Soldier said on Saturday during the fair that someone once said there was no precedence for appointing a temporary chief, such as was the case when businessman Phil Stevens of California, was made a chief in 1987. Whirlwind Soldier said that there was a precedence set earlier when his grandfather George Whirlwind Soldier was acting chief from 1913-18 of the Sicangu Nation along with Jake Kills In Sight and Gene Little.

The sharing of past RST administrations and council representatives was a great gesture by the RST special events committee as it is an excellent way to show the public, historians and children that the Sicangu Lakota have a legacy of leaders appointed under the 1934 Indian Reorganization Act. The I.R.A. has always been a controversial form of government despite being a representative one.

Despite that fact, it has allowed many Indian tribes the right to federal recognition and thus, entitled to certain treaty obligations and entitlement programs by the federal government.

The tripods were accompanied by news clippings, primarily from the Todd County Tribune, which mentioned the annual Rosebud Fair. The paper clippings occasionally made reference to a time for Native Dancing, an Indian horse race, or politicians of the day who might be attending the fair. One had the late Congressman Ben Riefel scheduled to speak.

Today, the RST Fair and Rodeo always boasts a beautiful poster for the powwow and rodeo which chronicles the events for the public with respective times and dates.

Victor Douville of the SGU Lakota Studies is apparently conducting some research on the work of past IRA (Indian Reorganization Act) administrations and councils at Rosebud and he has a desire to combine his work with the visual lists which have been catalogued.

The university has the SGU Heritage Center which is an official depository for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe and such documents are likely housed in that department.

Woman's death under investigation

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - The death of a Lower Brule woman who was missing for nearly a month is under investigation, the Bureau of Indian Affairs said Thursday.

The body of Vicki Eagleman, 33, was found Wednesday near Medicine Creek, close to Pierre.

She was last seen July 28 and was reported missing by her mother on Aug. 3, according to a statement from the BIA. An autopsy was planned Thursday.

The state Division of Criminal Investigation, BIA and FBI are investigating.

On Tuesday, nearly 200 people from the Lower Brule community searched for the mother of five.

"The youth who participate in this rodeo tell me they like the opportunity to win cash prizes," said Melvin, "some have even told me that they have used the money to buy school clothes for the new school year. Last year I was really honored when Cecelia Fire Thunder, OST President presented me a star quilt; most of all though I really enjoy helping to provide an opportunity for our youth to participate - these children are our future leaders and we need to be setting an example that they will be proud to follow."

A Great Plains Indian Rodeo Association sponsored rodeo was held on Friday and on Saturday the Buckin Stock and Country Rock with the Beauty and the Beast took place.

Melvin wanted to emphasize that the rodeo could not have happened without the support of a number of sponsors including OST Child Care, First National Bank of Gordon, Lakota Plains Propane of Kyle, Johnson O'Malley, Tim and Theresa Lessert, Donnel and G.W. ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I have great respect for those who are honored with your gift. Because of your gift, I would like to ask you a couple of questions: My husband is in state prison.

He was supposed to be paroled next year but he earned another sentence for doing something stupid while in prison, which means he won't be eligible for parole for three more years.

We would like to go back to court before January (which is when his request time expires) and ask the judge to reconsider this second sentence he was given. The judge didn't even read any reports or letters and gave him the maximum time.

Will this be successful in getting his sentence reduced or suspended? Will he be coming home in the next year? Will things go well for us when he does finally get home?

Asking

Dear Asking:

I am saddened by your distress and the situation your mate is currently in. There is a possibility through the advocacy of an organization that helps minorities that your husband may have his eligibility time reduced by at least one year.

The court's determination is based on a simple perspective that your husband still resorts to violence when involved in confrontation; in other words, he is high-risk on the outside based on his response to inside pressure.

New behaviors are what the court is looking for, not responses that show and emphasize old behaviors. The court did not need to read any letters from the outside as it was an act on the inside; and conversations and regret combined with remorse expressed to people on the outside is not as strong of evidence as behavior.

In other words, actions speak louder than words. l feel that his lengthened eligibility is harsh given the circumstances inside the prison and the right advocacy may be able to point this out using comparisons of white vs. non-white sentencing for like and similar incidences.

Dear Anna,

I need to know if my boyfriend is cheating on me because I am always hearing stuff about him when he comes back from rodeos and stuff.

There is a girl that keeps asking him out and I would like to know what he says, does he say yes or no; does he like her?

She's from Wanblee and she's a sophomore. I would really like to know if he loves me and will never cheat on me or how many times did he cheat on me.

Sincerely confused girlfriend

Dear Confused:

Sincerely speaking, you are confused girl. I don't like to confirm or not confirm cheating husbands, boyfriends, girlfriends or wives. This is why: If I say yes, and then the person I say yes to tells the suspect that I have said yes, the suspect may become angry enough with me to create a really dangerous situation for me.

Irate family members and friends may decide to shorten my stay on the earth., or at least, hurt me. What I will say is:

1. Consider the sources of the information that tells you he is partying with other girls. Do they like you and want to save you from a bad relationship or do they want to hurt you?
2. What do you think?
3. Either trust this guy or get over him. Does he like the girl in Wanblee? Probably, but that does not mean anything. I like lots of people that are not potential lovers, don't you?

I'm sorry to say this to the rodeo cowboys, but they are known for their good-timing, fast-living, adventure-seeking way of living.

They are fun-loving and have a reputation of enjoying the company of women.

They are people that love danger and excitement - it's in their blood.

Women love cowboys. Not all cowboys are unfaithful, but it is very difficult to remain true to a relationship in the rodeo environment, especially if their girl-friend at home is suspicious, jealous, demanding and whiny.

My advice is love a cowboy but don't commit to one or have any expectations until he is too old to rope and ride.

Dear Anna,

Hello Miss Anna B! I hope all is well for you. I'm a fluent reader of your column and look forward to it each week. I was just wondering what you see for me in the time coming up. Will everything be alright dealing with my education?

Will my mother be alright alone and also do you see my grandmother getting better. My aunt is now alone now that I'm gone.

Will she be able to do things on her own? Do you see anyone in particular coming into my personal life?

Curious

Dear Curious:

You are a sweet and compassionate young woman. School is a great opportunity for you and will present you with an education that means you can help your family in a much better way when you are through.

Your loans and grants will be approved. Your mother will manage her life in a good way while you are in school.

She will be all right. Your grandmother's health presents her with many challenges, but she will be getting a little better. Your aunt will be able to manage her life and others will help her in your absence.

You will meet a young man in about six or so months - but the relationship will not sustain. You will meet another man in about two years and that relationship will thrive.

Take good care of yourself, study hard and look forward to creating your dream.

God Bless.

Dear Anna,

I am a forty-something year old Lakota winyan who occasionally loses her way down that Red Road but also finds her way back.

In the past 3-5 years I have had terrible luck, and I really need to know if this life is worth going on with. I'm tired and I'm lonely and I just want this hurting to stop. I have been seeing a counselor and I am on anti-depressants but I really do want to know what is going on in this life of mine.

The man I was with for many years, the man I loved for many years, that I have a son with left two years ago.

We are still seeing each other secretly for sex and I know he's not the one for me but I can't seem to break free of the feelings I have for him. I even got him to start paying me child-support as a way to keep him in my life.

But, he also initiates contact with me also and I know his feelings for me aren't what I wish they'd be. He lives with a woman who is old enough to be his grandmother and all they do is drink, and she always throws him in jail for abusing her, I know I am prettier then her and I am better then her in more ways then one.

I feel like calling her up and telling her he is cheating on her with me.

I also think I am pregnant again and I don't know what to do, please give me some good advise.

Is this what love is?

Dear Wants to know what love is:

Boy oh boy. You know that your life will get better when you determine that you create it. This sounds harsh, but you continue in the past, which is an old circle, and always takes you back to where you started: heart-broken, disappointed, depressed and alone. Try another approach to your life.

Understand this: Your relationship with your ex is a route of victimization. He exploits you. When you want those feelings of frustration to end, really want that, end the relationship.

Feeling lonely is an addiction. It is a perspective that peace, love and joy come only from another. It is a reflection that says that you don't feel complete as a human being until you have another human being to confirm your worthiness.

When you engage in a relationship with another person, who is sick and addicted, you will never find yourself happy. Learn that you are okay without a mate, so that you can be okay when the right mate is presented to you. Strength in internal.

Understanding yourself and learning to appreciate your own beauty, strength, character, and company will allow you to attract a partner that reflects that back at you.

Pray first for a healing and doctoring of your mind, body and spirit. These gifts will be given to you, as they currently exist within you, but they are buried with fear and misunderstanding.

The Creator gave you your life and all the tools to be as great or as small as you decide. You can be well or sick. Remember, you are a spirit; a spirit walking in a human body.

You must learn self-love, compassion, and tolerance. You must have the same Lakota values (love, honor, compassion and respect) for yourself as well as others. When you truly value yourself you will not abuse your life nor allow others to abuse you.

The Red Road will give you a strong connection to the Creator and to the Spirits in your circle.

They will help you to find balance and will work with you to create a better life.

They also have love, compassion, honor and respect and they forgive you your bad decisions and your lack of understanding. They have pity for you (and all of us) for the bad choices you make.

Decide what you want.

A good job? Be proactive. A happy household: get happy inside yourself and enjoy the gift of life.

A good relationship: Be a good person to have a relationship with.

I see you putting the confusion of the past behind you. I see you studying about co-dependency and working on recovery. I see you able to honor the Pipe.

All of these things will lead you to a better place.

Be patient, within two years life will feel much better.

In the meantime, listen to your counselor, talk about co-dependency and discover the creative, loving, joyful, beautiful woman that you are. Good Luck.

Descendants sorry for author's words, attitude

ABERDEEN, (AP) -Mac Hudson of Tucson, Ariz., spent much of August apologizing for things he didn't do.

Hudson is L. Frank Baum's great-great-grandson. Most people know Baum as the author of ``The Wizard of Oz.''

Baum lived in Aberdeen from 1888-91. In December 1890, Baum wrote editorials in his newspaper, the Aberdeen Saturday Pioneer, calling for the extermination of American Indians.

Hudson felt the need to apologize for Baum's intolerant words and attitude, so he traveled in western South Dakota this August with his wife, Amy Schwemm; his cousin Gita Dorothy Morena of San Diego; and his friend Vic Runnels of Aberdeen.

``It's important that we acknowledge the racism of the past and look for opportunities to correct the racism of today,'' Hudson said.

While working toward a master's degree in American Indian studies in college, Hudson wrote his thesis on Baum. He first came across Baum's editorials during his research for the thesis.

``When I first read that, I was quite horrified about it and wanted to know more,'' he said.

Hudson's research revealed that Baum lived in a time period where racism was commonplace. In fact, Baum's editorials coincided with the Wounded Knee massacre.

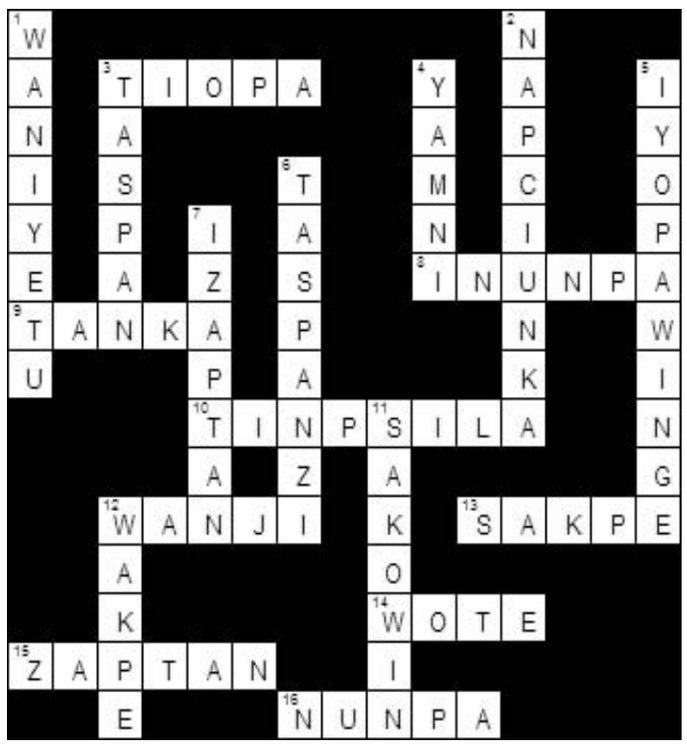
Runnels' uncle was a survivor of Wounded Knee. Runnels first heard of the editorials while presenting workshops on how racism affects individuals and communities.

Hudson and Runnels met through Aberdeen native and historian Sally Roesch Wagner. Wagner's mother had a friend named Matilda Jewell Gage, who was Baum's niece.

``If it wasn't for Sally and Vic, none of this would have happened,'' Schwemm said.

Hudson, Schwemm, Morena and Runnels visited Wounded Knee, Cheyenne River, Eagle Butte and Rapid City to apologize to descendants of Wounded Knee survivors.

``To them, it was a very historic occasion,'' Hudson said.



Nobody knew if the descendants of Wounded Knee survivors would accept the apology, but they did. Hudson said he never encountered anger; rather, he and his three fellow travelers were welcomed.

``It's a very humbling experience,'' he said.

He hopes the apology was a start to mending the physical and emotional wounds brought on by racism.

``It seemed possible that healing could occur from this, and if that happens even a little bit, it's worth it,'' Hudson said.

OGLALA SIOUX TRIBE ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION PROGRAM NOTICE OF SOLICITATION FOR BIDS REMEDIATION OF BALEFILL AT RED SHIRT TABLE

The Oglala Sioux Tribe's Environmental Protection Program is soliciting proposals for work to be conducted to remediate the tribe's municipal solid waste balefill, located on Red Shirt Table.

Current conditional at the landfill site do not meet minimum specifications of the Oglala Sioux Tribe's (OST) specifications and is not in compliance with all RCRA Subtitle D specifications. Broken or breaking bales of trash and loose trash are improperly placed on the balefill floor, improperly stacked and not compacted to an acceptable density. The drainage system is no longer properly graded and is not functioning appropriately and litter is scattered along the perimeter of the facility. The tribe intends to bring this facility into compliance and maintain it in that manner afterward.

Minimum scope of work:

- All banded bales, broken bales and loose trash will be pushed to the sides of the landfill and properly compacted
- All loose trash will be contained to prevent further escape of litter off of the facility site
- The floor of the facility will be brought to a one-percent (1% grade) to allow for proper drainage of the site.
- The pipes for the leachate collection system will be spot-checked to assess their condition
- The slope of the sides of the balefill will be checked to assure they remain in compliance with the design and/or appropriate operating specifications and corrected to those specifications where necessary
- A 30-year litter fence will be constructed around the perimeter of the premises to prevent excursion of litter off of the facility premises
- Cover soil of a minimum amount of 2,500 cubic yards will be assured to be present and stockpiled for winter use

Period of work:

The OST wishes this remediation work to be completed before the end of the 2006 construction season, preferably within 30 days of award of this project to the successful contractor. If any prospective contractor cannot or does not reasonably expect to be able to comply with that timeline, they must state that in their submitted proposal.

Evaluation criteria and minimum requirements:

- The proposals must include a statement of the equipment to be used to complete the project, and how that equipment is to be secured or provided. Any equipment cost is to be paid by the successful contractor and will be assumed to be covered within the overall submitted bid.
- The successful contractor will be responsible for costs covering transportation of equipment to and from the site, fuel for that equipment, all appropriate insurance, and equipment operator labor costs.
- The successful contractor will be responsible for costs for materials and labor necessary to construct the 30-year litter fence around the site perimeter.
- The successful contractor will be required to have a minimum of five (5) years experience in the design, operation and/or management of a Subtitle D-compliant solid waste facility. Professional certifications or degrees in management of landfills, transfer stations, solid waste operations and/or landfill design will increase the scores given submitted proposals during the evaluation process, as will additional years of experience in these areas.
- The successful contractor will be required to have a minimum of five (5) years experience in operation of heavy equipment, trucks, trailers and landfill leachate systems. Professional certifications or degrees and additional years of experience will increase the scores given submitted proposals during the evaluation process.
- The successful contractor will be required to have a current OSHA 40-hour certification for any employees or staff who will be present or working at the site.

Proposal release date and required date of submission:

The Environmental Protection Program of the Oglala Sioux Tribe wishes to receive as many proposals for consideration as possible, but is also facing an urgency in the face of the waning construction season. The notice of this opportunity to bid will be published in newspapers and information about it will be broadly distributed via the internet.

- The official release date of the solicitation of proposals will be Friday, September 1, 2006.
- Proposals will be accepted in hard copy form by mail or fax. They will also be accepted electronically as a document in either Microsoft Word (.doc) or Adobe Acrobat (.pdf).
- The deadline for submission of proposals will be Friday, September 15, 2006 at 3 p.m., Mountain Daylight Time.

IMPORTANT NOTICE: Whereas the Oglala Sioux Tribe believes that a high-quality proposal can only result from a contractor who has visually surveyed or inspected the site in question, the Tribe will not reimburse or be responsible for any cost incurred by a prospective proposer in accomplishing said visual survey or inspection.

PUBLIC SERVICE ANNOUNCEMENT

Due to the high fire danger and drought conditions which presently exist on the Rosebud Reservation, the Rosebud Agency and the Rosebud Sioux Tribe have decalared a "BAN ON OPEN BURNING" for the entire Rosebud Reservation. THIS BAN IS EFFECTIVE IMMEDIATELY AND WILL REMAIN IN EFFECT UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

Hornbeck leads Mustangs over Hill City, Crusaders roll over St. Francis Falcons struggle with Bennett County, Pine Ridge with Hot Springs

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

KYLE/PINE RIDGE - Little Wound's quarterback, Johnny Cloud and the Mustangs junior all state wide receiver, Bryce Hornbeck picked up where they left off last year in leading the Little Wound Mustangs to an opening season 33-10 win over the visiting Hill City Rangers on Friday.

"Our offense looked in mid-season form," said Darrell Hunter, third year head coach, "they attacked aggressively, there timing was good and the running backs ran good routes."

Shilo Pierce, senior running back, opened the scoring with a 35 yard touchdown run in the first period while Hornbeck scored the first of three touchdowns grabbing a Johnny Cloud pass and rolling 40 yards for a score.

After getting on the board with a fie yard touchdown run and a two point conversion, cutting the Mustang lead to 12-8, Hornbeck came right back in the second period with a nifty 45 yard touchdown run on an end around; after Cloud kicked the extra point Little Wound finished the first half up 19-8.

"We really lacked consistency." Said Hunter, "we had way too many penalties and there were times it seemed like we just would fall apart out there on the field, but we'll get better each game, we have enough players that we are able to field two distinct teams on offense and defense and we will learn to coordinate and direct our players better."

Cloud opened the scoring in the third quarter with a two yard plunge, pushing the score to 26-8. After Hill City forced a two point safety, Cloud hit Hornbeck on a 30 yard pass for a touchdown, with the point after by Cloud, Little Wound opened a 33-10 lead.

Cloud finished with 13 completions on 20 attempts for two touchdowns; Hornbeck caught seven of those passes for two touchdowns, Devon LeBeau, JC Mesteth and Rich Big Boy all grabbed two each. Pierce carried the ball 15 times for 105 yards and a touchdown while Big Boy rushed 10 times for 60 yards.

According to Hunter, the defense played well with Hornbeck from his safety position being all over the field, Marcus LaMont recovered a fumble and Preston Tuttle grabbed an interception from his lineman position.

Little Wound travels to St. Francis on Friday and hosts Crow Creek on the 15th.

Billy Scott, a junior tailback for Red Cloud set the tone early Friday, scoring three of the Crusaders first four touchdowns as Red Cloud knocked off St. Francis 39-8

Scott opened the scoring with a 50 yard touchdown run and came right back on the next series with a 40 yard TD run. Red Cloud's Sang Jun Park hit one of two point after kicks and quickly the Crusaders were up 13-0.

"We started the game really tight," said Nick Dressel, head coach, "we were nervous and fumbled the ball right away but we eventually settled down and found a game rhythm."

Former students file suit against St. Francis Mission and Rapid City Diocese

ST. FRANCIS - Six former students of St. Francis Mission on the Rosebud Sioux reservation have filed a suit against SFM, The Catholic Diocese of Rapid City, the Wisconsin Province of the Society of Jesus and the Sisters of St. Francis of Denver, Colo.

The plaintiffs are represented by attorney, Gregory Yates, who filed the suit in Pennington County in Rapid City on August 7. The case was one which had been filed earlier in Pennington County, but the amendment added twenty more pages to the complaint detailing the specifics of the sexual abuse.

The sexual abuse is alleged to have taken place at the hands of the priests and other church employees or agents during the 1950s and 70s. The statute of limitations is an issue in the case although the judge in Pennington County court has not ruled on it, yet. Yates said he came in on the case before any motions had been granted based upon the statute of limitations.

Yates also said, "The state of South Dakota has enlightened sex abuse statutes. The statute of limitations begins when the person discovers the conditions caused by the childhood sex abuse not when he or she remembers the abuse taking place. Yates hopes to get beyond the technicality of the statute of limitations, for the sake of all victims of childhood sexual abuse, regardless of their ethnicity.

The charges apparently detail patterns of physical and sexual abuse, which were combined with a systematic effort by the defendants to also destroy their Native culture and values and failing to protect them from sex abuse. The twelve former nuns and priests named in the lawsuit were not named but as agents of St. Francis Mission and other defendants.

Yates said that he is proud to be able to represent the plaintiffs in this very important case for Native Americans and all victims of childhood sexual abuse and that it is shameful for the church to hide behind the statute of limitations in a case like this.

KILI Radio receives $46,500 grant from state Department of Public Safety

Early November soonest radio station will be back on air on full power

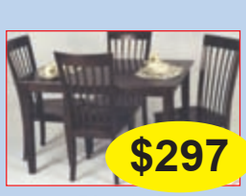
PIERRE - The South Dakota Department of Public Safety announced on Wednesday that they had awarded KILI Radio a grant of $46,500 to assist the station in getting back on the air.

Last month, Public Telecommunications Facilities Program out of the Department of Commerce awarded KILI Radio a grant of $138, 653 to purchase new equipment to replace equipment damaged by a bad storm in April of this year.

"The PTFP grant requires a 25 per cent match and the Department of Public Safety felt that KILI Radio is a vital communication link with residents of southwestern South Dakota," said Tom Dravland, Secretary of the DPS, "Without KILI Radio, emergency messages and important communication does not get out to many people living on the Pine Ridge Reservation."

KILI Radio is in the process of completing the paper work required for a drawdown of funds needed to order new equipment. A new antenna, transmission line, transmitter and grounding system are planned to put KILI back on the air.

"We really appreciate the state's help," said Melanie Janis, station manager, " we still have to order the equipment, it needs to be built, shipped and installed so we are looking at early November to get back on full power."



When the station is back with full power, KILI will be back in Rapid City at 88.7.

2006 NCLB Report Card issued for area schools

Todd County makes AYP in attendance and reading

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - The Todd County School District is reporting that it has made adequate yearly progress or AYP as defined by the No Child Left Behind Act in attendance and reading. According to the school district's state NCLB report card posted on the state's Department of Education site, the district is making AYP in reading at six of the eleven schools listed. However, it did not make AYP in mathematics as a district. Klein and Littleburg Schools did make AYP in mathematics.

Superintendent, Dr. Richard Bordeaux, said, "As long as attendance increases even 1000th of a percent, we make AYP in attendance. We have a long way to go to get attendance where I feel comfortable."

In a report issued by the state on August 23, it revealed that fewer

South Dakota schools made adequate yearly progress, but scores remained high. The 2006 Report Card is based upon the scores of 63,700 students in public schools. The Dakota STEP test which produces mathematics and reading scores is used to gauge progress under the No Child Left Behind Act.

Eighty-three percent of students who took the STEP test scored proficient in reading as compared to eighty-two percent last year. In mathematics, seventy-three percent scored proficient of advanced.

Bordeaux pointed out that attendances rates are counted for grade K-8, while adequate yearly progress in the high school is tied to the rate of graduation. For example, he said if 140 true freshmen are admitted the number that successfully graduates four years later is what is assessed.

The newly hired coordinator for assessment and evaluation for the district, Robert Magelki, was out of the office until later in the week and Dr. Bordeaux referred any future questions about related scores to him.

The state of South Dakota has a requirement that schools meet a state expectation for performance in math and reading which is based on the Dakota STEP test which is taken by students in grades 3, 8, and 11. The achievement level definitions for the STEP test are below basic, basic, proficient, and advanced

The school district has also made AYP in attendance. Eight of the individual schools made adequate yearly progress as compared to three making it the previous year.

The positive movement toward making adequate yearly progress in attendance and reading is being attributed to the collaborative efforts of students, staff, parents and the community.

Schools which are considered in 'improvement status' under the legislation are labeled as such because their math and reading scores do not meet state standards and have not met the standard for two years in a row. Schools in improvement status must then develop an improvement process, combined with parental involvement and the establishment of related goals.

As an example of one's school efforts to meet AYP, the Todd County Middle School is on alert status because it did not make AYP in reading and mathematics and has notified parents in a letter of their efforts at restructuring and have provided a listing of the supplemental services which are available to children who wish to utilize them for academic assistance. These are in addition to regular services which are available during the day. The middle school, however, did make AYP in attendance also. Parents also have the option of enrolling their child in another of the district's K-8 schools because of the school NCLB status.

Parents can utilize either option of transferring their student to another school or utilizing the supplemental services, but not both.

In a letter to parents dated August 24, TCMS principal wrote, "Our school will be adjusting the school improvement plan with the help of staff, parents and community members. The process involves looking at and analyzing the data that is available to us. Using data about students, professional practices, school program and structure data and community data, we will review the improvement goals for the school and the district."

For the Shannon County School District 65-1, their 2006 Report Card indicates that district-wide it did not meet AYP in mathematics, reading and academic indicators. The district is on level 3 in mathematics and level 2 for reading. On other academic indicators the district is on alert status. Presumably, the other academic indicators include attendance.

Falcons sweeps West River cross country, Webber wins back to back meets

By Tom Crash

13-part television series showcases unique American Indian cultures

FARGO, N.D. - Production schedules have been set for Indian Pride, a 13-part cultural magazine to be aired on PBS stations in February 2007. Indian Pride will spotlight the diverse cultures of American Indian people throughout the country. Prairie Public Television of Fargo, N.D. will produce the weekly magazine in cooperation with Circle of Nations Publishing of Grand Forks, N.D.

"This unprecedented series is the first venture of its kind to be produced for a mass United States audience, stated Bob Dambach of Prairie Public Television. "Previous attempts to tell the story of American Indian culture have been limited to one or two-part episodes that have only been able to provide a small glimpse of the rich history and culture of our Native peoples. We are very pleased to partner with JuniKae Randall of Circle of Nations Publishing to bring this historic event to the American public. As host for the magazine, JuniKae will bring an in-depth and personal perspective to the stories we tell."

The 13-week magazine will focus on a specific theme each week that will be of interest to all people. Future programs will highlight Indian treaties and sovereignty, spirituality, health and healing, culture and celebrations, as well as the coverage of critical issues of government, economic development, politics and education.

Each 30-minute episode will include three distinct segments: mini-documentaries shot on location at events held on reservations and around other parts of Indian country; in-studio segments featuring discussion of current issues by nationally-known American Indian guests; and original and cultural performances featuring traditional and contemporary artists, as well as storytellers.

Indian Pride is the vision of JuniKae Randall, founding director of Circle of Nations Publishing. Randall is a member of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa and grew up on the reservation in North Dakota.

Correction

In last week's issue, the story entitled "110 Candidates return petitions for Oglala Nation election" incorrectly listed one of the candidates taking out a petition for OST council representative from Eagle Nest as "Sylvester Charging Crow". It should have read "Sylvester Two Bulls."

Car buying advice

Use common sense on car lot corners

By Dave Leftwich
Special to the Times

RAPID CITY - I have been working at Rapid Chevrolet for the past few weeks and look forward to helping the Oyate find affordable, reliable transportation.

"After running Wojapi Windshields for the past few years I could no longer keep up with the rising prices of gas. When gas prices doubled my profit margin was cut in half because I was a mobile business."

"I don't see gas prices going down any time soon. I am still working on building my own shop but I'm happy to be in the auto market for now Rapid Chevrolet is a reputable dealership that has been in business for decades and I'm proud to serve the Oyate from this venue."

I encourage the Oyate to buy wisely and understand car sales before going to a car corner lot. Do some research on the particular type of vehicle you are interested in owning. Educate yourself in auto finance and ask questions if you don't understand.

Always price auto insurance on the type of vehicle you're going to purchase and know your options. The insurance price can vary greatly on similar cars: i.e. (2000 Impala GT) insurance $50 per month: (2000 Impala GTP) insurance $250 per month. Figuratively speaking of course; this is not a real quote.

If you believe your auto is worth more than you judge a dealer will give you, you may want to sell it yourself and use the proceeds as a down payment.

Be conscious of corner lot dealers who will give you credit. Although bad credit will cost you, some dealers will rob you blind with on the lot financing because a lot of the time they can get around lending laws with this type of loan. If you have bad credit and some one is willing to get you into a car no money down, use common sense. If it sounds too good to be true It probably is. Some wasicu are unscrupulous in their attempts to get their hands on your mazaska.

You can witness this in the mailers you receive from dealers from as far away as Billings Mt. Especially around income tax time.

If you have good credit, you can use it to get you better finance rates. Remember the dealership can often times give you a better rate than your home town bank.

When dealing with used cars it is wise to buy extended service contracts. You are only protecting yourself. Pre-owned is still pre-owned, be a smart shopper and car buying can be fun.

Know what you can afford and do your homework.

If we don't have it, you won't find it.

No need to clunk it, no need to grind it.

You need some wheels

We got deals and steals

Come on out to Rapid Chev-ro-let

We bid you welcome Oyate.

Ferris's lawsuit accuses Mormon elder of sexual abuse

By Carson Walker
Associated Press Writer

SIOUX FALLS (AP) -A South Dakota man is suing the Mormon church, alleging one of its missionaries sexually abused him in the 1960s.

Joseph Ferris filed the complaint in U.S. District Court in South Dakota against the Corporation of the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints and the Corporation of the Presiding Bishop of the Church of Latter-Day Saints, both of Utah.

Ferris, 51, is an American Indian who lived with his family in Sioux Falls from 1966 to 1968, when he was 10 to 12 years old, according to the lawsuit.

They were members of the Mormon church when in 1967, Elder Richard Joseph White and another missionary started picking up Ferris and his brothers to take them to activities.

White was based at the Northern Indian Mission in Rapid City and was assigned to Flandreau, in eastern South Dakota, where the Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe is located.

``On many occasions, Elder White took Ferris to his apartment in Flandreau, where he sexually abused and raped him," the lawsuit states.

``The sexually, emotional and spiritual abuse committed by Elder White on Ferris was open and long lasting, such that church officials, administrators and supervisors of Elder White knew or should have known of his sexual abuse of Ferris."

No trial date has been set.

Notes From Indian Country

St. Francis Indian Mission in the hot seat

There is a lawsuit just filed that hopes to take up the slack from an earlier lawsuit that failed.

The lawsuit filed on Aug. 7, 2006, in the Seventh Judicial Circuit in the County of Pennington in South Dakota by Attorney Gregory A. Yates of Encino, California is against St. Francis Indian Mission and Rosebud Educational Society, Wisconsin Province of the Society of Jesus, Diocese of Rapid City and Sisters of St. Francis in Denver, CO.

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

The plaintiffs are Lloyd One Star, Kerwin Eagleman, Ralph Eagleman, Lawrence Ford, Marian Sorace, Noah One Star and Antoinette (One Star) Miller, all former students at St. Francis Indian Mission located on the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota.

Mr. Yates intends to bring closure to a suit filed several years ago by Jeffrey Herman and Gary Fischer that attempted to sue the Catholic Church for alleged abuses of Indian children. A judge in this case ruled that this suit had exceeded the Statute of Limitations as set down by law. Yates intends to circumvent this ruling with his suit.

When Herman and Fischer filed their lawsuit, I wrote that I was apprehensive because as a longtime observer of Indian law I understand its complexities and I didn't believe either Herman or Fischer had the background or the knowledge to bring a lawsuit that so many other attorneys had shied away from over the years.

Jennifer Ring, director of the American Civil Liberties Union of the Dakotas that Indian law is highly specialized. "It involves a lot of areas of the law that are not commonly taught in law schools in the United States. If you look at the Constitution, one of the powers that the federal government has is, very specifically, the right to regulate affairs dealing with Indian tribes and that is not something that applies to any other minority group.

Then you go on to the treaties, interpretation of the treaties, and jurisdictional issues and you will find that there are a lot of rules that apply to Indian country that do not apply anywhere else," she said.

The plaintiffs charge St. Francis with attempting to strip them of their Native American family values, religious beliefs and culture in an effort to Americanize them. The also charged "Defendants' agents affiliated with the St. Francis School directed, allowed and/or executed customs, patterns, policies and practices of sexual and physical abuse by failing to supervise, monitor, discipline and otherwise protect Plaintiffs, ultimately leading to the abuse alleged herein."

The litany of alleged abuses reads like a horror story in the pages of the lawsuit. The abuses range from inappropriate touching to outright acts of sodomy. Charges were even leveled at some of the mission nuns for forcing sexual acts upon the children, both boys and girls.

The lawsuit further states, "At all times, Defendants maintained inadequate policies and procedures to protect the children it was entrusted to care for and protect. As a direct and proximate result of Defendants' negligence, Plaintiffs suffered severe and permanent psychological, emotional and physical injuries, shame, humiliation and/or the inability to lead a normal life."

Twelve former Catholic priests and nuns were named as defendants in the lawsuit. All of them were educators at St. Francis Indian Mission. The case is in the court of public records and is listed as Civil C - 04 -594.

I considered printing the names of the defendants, but decided not to, at least not for now. If any of the heinous acts charged against them by the defendants are true, they will be judged in a court of law, but the lawsuit is not against them as individuals, but as agents of the St. Francis Indian Mission.

I know some of the defendants from St. Francis and I was literally shocked to read some of the allegations against them.

I wrote many years ago that the Catholic Church had to issue an apology to all of the boys and girls mistreated at the Indian mission boarding schools since the late 1800s. Not only did the Church need to apologize, it had to find a way to begin healing the wounds of those survivors of the boarding school system.

The Catholic Church needs to begin that process of healing. When I visited the Holy Rosary Mission School on the Pine Ridge Reservation recently, a school where I spent 10 years of my life, I discovered that the leadership of HRM, or Red Cloud, as it is now called, is still in denial. They refuse to admit to or face the charges of abuse made by me and by many other former students. Will it take a similar lawsuit to wake them up? In the meantime, I will follow the case as it proceeds and keep you up to date on its progress.

If you want to know a little bit more about the history of the Indian mission boarding schools you can get my new book on the subject.

Things to empower yourself

There is nothing to fear but fear itself

This is the first in a series of articles examining fear.

By Patty Pourier

I have been scared since I was a little girl. I remember my mother telling me to go out and turn off the lawn sprinkler one summer night.

I was probably 5 or 6 years old. The faucet to the sprinkler was about 50 yards from the house. It was dark out and I was scared of the dark.

I was scared to go outside. But, when mom told me to do something I knew I had better do it. I was in my nightgown. I decided if I walked out and turned off the sprinkler like I wasn't scared, I could fake myself out, and maybe fake out the imaginary bad guys that were watching me.

I did pretty good going out, my heart was beating fast inside my chest.

I was bare foot; I could feel the cool grass on the bottoms of my feet. But in spite of my feet getting cold, I concentrated on walking slow and confidently. My mind was racing in fear. Control. Confidence.

Do not show fear. Walk slowly. I used self-talk to say, there is no one that can hurt you, and there is no one out here but you and your imagination.

Even with all of these techniques, my heart was still beating like a drum group, during a Powwow. I kept going over and over these confident thoughts in my head.

I got to the pump house where the sprinkler was, and turned it off, not wasting any time.

I wanted to race back to the house, but made myself keep the same confident pace I had established on my journey out to the pump house.

I was doing it! As, I neared the house; I had to walk by a small evergreen bush.

As I was clearing the bush and approaching the light from the porch, something from behind the bush grabbed my leg.

Fear ran through my body, such as I had never felt before. The adrenal made me hot in a flash; the grip on my ankle was real and firm.

My worst fears had come true, there was someone after me, and just as I thought, they had watched me, found me at a vulnerable moment when I was alone in the dark, and now they had me. I could not move. I was completely paralyzed with fear. I shook uncontrollably. Then I became completely numb. I felt as though my blood had turned to lead. I could not lift my feet; they were too heavy to move.

I do not remember what happened next.

But, my family tells me one of my older sisters had decided to play a prank on me.

She knew I was afraid of the dark and was going to tease me by sneaking out after me, hiding behind the bush and grab my ankle as I went by.

Her plan was executed flawlessly.

The experience made a concrete impression in my mind. For years, I could not sleep alone.

If I did have to sleep alone, I would lay under the covers and try to smooth them out, leaving only a breathing hole, so if the bad guys came into my room they would think the bed was either empty, or if I laid still enough they would think I was already dead.

I would cry myself to sleep out of pure terror of being alone and being in the dark.

Over the years, I have been able to overcome some of the fear. However, I did sleep with a loaded gun, knife and Bible all within arms reach for years.

To this day I am still scared of the dark.

I have a hard time walking from the car into the house when it is dark out.

My heart speeds up when I walk into my dark bedroom at night.

I have created a panic room in our house with artillery of weapons, just in case.

Lakota words with two sides, other intriguing words

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The beauty and richness of Lakota can be demonstrated in many ways, and these are just some of the ways.

It is fascinating that in Lakota single letters can represent a much longer word when translated into English. According to Albert White Hat's book, he says 'u' means 'to come' and 'o' means to 'hit a target.' The letter 'e' in Lakota is actually a word which means 'it is' and the letter 'i' means either the mouth or he or she went somewhere. Lakota vowels have the same five as in English, however, each one is a word in itself. The letter 'a' in Lakota means armpit.

When you go into a Lakota immersion classroom, you might see a listing of the Lakota alphabet on the board and which excludes the letters, d, f, q, r, v and x. I didn't really pay attention so at times I would use the 'd' instead of a 't' and our friend, John Around Him, said I must be a 'd' speaker.

A Lakota word with two letters such as 'la' which means 'asking for something' when added with a pronoun will make up such words as 'wala' which is 'I am asking for it.' Or consider when adding 'ya' and 'pi' it creates the word 'yalapi' which means 'you are all asking for it.'

It is interesting stuff, especially if one is able to conjugate or add in the correct sequence of pronouns. Even a word like 'lo' stands for hunger, or food.

I used to think that 'slohan' meant dragging your foot along as you walk, but Albert says that it means 'to crawl' and I thought that was interesting.

This is all quite fascinating and a challenge when understanding Lakota. I believe that Albert could have produced part two of his text and included more dictionary type words.

What's even more interesting is to see words that make reference to 'two' or 'two sides' as there are interesting examples.

Take the word 'anukasan' and to me, it refers to a feather that is white on both edges. Albert defines 'anukasan'' as eagle and perhaps it speaks to the white bald head of the eagle. A kind of hilarious example of two is the more modern Lakota word, 'icaskabiya' and it is used in the contemporary sense to refer to a sandwich. It literally means something that has something stuck on it on both sides.

Then, of course, we see that when counting in Lakota, the term 'ake' means 'plus' or something added to the original number.

I also find the words 'ici nunpa' or 'ici tokca' interesting because they suggest something that is occurring two times or in relation to something beside it. 'Ici nunpa' translates to twice or the second time and 'ici tokca' is 'different from the other.' I looked for the prefix 'ici' in Albert's book, but could not find it.

The root word in Lakota 'hca' is interesting as it means true, end result or final growth. You can see the ending in the word for flower 'winahca' or 'winuhca' and 'wacahca.' The ending suggests having blossomed into the final years.

Finally, 'wicoicage' refers to 'birth' and when you dissect it, you can see the word 'icage' which means to 'grow' or nurture something. I need to figure out what 'wico' translates to. Another related word is 'omawahetan' means 'the one who gave birth to the other.'

The Lakota language is very complex and beyond having the ability to say simple words, it presents a challenge to be able to breakdown words and analyze their different parts.

I don't believe this done to any extent in our schools and I think it can be very helpful in retaining words and being to create new ones.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Football: high school season begins

Marlon Kelly recovered a St. Francis fumble on their 25 yard line and ran it in for Red cloud's third score and Scott caught an AB Morgan pass for a 20 yard score and a 26-0 halftime lead. In the second half, Red Cloud added two more touchdowns on the ground, Roman White Calf rumbled for a 21 yard score and Andrew Twiss sliced off tackle for a seven yard TD.

St. Francis avoided a shutout by scooping up a Crusader fumble and running it back for touchdown with less than two minutes to go in the game, the Warriors made the final score 39-8 with a two point conversion.

"Our offensive line really stepped up," said Dressel, "last year we struggled on the line getting beat game after game with little or no protection for the quarterback and no holes for the running backs, it is different this year."

Red Cloud finished with 374 yards on offense, Scott ran 15 times for 168 yards and two touchdowns, Roman White ran twice for 25 yards and a score and Andrew Twiss carried the ball three times 24 yards and a TD. Morgan was five for eight passing for 76 yards and a touchdown while Michael Cuny was two for three for 23 yards. We tried two different quarterbacks this week and will probably go with Morgan as the starter on Friday, added Dressel.

Red Cloud hosts Hill City on Friday and Pine Ridge on the 15th while St. Francis hosts Little Wound on Friday and travels to Todd County on the 15th.

Hot Springs senior running back, Paul Tierney, was a one man wrecking crew Friday night in Pine Ridge as he scampered through the Thorpe line for 270 yards on 20 carries for three third quarter touchdowns, breaking open a defensive 7-0 game as the Bison went on to a 48-0 win.

"Hot Springs has 40 football players and these players worked all summer while we have a few athletes and very few who worked all summer," said Dave Michaud, in his third year as head coach, "I knew we would hang with them for the first half but we just don't have the conditioning this early in the season, you can't get in good shape in three weeks if you haven't put any work in during the summer."

Pine Ridge lost their quarterback, Harley Cortier, in the Red-White scrimmage game a week before the first game; Bulldawg Michaud .had to move from running back to quarterback and that adjustment hurt the offense, according to Michaud. Bulldawg finished with eight completions on 23 attempts for 60 yards with two interceptions and 30 yards on eight carries. DJ Big Crow was Bulldawg's favorite receiver with five catches for 47 yards.

Pine Ridge travels to Bennett County on Friday and Red Cloud on the 15th while Hot Springs host Vermillion on Friday and Lead-Deadwood on the 15th.

Pine Ridge opens volleyball season strong

CUSTER - Pine Ridge defeated Moorcroft, Wyo., Edgemont twice and New Underwood twice to get to the Custer Invitational volleyball tourney championship. Custer defeated Pine Ridge 25-22, 19-25 and 25-19 for the championship.

"We have a good offense down with some strong players who can play anywhere on the floor," said Nellie Long who is back for her 13th year as head coach after taking a couple of years off, "we have a strong team with youth and some older girls for experience."

Pine Ridge defeated St. Francis 3-0 on Thursday; they travel to Todd County on Thursday, Sept. 7th and to Little wound on Sept. 19th.

Three sophomores, Lacey Weston, Saudia Tasso and Liane Her Many Horses anchor the starting six with Keisha Brewer, a junior, according to Long. Devon Red Cloud, Robin Webber and the twin Danielle and Misty Moousseau take turns for the other two positions with Aimee Pond serving as the Libero.

Sophia Janis, Shaina Lays Bad, Alyssa Cottier, Cassie Salway and Dusti Michaud round out the 14 person team.

The 12th annual Lakota Nation volleyball tourney is set for the Rushmore Plaza civic center on Sept. 29th and 30th. Todd County defeated Red Cloud in the championship match last year 25-20 and 25-17.

The two day meet includes two pools participating in round robin play with the top two teams from each pool playing in a single elimination tournament for the championship. Pool A this year includes Todd County, Crow Creek, Standing Rock, St. Francis, Takini and Little Wound while Pool B includes Cheyenne Eagle Butte, Custer, Crazy Horse, Red Cloud, Pine Ridge and St. Thomas More.

Play gets underway each day at 9 a.m.

Pine Ridge Indian Health Service Electronic Health Record

The Pine Ridge Area Indian Health Service along with Kyle, Wanblee, Porcupine, Allen and Manderson Clinics will be moving toward implementing E.H.R. in the later months of 2006.

Right now all of your medical information is securely stored in a big folder called a medical chart.

The paper chart will continue to contain historical information of use to providers for sometime leading to a truly paperless record.

This will significantly reduce patient safety concerns associated with illegible handwritten notes, misplaced or incomplete records, E.H.R. will also allow providers to prescribe medications, order labs and x-rays and retrieve results faster than waiting for paper results to arrive.

E.H.R. has the ability to display and graph blood pressure, weight, blood sugar and labs.

Little explains the role of the traditional tokala okolakiciye

By Archie Beauvais
Times Staff

Archie Little

ST. FRANCIS - Sicangu elder, Archie Little, has worked and traveled in his day and now enjoys having a schedule that is flexible so that he can assist people or institutions when called upon. His first language is Lakota and he says speaking English can often be risky if you do not fully understand some words.

He explained that in traditional Lakota society, the 'tokala okolaciye' or 'fox society' was in evidence way before the arrival of Columbus to our Native shores. He said, "Le tokala okolakiciye ihani uelo before Columbus. Hehan 'tokala' hena zuya ye wica ecakiyapi. Nahan 'tokala' eye ki ehankiye suta nahan otehike.' He added that in early times that the 'tokala' was regarded as a warrior and, in fact, would often attack the enemy before the rest would engage. "Okicize eyap hantas tokala tokeya geyap. Cante' t'insiyapi." The 'tokala' was strong in tradition and in their hearts.

The life of a 'tokala' was that of sacrifice and watching over the people and their lodges. He explained in Lakota that, "Hena in lila Lakoliye. Stu ste iciye unpi. Na hena wawokiye mani. Oyate awanciyankapi. Ti eyasna wawanciyapi."

As society members would monitor the needs of others, they might for example, check someone's wood supply. "Wanji can nicap cansna icupi." A "tokala" might have little supplies or a place to sleep, but he would put the needs of others before his and never take anything for his help.

Little explained, "Oyate ki tokeya ewicayaglekte" which means putting the people before ones self.

The life of one in the 'tokala okolakiciye' begins with an initiation and a ceremony in which a mentor is assigned to watch over one for a year to see if they can prove worthy of being a 'tokala.' Little says that on the Pine Ridge, there is a fairly active society today that has many members. His mentors are Wilmer Mesteth and 'Chub' Thunder Hawk.

In today's world, the image of the 'tokala' as warrior has dramatically changed as the demands and needs are different. Now one might need assistance in approaching a bureaucracy or

Oglala man killed in vehicle accident on U.S. highway 83

MISSION - Lincoln Cross Dog, 42, of Oglala was killed in a motor vehicle accident on Friday, August 25 on U.S highway 83 south of Mission. According to Rosebud Law Enforcement Services Chief of Police, Charles Red Crow, Cross Dog was pushing his pickup truck off the road after it had run out of gas. He was in the northbound lane and the vehicle was clipped from behind. The impact vaulted it into the southbound traffic and it was struck by oncoming traffic.

The highway was closed down at that point by law enforcement authorities until Officer Robert Sedlmajer arrived. Sedlmajer is versed in accident reconstruction for the Rosebud police department.

Red Crow said that the coroner had pronounced Cross Dog dead at the scene.

Rides provided for Sept. 16 Vietnam veteran honoring

PINE RIDGE - The Oglala Sioux Tribe Veteran's Affairs office, working with the vice chair's office, is in the process of arranging transportation for those Vietnam vets who would like to attend the South Dakota Vietnam War memorial dedication.

The dedication is set for Sept. 16 if you are a Vietnam vet and would like to go to this event, please call the vets office at 867-5577 adn get on teh "Sign Up To Go" list. Seating is limited, so this will be on a first come first served basis.

Also for Bennett County, Post #240 will be taking a bus and anyone needing a ride can call 685-1447.

This memorial will be a lasting monument to the South Dakota veterans of the Vietnam War, standing forever in remembrance of their sacrifices.

Find out about the dedication events being held the weekend of Sept. 15-16, 2006, in Pierre, South Dakota, by viewing the Web site at http://www.sdvietnamwarmemorial.com.

This event is designed to give the veterans the thank you they never received when they returned home in the 60s and 70s, and will be one of the largest celebrations ever planned for in the city.

OLC receives $325,000 for facilities

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - More than $600,000 in federal financial help has been earmarked for two tribal colleges in South Dakota, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The USDA is providing the funds through its Rural Development Tribal College Initiative Grant program, aimed at developing essential facilities. Oglala Lakota College will get $100,000 dollars for building repairs and installation of a water line and another $225,000 dollars to purchase equipment and supplies.

Sisseton Wahpeton College will get $300,000 for heating, ventilation and air conditioning improvements. Applicants must go through a nationwide competitive process. Eligible facilities include clinics, transitional housing, administrative buildings, and child care centers.

Winner Lakota community holds powwow

By Archie Beauvais
Times Staff

WINNER - A newly erected powwow arbor just west of the Winner Lakota community housing area was the site of the community celebration and contest powwow last weekend. The RST tribal flag was flown proudly over the announcers stand while the American flag was flown in the middle of the arena.

The last powwow in the Winner Lakota community had been held 12 years ago on the north edge of town, according to Rose Mendoza, the powwow coordinator. She promises that next year will be even better. She was assisted by George Small in coordinating the event.

The arena is located on higher ground and is ideal for a powwow. On Saturday, the sky was gloomy and overcast as rain threatened. Marty Makes Room For Them of Antelope was the emcee for the weekend powwow and he also offered a prayer for blessing of the grounds which was called the John King, Sr. memorial arena. While he prayed, he asked for the six directions song.

The Kiyukanpi and NDN singing groups were on the sidelines, while a small number of traditional women and men dancers participated. There were plenty of tiny tots who were getting their practice in for later. RST Ms. Teen Rosebud, Toni Tamayo was in attendance, as well as Tyler Makes Room For Them who was a competitor in the Ms. Rosebud Pageant. Also, Della Spotted Tail, the head women's judge at the Rosebud Fair was dressed in traditional outfit.

Lunch was served to the crowd consisting of a couple of baked turkeys, chicken noodle soup, potato salad and fry bread and it was evident that the powwow committee had planned for the event. Charles Mack, the environmental safety officer at the Rosebud I.H.S. hospital said that he had visited the arena area last Friday and had provided instructions on food safety.

The flags were retired at 5:00 p.m. while three veterans took down and folded them prior to the supper break and the evening session. The session went uninterrupted into the evening session since it looked as if it might rain. However, Mendoza said a lot of fun was held with a snake dance, tug-a-war and hand drum contest held over the course of the weekend.

On Sunday, there were apparently a number of non-Indian visitors to the powwow, while a giveaway was held for Larry Andrews, Sr. and a memorial song sang in the memory of Monica Chasing Hawk.

Little: language

translating something into English. Or an elder might need assistance in making a request at the tribal building and that is where the 'tokala' can be of some assistance.

After a year a mentor might speak for a candidate and advocate for his membership or ask that he wait for a year. "Le wicasa i gi pi, tokala heca telo." Or, when asked to advocate for one he might say, "Nahankci wakanyeja. Waniyetu wanji apetkte."

Some 'tokala' might be regarded as too young and immature and may have to wait for another year.

In the days of old, a "tokala' might be asked to make a trip outside of his homeland and he could not refuse. The trip could be dangerous as there were many enemy tribes and the 'wasicu of course, and one could get killed.

According to Little, there are four junctures in life at which time a 'tokala' would be given a talk by a leader. "Wica itancan woyakapi." At each point there would be talk about expectations, conduct, hunting (wakuliye) family life and mentoring, in turn, other young people who are also 'tokala.'

On the Pine Ridge, when the 'tokala okalakiciye' gathers, there is usually a bon fire all night long and 'tokala' songs are sung.

The elders talk to the young people and share the philosophy and insights of what it means to sacrifice for the good of others.

Little explained some of the advice and philosophy of the 'tokala' as told to him by his mentors. When one has consideration for others and walks in a helping way, it will come back to one so it is best not to be stingy. "Waunsila nahan wawokiya mani. Toksa ake' luhakte. Takini tehkilasni yo."

One should not value things because when you die you will not take them with you. "Ni ta' hantas hena yuha nukinkte sni."

Also, it is best not to fool the people as they will not look upon one as a man again. "Oyate ki wicagna sni yo. Hecanu hantas wicasa niya wastesni."

And, finally when a 'tokala' speaks he must tell the truth and tell it right.

He must not add on or embellish the story. In Lakota it goes, "Woaglaka hantas otunla woglakayo" and never embellish the story is said, "Aju tonsniyo."

Archie Little possesses a wealth of knowledge in Lakota thought and philosophy and often consults with institutions who wish some assistance in translations, storytelling or a song. He once gave a graduation address all in Lakota and explained to the audience that Lakota was his primary language.

He was employed in the alcohol treatment field for 20 years in California and was a disc jockey on the Rosebud for one year and four years on the Pine Ridge.

He has also involved in several movies doing speaking parts. He was in the movies Lakota Woman, Crazy Horse, Broken Bottle, Broken Arrow, two commercials one in Paris and one in Spain, and a documentary done in the Black Hills with Tokyo film company. He has four daughters and four sons.

Poverty spotlight meeting at Kyle on Sept. 28

KYLE - The South Dakota State University Cooperative Extension Service will have eight "Spotlight" meetings as part of an effort to reduce poverty in small towns.

The Spotlight meetings are an introduction to the effort, funded by a two-year grant from the Northwest Area Foundation, to develop community leaders and other resources to reduce poverty. One of the spotlight meetings will be in Kyle , Thursday, Sept. 28 at Oglala Lakota College.

Richards of Pine Ridge drug bust gets 10 years

RAPID CITY (AP) _ One of 16 people charged with drug trafficking on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation has been sentenced to 10 years in federal prison.

Norton Richards of Rapid City pleaded guilty to conspiracy to distribute cocaine.

He and 15 other people were indicted on charges that include conspiracy to distribute cocaine and marijuana, and possession of firearms in relation to drug trafficking.

They were arrested following a Dec. 21 drug bust at a Rapid City motel after someone smelled marijuana smoke coming from a room. A search yielded 1 1/2 pounds of cocaine, guns, ammunition, $16,519 in cash and drug paraphernalia.

The others indicted include: Geraldine Blue Bird, Colin Spotted Elk, Marvella Richards, Clarence Behan, Travis Elk Boy, Dawnee Frogg, Jay Dee Spotted Elk, Howard Blue Bird, Thomas Spotted Bear, Flint Thomas Red Feather, Justin Hawk Wing, Sage Richards, Wenona Richards, Joe Garcia and Rusty Richards.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I like what you say to people and I love your page. I was wondering if you could help me out? First of all I'm like so stressed out lately I have a boyfriend and I like miss this other guy I used to date but I don't know what happened (I got cheated on).

I was wondering if me and him would ever get back together? My sister is pregnant and I was wondering if she will be crabby all her life well... till her birth? Will I do good in school? Will we ever get to see my little sister again? I have been crying at nights ever since we left. Will I have fun on my birthday which is coming up on Wednesday?

Would I ever get to spend a night somewhere besides my own home? Will my dad ever talk to me? Well Anna that's a lot of stress huh? Well I wanted to say thank you and keep up your good work. I like your page and if you had a voting thing I will vote yes all the time ha ha. Pilamaya (Thank you) again

Stressed Out

Dear Stressed Out:

On the ex-boyfriend who cheated on you questions: You will have an opportunity to spend some time with him if you so choose. Be aware that it would not evolve into a relationship; it would be just a secretive casual (which you would later interpret as a feeling of being used).

He will contact you when times get rough with his current girl-friend. He will temporarily break up with his current girl-friend, but will go back to her. My advice girl is - don't go there.

Will your sister always be crabby? Well, she is more crabby in her life than you are...so in one way the answer is yes, but in another no. She will be less crabby after the baby is born but she is a good candidate for the "baby blues" (a condition that happens among many new mothers when their hormones combine along with the realization of the responsibility for the new child and depression hits).

Your sister has a harder time than you do at seeing the beauty in life and is more likely to concentrate on "what is wrong," rather than "what is right."

Yes, you will see your little sister again. It looks like in about two and a half years from now she will be coming to stay with you. You will do quite well in school as long as you remember that it is in direct relationship to the amount of time you give to your studies.

Don't just hope girl - study!

Happy Birthday! A good dinner and family wish you well. There isn't a lot of money to spend on you, but there are a lot of good wishes and love coming your way on this birthday.

Life is long...so you will eventually spend many nights away from home.

As someone that spends two or three nights a week away from home I can tell you that home is the best place to be. This year you will be able to spend a few nights at a friends home and you will get to go with a relative out of town for three days.

Your dad will eventually talk to you. It is just a matter of time. He has combined anger towards your family plus the complexities of his own life to create distance. He will resolve his differences and find healing in his acceptance of his own responsibility in the distance he has created between himself and the ones he loves.

Yes, life is generally stressful for us all. It is what makes us strong and gives us compassion for others. Stress can either give us the ability to cope or to decide to be a mess because of it.

Eventually, given enough stress, you can develop an attitude that not everything needs to be interpreted as a stressor.

Sometimes, acceptance of things we cannot change reduces stress, along with the understanding of not taking everything so personally.

Good luck in developing the perspective that life is good - even if it doesn't always work out the way we want it to, and accepting that it always does work out in the way that it is supposed to: for the highest good of all.

Dear Anna,

I am a 40 year young woman, (smile). My question to you today is why must I always sabotage my employment? I always do something to mess it up. My last job I wasn't honest and I forged a paper that would have gotten me fired but I quit the job before I was fired.

I had an abusive childhood and I did go to a one week co-dependency training a couple of years ago.

But before I went I felt more confident and sure of myself, now that I went through that I feel like I'm reserved and shy I just don't feel the same. I was a confident, out spoken and not shy person. I don't know what happened? I'm trying to find employment around the Rez now. I am working but it's only part time. I want help but am not sure what I should do? Could you give me some advice? I have a son and I am trying to convince my husband to have one more so he won't be alone. Do you see another baby on the way?

Looking for an answer

Dear Looking:

It seems that most people spend a whole lot of time recovering from the first 18 years of their life. That seems a terrible preoccupation to me with the "wrongs" of everything. Once the "wrongs" have been discovered and formally diagnosed, people tend to nurture the injury, thereby creating themselves into the role of victims.

Victims of their parents, circumstance, poverty, ignorance, social climate and location. Everyone really does want a good life; everyone really does want to be a good person and everyone does want to create a better world for their children. Negative energy has a density that tends to absorb the minds and the very soul of people.

Recovery from the injustices served on a person during their youth is simplified when acceptance steps in.

Acceptance of our less-than-perfect parents; acceptance of the hardships we have endured. Acceptance places you into a position of health without blame.

Parents were not motivated to bring harm - some were just not very good parents. They often times were on a self-destruct path that encircled and absorbed everyone in the family into their own chaos and despair. Once you release the perspective that it was done "to" you, and accept instead that it was done "around" you, in other words it is somebody else's problem, then you are on the path of recovery.

Self-sabotage comes from low self-esteem. Somewhere inside you do not feel that you deserve a good, calm, loving life.

Carrying the feeling of being a personal victim of your family, brings around circular thinking that somehow you deserved to be treated poorly. Children never deserve to be treated poorly; yet that cycle exists in a good percentage of homes.

Parents are people. People have troubles and mental problems, addictions, and low self-esteem. This becomes and inter-generational problem.

When you forged a document, it was for positive feed-back. You did not do it to get yourself fired; you did it to somehow make yourself look good.

The problem is quite simple: you don't feel that your ordinary everyday work is good enough to get you the notice that you need (acknowledgment) to feel better about yourself. Correct the problem by understanding yourself, being honest about your motivation, and then understand you own uniqueness, beauty, strength, intelligence and most of all the goodness of your soul. Everyone is a spirit in human clothes.

The Creator has given each of us something valuable: a life. That life carries the spark or life force of the Creator. That life-force is a reflection of the love of the Creator. No life is less valued than any other life, nor more valued.

Your very life means that you are a sacred being of the Creator and that you have equal value to all. Accepting that means that you will also align yourself with the experience of your life also being sacred. That means simply - that you are valued as a spirit and a soul; and therefore everything you have experienced is to your advantage to give you something back. That something: experience; then is to be valued. Your forging of paperwork should give you deep understanding of you insecurity. Take that understanding and give yourself compassion and build that into wisdom.

You now know how it feels to do something wrong; so utilize that for compassion and the losing of judgment upon others. Use that to forgive and accept your family for your rough childhood. See? It's about becoming a better person.

Now, if I didn't lose you in that diatribe, let me take it one step further. Forgive yourself. Once you do that and let it go - then you will find another good job.

The Creator will help you. Keep the compassion; it will come in handy when confronted with information about others who have had a lapse in judgment and do other things that are not right.

Another baby? Yes, but it will be awhile. You need to heal first.

Work on yourself. When you have your new job then you can model yourself into the ideal employee; based on your own understanding of who you want to be.

Good Luck and God Bless.

Dear Anna,

I was on the Internet one day chatting on yahoo chat, and this guy invited me to chat with him so I did.

We were talking for a while then he asked me to be his girlfriend. I said no and that he didn't even know me, but he said he didn't care, he could take the time to get to know me. I said still that didn't mean anything at all, but he kept on asking and asking and I told him how I am disabled and all he said was he didn't mind at all because he has a cousin like that, and he even said that he could see special things about me.

He said my ID name had angel sent from above on it, he even said maybe God sent me to talk to you, so just to shut him up I said yeah that I will be his girlfriend.

We have been dating on line since I was 15 years old, but now I'm starting to have my doubts about him because he said he was going to send me a picture of himself but he never sent it.

Why is he scared of something or what? Is he even telling me the truth about everything? He told me about his age, how he looks, where he is from, and about how I'm his one n' only and he's not dating any other internet girls on line or in his hometown.

Is that even true? Anna can you tell me about this internet guy please? I need to know if this guy is a fake.

Thanks Anna for all your help.

Dear Friend:

There are many good people on the internet who met other good people, however, there are also many people on the internet who prey on others.

The insistence of this man to be your "boyfriend" right away was a big warning sign.

This claim of immediate love, or more realistically a claim of ownership and commitment to an unknown person is dangerous. I see this man as a predator.

He seeks lonely women, particularly young women, and uses claims of "visions and God" to try and create a bond of ownership and loyalty.

He preys on your vulnerability and desire to create a loving relationship as a fuel to aid him in his deceptive role as a "boyfriend," "future lover," and caretaker. He is dangerous. He is not honest.

He hopes to someday place himself in your geographic vicinity, or convince to you come to him. He has created an unhealthy fantasy life, with you as a player. He is sick.

I understand that your limited mobility is an issue for you. I do not want you to feel less than free to have a good life.

I want you to see yourself as an equal to all other people. I want you to understand your own power and beauty. I do not want isolation to commit you to a life of victimization.

I know and have known more than one person in a wheel chair that has a good and healthy life with love and family.

I know two paraplegics that live highly exciting and fulfilling lives: one as a teacher (who married his teacher's assistant) and one as a grandfather who care-takes his grandchildren from his wheel chair.

He and his girlfriend travel together and have many good adventures seeing different parts of this country.

I know of another man on the reservation who serves a vital role to his community in education and community service and is a happily married man and father. You have to release yourself from your image of constraint and trust your own instincts.

When you email somebody, and they immediately set up alarms within you sever the relationship at that moment.

If you have to, get a new email address and discontinue use of the old one. Forward your new address to your friends and quit checking email on the old address.

Block his address from your email. Do not respond to him anymore.

You can tell him you are getting married, or you are moving to Italy, or nothing at all. It may help you to give him one final email telling him that you are onto him, but he will respond and tell you that you are wrong and that he intends nothing bad towards you.

Whatever you do, end it, and end it now.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868 @gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551. All requests may be subject to publication.

In memory of Myrtle Fool Head-Grosz
Birthday memorial on September 6

Upon my fingertip, today I caught a tear.

I pondered all it's meaning, held with in its bounds.

Sparkling with all the love, of many a past year.

But listen very closely and hear the sorrowed sounds.

My tears are those of missing you,

A void that's never filled.

From day to day I'm at a loss, not knowing what to do.

My heart's a rocky soil, parched and untilled.

My thoughts are often afar off, but mosty are of you.

I caught a tear today upon my fingertip.

I strained to see the memories you've left me.

Your name and all you were and are, rest upon my lips.

Someday again I know I'll see you, just you wait and see.

I've got so many tears I know I'll never run out.

Each one I catch I'll be thinking of you.

For there is no doubt.

Please, won't you remember me too.

I...miss...you...

We love you and miss you every day and think about you...ALWAYS!

Love,

Cheyenne, June, Kateri, Cassidy, Jessie, Tyler, Wakinyan, Andrea and Marq

In memory of Unci Myrtle Grosz

Of all the precious gifts in life,

However large or small,

To have had you as our grandma,

Was the greatest gift of all...

Happy Birthday! We love and miss you!

June, Kateri, Cassidy, Jessie, Tyler and Wakinyan

In loving memory of Donald C. Longman

There isn't a day that goes by we don't think of you. I wish you were here with me and my big sis. We both miss you very much. Life isn't the same without you so till we meet again we will always love and miss you.

OGLALA SIOUX TRIBE ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION PROGRAM NOTICE OF SOLICITATION FOR BIDS REMEDIATION OF BALEFILL AT RED SHIRT TABLE

The Oglala Sioux Tribe's Environmental Protection Program is soliciting proposals for work to be conducted to remediate the tribe's municipal solid waste balefill, located on Red Shirt Table.

Current conditional at the landfill site do not meet minimum specifications of the Oglala Sioux Tribe's (OST) specifications and is not in compliance with all RCRA Subtitle D specifications. Broken or breaking bales of trash and loose trash are improperly placed on the balefill floor, improperly stacked and not compacted to an acceptable density. The drainage system is no longer properly graded and is not functioning appropriately and litter is scattered along the perimeter of the facility. The tribe intends to bring this facility into compliance and maintain it in that manner afterward.

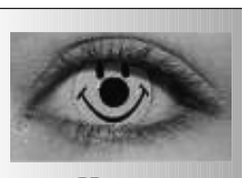
Minimum scope of work:

- All banded bales, broken bales and loose trash will be pushed to the sides of the landfill and properly compacted
- All loose trash will be contained to prevent further escape of litter off of the facility site
- The floor of the facility will be brought to a one-percent (1% grade) to allow for proper drainage of the site.
- The pipes for the leachate collection system will be spot-checked to assess their condition
- The slope of the sides of the balefill will be checked to assure they remain in compliance with the design and/or appropriate operating specifications and corrected to those specifications where necessary
- A 30-year litter fence will be constructed around the perimeter of the premises to prevent excursion of litter off of the facility premises
- Cover soil of a minimum amount of 2,500 cubic yards will be assured to be present and stockpiled for winter use

Period of work:

The OST wishes this remediation work to be completed before the end of the 2006 construction season, preferably within 30 days of award of this project to the successful contractor. If any prospective contractor cannot or does not reasonably expect to be able to comply with that timeline, they must state that in their submitted proposal.

Evaluation criteria and minimum requirements:



- The proposals must include a statement of the equipment to be used to complete the project, and how that equipment is to be secured or provided. Any equipment cost is to be paid by the successful contractor and will be assumed to be covered within the overall submitted bid.
- The successful contractor will be responsible for costs covering transportation of equipment to and from the site, fuel for that equipment, all appropriate insurance, and equipment operator labor costs.
- The successful contractor will be responsible for costs for materials and labor necessary to construct the 30-year litter fence around the site perimeter.
- The successful contractor will be required to have a minimum of five (5) years experience in the design, operation and/or management of a Subtitle D-compliant solid waste facility. Professional certifications or degrees in management of landfills, transfer stations, solid waste operations and/or landfill design will increase the scores given submitted proposals during the evaluation process, as will additional years of experience in these areas.
- The successful contractor will be required to have a minimum of five (5) years experience in operation of heavy equipment, trucks, trailers and landfill leachate systems. Professional certifications or degrees and additional years of experience will increase the scores given submitted proposals during the evaluation process.
- The successful contractor will be required to have a current OSHA 40-hour certification for any employees or staff who will be present or working at the site.

Proposal release date and required date of submission:

The Environmental Protection Program of the Oglala Sioux Tribe wishes to receive as many proposals for consideration as possible, but is also facing an urgency in the face of the waning construction season. The notice of this opportunity to bid will be published in newspapers and information about it will be broadly distributed via the internet.

- The official release date of the solicitation of proposals will be Friday, September 1, 2006.
- Proposals will be accepted in hard copy form by mail or fax. They will also be accepted electronically as a document in either Microsoft Word (.doc) or Adobe Acrobat (.pdf).
- The deadline for submission of proposals will be Friday, September 15, 2006 at 3 p.m., Mountain Daylight Time.

IMPORTANT NOTICE: Whereas the Oglala Sioux Tribe believes that a high-quality proposal can only result from a contractor who has visually surveyed or inspected the site in question, the Tribe will not reimburse or be responsible for any cost incurred by a prospective proposer in accomplishing said visual survey or inspection.

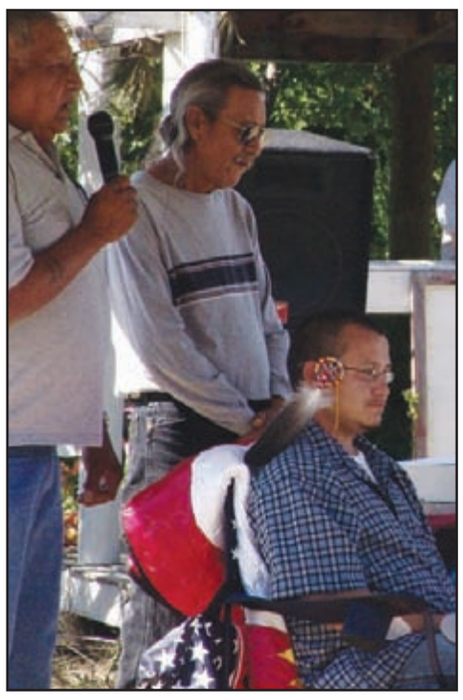
Candidates certified for OST primary



By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - On Wednesday, Sept. 13, the OST Election Board issued a list of 111 candidates who have been certified for the upcoming 2006 tribal election. Members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe have until Sept. 15 to challenge anyone on the list or to petition the addition of any names to the list. On Monday, the tribal council approved an election court of appeals which included Cornel Conroy, Francis Pumpkin Seed and Tony Javon Ten Fingers with the alternates Barb Jones and Connie Brewer.

Current president Alex White Plume, Cecelia Fire Thunder, the first woman ever elected to the presidency and four time president, John Yellow Bird Steele lead the list of presidential candidates. Harold Dean Salway, past two time president, current vice president, Eileen Janis and past vice president Dennis King also are running including first term council representative Will Peters from Pine Ridge who chairs the education committee. Larry Swalley, Gary Lays Bad, Robert Benson, Jeff Not Help Him and Joyce Sun Bear are also running for president.

Wayne Weston, Frederick Cedar Face, Melanie Two Eagle, Louis Winters, Sr. and William Shorty Brewer have been certified as candidates for vice presi-

MARTIN - Recently Corporal Dustin Cottier of LaCreek District was honored by his family with a dinner and a giveaway at the Bear Creek pow wow grounds north of Martin. Cottier was given a Lakota name Mni Akicita Tokeya Eyasa (Water Soldier Goes First). The event was well attended by family and community. Cottier served in the Marine Corp for four years and was employed to Egypt, Japan and in Iraq.

He is the son of Craig Dillion and Bonnie Cottier and has a brother, an adopted brother and two sisters and currently works for the Oglala Sioux Tribe Water Conservation. Frank Marshall, veterans service officer and community member, said he was honored to give the Marine his Lakota name. "This young man sets an example for his younger generation," said Marshall. Dr. Elgin Bad Wound tied his feather.

Cottier enlisted in the Marines not only for his country and for himself but he said in growing up with his adopted brother Frank 'Yamni' Bettelyoun, they would talk about joining the Marines together. Bettelyoun died in a car accident and Cottier went on to fulfill the dream for both of them.

American Horse School honors Around Him

ALLEN - Last Thursday, American Horse School held their annual back to school wacipi introducing their staff to the public.

The school also honored John Around Him, long time spiritual leader and Lakota language and culture instructor.

He spent many years as an advocate for veterans, a well known eyahapa and an advocate for inmates in the state penitentary.

Also honored was Juanita White Eyes, who has been in the health field for many years.

She was a long time nurse at the school.

Council action: approves new grazing rates, takes no action on Cangleska

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - "We could have avoided taking this issue to the brink," said Garfield Steele, council representative from Wounded Knee District and chairman of the judiciary committee, "if you had come in to the judiciary committee meetings or turned in your quarterly reports that are required by all chartered organizations."

Steele earlier had presented a resolution from the judiciary committee to the tribal council that would move four federal grants from Cangleska, Inc. to Victims of Crime Assistance program headed up by Rosalie Janis; the grants were from the Department of Justice awarded to the Oglala Sioux Tribe to assist Cangleska, Inc to meet their mission and totaled $1.5 million.

The discussion included charges of sabotage by Cangleska, Inc. to the computer system at the tribal courthouse, questions of a lack of accountability by a chartered organization and laid out a history of missed communications and an inability to work together.

"What the judiciary committee is proposing is not in any way to take away any services or any jobs from Cangleska," said Will Peters, council Representative from Pine ridge Village who serves on the judiciary committee, "the tribe just wants to take administrative control of their resources and assure accountability."

In a session that had all of the atmosphere of a hearing, chief judge Lisa Adams spoke of problems with the computers at the tribal court, attorney general

Oglala, Sicangu veterans prepare for Vietnam War memorial dedication

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Orlando Morrison, the Director of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's veteran's affairs office reports that his office is making final preparations for the South Dakota Vietnam Memorial dedication being held in Pierre this weekend.

Billie Jo Thunder and Troy Lynn Peneaux have been working since March getting the word out to Vietnam veterans on the Rosebud to register for the event. In fact, Billie Jo has been doing a lot of the registration online for veterans wishing to attend the event. As far back as March, Billie Jo went on KINI announcing the registration procedure for the event.

The state of South Dakota has also embarked on an intense campaign to get Vietnam veterans registered for this dedication and the free concert and related activities. Morrison said that there are going to be great door prizes in the form a Harley-Davidson and 42 inch plasma television set.

Morrison said that one of the event coordinators noted that in addition to the thousands of Vietnam veterans expected at the memorial dedication, an additional forty to fifty thousand people may attend. He said, "This is one event which will bring in the most veterans. We are taking 16-17 Sicangu veterans and they will be camping out at the Pierre Indian School."

Morrison noted that the formal dedication ceremony is being held on Saturday and by now most veterans should have gotten their tickets that will allow them entry into the event. One can go to www.sdvietnamwarmemorial.com see if, in fact, they are registered.

The RST veteran's affairs will be making a presentation to the RST council on Wednesday to see if they will provide funding for those veterans who have signed up to attend. Morrison said that RST president, Rodney M. Bordeaux, requested a list of names of those veterans wishing to attend. William Menard will represent RST in the parade as he will carry the RST veteran's staff.

Ron Gassman, who is also a veteran, will be one of the van drivers who will be transporting veterans up to the dedication over the weekend.

On the Pine Ridge reservation, Frank Marshall and Ted Twiss have made parallel preparations in anticipation of the day long trip to Pierre. Marshall, has been a volunteer veteran's service officer since 1987 and reports that the OST council funded 27 veterans who will be making the trip on Saturday. He said, "We rented a bus from American Horse School with a driver and we presented a proposal to tribal finance. The veterans will get a per diem and one of them will be a color guard carrying the tribal staff."

Marshall served in the U. S. Marines from 1959-63 and traveled from Hawaii to Japan to Hong Kong and to the coast of South Vietnam. His unit did not go ashore; however, it was a combat ready battalion landing team.

His military training was in artillery and he went overseas twice.

He received his veteran's service officer training in Denver at the National Veterans Training Institute, while Twiss received his in Port Angelis, Wash.

He said, "Enos Poor Bear was an 'eyapaha' and he had me drive him to a meeting in Pine Ridge in 1987 and he developed laryngitis. He asked if I could 'eyapaha' at the meeting. He supported veterans quite a bit."

He continued, "A lot of the veterans know me, so I'm kind of a fixture. I am able to establish a rapport with them. I am trained to help them even giving them a buck from my pocket. I would feel awful if I couldn't help them when I could."

Marshall says he was involved in taking other Korean and Vietnam veterans and a lady Vietnam veteran to Washington, DC and is a lifetime member of the American Indian Veterans Association.

The weekend lineup for Vietnam veterans and their guests shows an hour by hour schedule of events, beginning on Friday with a continuous Vietnam War traveling wall, open USO tents, the availability for counseling for veterans and an evening concert featuring the Beach Boys.

On Saturday, there will be a heroes parade with the dedication and unveiling ceremony held at 2 p.m. Helicopter rides will be available all day long and the Steve Miller band will be featured in concert in the evening at 6 p.m. with Credence Clearwater Revisited.

On Sunday, the fun will continue with a free breakfast. Counselors will be available, information booths will be open and the Fallen Sons and Daughters Remembrance Field will be open.

OST council action

Alberta Miller talked about the needs and future of the prosecutors office, George Twiss spoke about Cangleska's history and role in the development of the tribal court, Wayne Weston talked passionately about the role of Cangleska, Karen Artichoker, CI director, spoke about the consequences to the ability of Cangleska to continue to offer the services here on Pine Ridge and in Rapid City and Rosalie Janis spoke on VOCA's willingness to fill a need that the council believes is important.

After two hours of discussion and a failed tabling motion, Steele decided to pull his resolution back and give all sides an opportunity to sit down and figure a way to work together on very similar goals for the best interest of the Oglala Sioux Tribe and its members.

Cangleska was first chartered in October of 1996 with a stated purpose of eliminating violence within our families, providing safe shelter to victims of domestic violence, and to effect social change by education.

In 2001, the OST judiciary committee designated Cangleska as the lead agency in development of network technology for the purpose of developing an integrated information system for the OST criminal justice system to increase system effectiveness, victim safety and offender accountability.

In other matters on Monday the council voted 8-5 to establish a minimum annual grazing rate for the Pine Ridge Reservation at $14.37 per AUM; voted 9-4 to approve ordinance waiving bond requirement for the leasing of range units on Pine Ridge reservation; voted 10-2 to direct the Bureau of Indian Affairs to reassign Gordon Rosby, contract specialist for the BIA in facility management contracts and to exclude him from the Pine Ridge Reservation, voted 12-0 to give facility manager a deadline of 30 days to open the new detention facility or come and remove the facility from Pine Ridge Reservation; voted unanimously to hold the hearing for the Crazy Horse school board on Sept. 25 in Wanblee.

Morgan, Scott lead Red Cloud's romp over Hill City

Little Wound clobbers St. Francis

Falcons claws Eagle Butte, Warriors tips Thorpes

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE/ST. FRANCIS - A.B. Morgan, Red Cloud's junior quarterback, connected on five touchdown passed and Billy Scott, a junior half back rushed for 132 yards and two touchdowns Friday as Red Cloud rolled over the Hill City Rangers 44-20.

The Crusaders scored quickly in the first quarter going up 19-0; Scott opened the scoring with a five yard plunge for a touchdown, David Giago grabbed a 51 yard pass from Morgan for the second TD of the game and Morgan hit Scott on a 20 yard TD pass before the end of the first quarter; Sun Jung Park hit the point after to give Red Cloud a 19-0 lead after one.

The Crusader defense held down the Rangers as Art Vitalis, a junior cornerback, intercepted a Hill City pass in the first quarter and Marlon Kelly, a senior linebacker recovered a fumble on the Red Cloud 29 yard line to stop a Hill City drive in the second period. Giago grabbed his second TD pass from Morgan, from five yards out early in the second to give Red Cloud a 25-0 lead.

Brian Bohnet, a senior running back got Hill City on the board with a four yard TD run with two minutes left in the first half but Kelly helped get the six points right back with a 14 yard catch for a touchdown on Red Cloud's next drive. Nash Koel, a sophomore tight end answered with an 85 yard kick-off return for a touchdown to cut Red Cloud's lead to 32-14 after a two point conversion run by Evan Berberich. The Crusaders were not done yet as Christian McGhee pulled down a 45 yard Morgan pass for a touchdown, Morgan's fifth first half TD pass to give Red Cloud a 38-14 halftime lead.

"We played stronger today," said Nick Dressel, Crusader head coach, "our defense looked stronger and our offensive line behind the coaching of Luza Berg really stepped up today."

Giago wrapped up the Red Cloud scoring with an interception and runback for a touchdown from the Hill City 12 yard line. Dusty Swanson put the final touches on the game score with a 15 yard run for a Ranger TD and a final score of 44-20.

Andrew Twiss led the Crusader defense with 12 tackles and recovered a fumble in the third quarter. Scott excelled on both sides of the line, finishing with 10 tackles, 18 carries for 132 yards and a touchdown and four receptions for 52 yards and a touchdown. Morgan finished with 11 completions out of 18 passes for 204 yards and five touchdowns. Red Cloud is now 2-0 on the season and hosts Pine Ridge on Friday at 2 p.m.

Bryce Hornbeck, Little Wound's junior wide receiver and defensive back grabbed two Johnny Cloud touchdown passes and ran back an interception for a touchdown to lead the Mustangs to a 53-14 romp over the St. Francis Warriors on Friday in St. Francis.

JC Mesteth, a junior running back, opened the scoring for Little Wound with a five yard TD run in the first quarter, Rich Big Boy's two point conversion on the ground gave the Mustangs a quick 8-0 lead. JJ Arcoren came right back and scored for the Warriors to make it 8-6 but Cloud hit Hornbeck with a 35 yard TD pass at the end of the first quarter giving Little Wound a 14-6 lead.

Mesteth scored his second touchdown on a nifty 24 yard run halfway through the second while Hornbeck grabbed his second TD pass, a 25 yard pass from Cloud to give the Mustangs a 26-6 halftime lead.

"Our defense stepped up and controlled the line of scrimmage," said Darrell Hunter, Little Wound coach, "we really ran a balanced offense; when they stopped our running game, we hit our first pass for a touchdown, after that we were able to score both on the ground and through the air."

Devon LeBeau, a senior wide receiver, opened the scoring in the second half pulling in a 30 yard TD pass from Cloud in the third, Cloud's point after kick gave Little Wound a 33-6 lead. St. Francis scored a touchdown on the ground and added a two point conversion to cut the lead to 33-14, it would be their last score.

Shilo Pierce scored on a 15 yard run followed by Harold Top Bear's five yard run and Hornbeck wrapped up the scoring with an 85 yard return of an interception for a TD in the fourth to give the Mustangs a 53-14 win.

Cloud finished with six completions out of 12 passes for 190 yards and three touchdowns, Hornbeck finished with 212 all purpose yards and three touchdowns, Shilo Pierce had seven carries for 102 yards and a touchdown and JC Mesteth ran twice for 29 yards and two TDs. Little is 2-0 on the season and will host crow Creek on Friday at 1pm; St. Francis in 0-2 and travels to Todd County on Friday.

Pine Ridge was in the red zone three times and could not score as Bennett County won a tough defensive struggle 16-12 on Friday night in Martin.

Dave "Bulldawg" Michaud, Pine Ridge's senior running back and linebacker scored both of Pine Ridge's touchdowns from the defensive side of the line. After a scoreless first half, Michaud recovered a Bennett County fumble on the Warrior eight yard line and ran it in for the first score of the game and a Pine Ridge 6-0 lead. Bennett County came right back as Andrew Olson ran the kick-off back 83 yards for a touchdown and a 6-6 tie.

Early in the fourth quarter, Michaud intercepted a Corbin Kratovil pass on the Bennett County 19 yard line and ran it back for a touchdown, giving Pine ridge the lead again 12-6. After four turnovers, Oris Morrison recovered a Bennett County fumble on the Pine Ridge 29 yard line, Carson Smith recovered a Thorpe fumble, Louis Ramos intercepted an Austin Haynes pass in the end zone then Carson Smith recovered a Juan Ramos fumble at the Pine Ridge 22 yard line, Corbin Kratovil ran up the middle for an 11 yard touchdown and Carson Smith ran the two point convdersion in for a Bennett County 14-12 lead.

"As a coach, I just did not have them ready," said Dave Michaud, Thorpe head coach, "but as the season goes along we will be more and more ready, hopefully peaking at playoff time."

The final score of the hard fought defensive game came as Pine Ridge's center snapped the ball over quarterback Kenny Apple's head forcing Apple to cover it in the end zone for a Warrior safety and a final 16-12 win.

"We lost our starting quarterback, Harley Cortier to an injury a week before our first game and our starting center after that, we tried Bulldawg as quarterback last week and this week went with our third quarterback, Kenny Apple," said Michaud, "after breaking his arm two years ago and not playing football at all last year, he did an exceptional job in his start on Friday - we just had too many turnovers."

JS Two Bulls led the defense with 11 tackles and an interception, Oril Morison finished with eight tackles and two fumble recoveries, Louis Ramos had two interceptions while Michaud scored two touchdowns on an interception and a fumble recovery, added 10 tackles and carried the ball 18 times for 58 yards.

Pine Ridge is 0-2 on the season and travels to Red Cloud on Friday for a 3 p.m. game while Bennett County hosts Stanley County on Friday night.

Wilson-Pine wins back to back races, getting ready to defend his state championship

CHADRON/BELLE FOURCHE - On Thursday, Alex Wilson-Pine, a senior at Pine Ridge, defeated Kiko Mendoza, a sophomore at Takini, in a battle of two state cross country champions during the Belle Fourche Invitational.

Mendoza had the early lead but midway through the race, Wilson-Pine passed him up for good to take the win 16:13 to 16:37. At the 2005 South Dakota State cross country championships, Wilson-Pine won the Class A title while Mendoza won the Class B title.

Takini's Sam Mendoza took 35th while Pine Ridge's Wilbur Red Elk was 36th and Shawn Keith was 40th. James Pine/Pine Ridge took second in the junior varsity race.

On the girl's side of the race, Christian Janis for Pine Ridge was 7th followed by her sister Sophia in 8th.

Wilson-Pine made it two in a row with a solid win at Chadron running the 5,000 meter course in 16:38 knocking off Derrick Donavan of Gering who finished in 16:52. Ferron Swiftbird/PR was 18th, Ezra Zephier of Red Cloud was 26th and Shawn Keith/PR was 32nd. Scottsbluff won the team competition over Sidney and Gering.

Pine Ridge girls took fourth in the team race as Krista No Leaf was the top finisher in 11th. The Lady Thorpe team included Christian Janis in 16th, Sophia Janis in 20th, Allie Janis in 25th, Cheyenne Ten Fingers in 30th and Aimee Pond in 37th. Red Cloud had Desirae Blacksmith in 18th, Saige Pourier in 19th and Casara Pine in 29th.

Custer hosts an invitational on Thursday the 14th while Hot Springs hosts on Tuesday the 19th.

What the recently burnt ditches show us

By Ivan Starr
Oglala, S.D.

Driving home from the casino the other day, about half way to Oglala, I found myself doing a rather dangerous driving no-no.

Keeping one eye on the road, I kept glancing at the odd landscape created by recent prairie fires.

With the dry grasses burned to the ground, sharply contrasted against the charred landscape were the plentiful cactus and prairie dog mounds.

What really caught my eye was the uncommon glass exhibit along the ditch. As a side note, it would be fascinating to see all our road's ditches exposed like this.

As I was taking in this remarkable scenery, I realized there is much more there than the bountiful multi-colored glass alcoholic beverage containers of varying shapes, colors, and sizes.

The glass bottles once contained cheap wines, potent hard liquors, and cold beer.

Having served its purpose, by providing temporary contentment for an individual, each bottle was abruptly disposed of. By the way, some of the beverage containers are no longer in use, like the brown quart-sized beer bottle. Perhaps some of these bottles are collector's items now.

I found several points of interest from this refuse: about our past, the residents of the homeland and some seemingly common habits.

It is like opening a door into the past. Archaeologists dig into ancient debris to determine what life may have been like. My little study was similar, only on a much smaller scale.

First, let us consider how the fires started. Most likely, somebody flicked a lit cigarette butt out the car window.

If this were the case, it certainly defines someone's moral turpitude; only a self-centered and pretentious person - one who is above tribal law - can commit such an act. Nature is the other possibility but I think that is highly improbable in this particular situation.

Second, I recall the construction of Highway 18 during the mid1950s and I believe some of those bottles have been lying in that ditch for 50 years.

The glass alcohol containers evidence at least five decades of alcohol consumption; try five decades of unimpeded illegal activity.

Although many will disagree, the bottles strongly suggest the image that Pine Ridge Reservation hosts a large alcoholic family unit of sorts. Actually, the highly apparent defensiveness, mistrust, and anger are seemingly common traits among the people of our homeland, the same characteristics of an alcoholic.

Third, the discarded bottles are the result of years of willful littering. I, for one, am not aware of any tribal littering laws; however, I stand confident that our tribe has laws to control littering.

In this case, we are looking at more than a few tribal members who loathe and disrespect the law of the IRA and of the treaty, including our ancient Lakota creation doctrine.

Perhaps the state's jurisdiction could stop this prevalent communal problem. Off-reservation government levy stiff fines for littering so state roadways are much cleaner than ours are. In addition, I just cannot imagine wasicu littering our highways… unless one is confrontational or drunk.

Fourth, the bottles lay in a specific pattern; every road sign has its own collection. The only explanation for this observable fact is that the signs were targets for "empties."

Can you imagine this, a speeding car with a person hanging out the window preparing to throw a large empty bottle at a road sign? I can personally vouch for this because I too did it when I was young.

Fifth, although alcohol is illegal, many tribal members consume it as if someone canceled tomorrow. Suspicion toward authority is normal among a governed people; however, we seem to have gone one up by casting doubt, mistrust, and loathing on nearly everything in our lives, especially on our liquor laws.

At the same time, it seems people were ridding themselves of the "open containers," which otherwise would have implicated them in a drunk driving violation.

At any rate, possession, consumption, and drunk driving are violations of tribal liquor laws. Where are the MADD and DADD organizations?

Lastly, I remember a Public Safety Commission report published in one of our newspapers.

It pointed out the extremely high rates of alcohol related deaths on our homeland, motor vehicle accidents, beatings, domestic violence, child abuse, etc. It was not long before I realized that this glass-strewn scenery characterizes alcohol-related behaviors across the homeland.

Anyway, recycling is big these days. For an enterprising person, this could be an excellent opportunity. Aluminum recycling is popular and helps to keep our roadways clean.

However, hardly anyone is recycling glass, which is probably the reason for the abundance of discarded glass alcoholic beverage containers along our nation's roadways.

Some time ago, while inquiring about the glass recycling business, I found myself in dire need of money and that ended my little quest.

At that time, I found the nearest glass recycling plant in Colorado. I am sure that situation has changed and some tribal member could be earning money and helping to keep our sacred Unci Maka (Grandmother Earth), our treaty lands, clean.

Things to empower yourself

Most the time, what we fear, never happens

This is the second in a series of articles examining fear.

By Patty Pourier

My granddaughter has a fear of water. I have watched her in the pool. She will start out from the side, she will be relaxed and swimming along pretty well.

She is doing all the things she has been taught in her swimming lessons. She is going with the flow, breathing, and relaxing.

As soon as she knows she can no longer touch the bottom, her mode of operation changes. You can see the fear in her eyes that moves through her body. Soon her head is thrashing around. Her hands start to thrash around widely. Her head no longer has a rhythm, it jerks from side to side. Her feet are paddling wildly, kicking enormous amounts of water.

Her little mind starts to have frightening and overwhelming thoughts of "what if…" Her body tenses. She is looking for something to grab on to.

She usually screams for help. She knows she is doomed.

She panics so hard, she starts to go under. Any enjoyment has gone down the drain. This is no longer fun. This is survival.

She is working too hard at it. She doesn't need to panic. She can float really well, if I am beside her.

All she needs is to breathe, relax, and go with the flow. She will not drown, if she just lets go.

I handle parts of my life the same way as she does swimming. I panic when I become afraid. Panic is our great enemy; I don't need to become desperate.

At times overwhelming problems appear in my life. But the more I panic and struggle the worse they seem to get. The more I ruminate over the fear the larger it gets in my mind. I forget that I can simply, let go, "tread water for awhile". Don't react. Stop and get my breath.

Take an inventory of my abilities to survive. I don't have to struggle, I can relax. I do not have to be motivated by fear. I remember that I can handle the things that happen this day. I do not have to think down the road and all the "what ifs" that may happen.

When I do this a sense of peace and confidence begins to grow. I remember that all is well.

That "this too" will pass. And most of the time, the thing I did fear never even happens.

I have to make the choice during my panic, to relax, breathe, and let go.

It does not come naturally.

Just as my granddaughter's ability to relax in the water does not come naturally, she has to work and concentrate on making it happen.

But it can happen, and a peaceful flow can return.

Online reader enjoys Ask Anna column

Dear Editor:

Somehow I linked to the Lakota Country Times and then to Ask Anna column. My family made a trip up your way last summer and we really liked the area and hope to make it up there again someday. I just wanted to write and say that I really enjoy reading Anna's column and think that she gives some pretty on-the- mark, practical advice. I'm not Lakota or Native American but it seems that no matter where we may live or where we may come from, everyone has the same sort of problems and questions about life. Anyway, I have no questions for her, I just wanted to drop her a line and say "Keep up the good work."

'They cut their names in stone because they died in Vietnam'

"They cut their names in stone because they died in Vietnam" (Jim Young)

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The approaching dedication of the South Dakota Vietnam Veteran's memorial in Pierre this weekend is a historical event for those of us who did not have much fanfare when we returned home from Vietnam.

I don't know if any returning soldiers back in the late 1960s were treated with any greater degree of homecoming celebration if they were an officer or a legitimate war hero. I do know that besides being an unpopular war with thousands of casualties, many of our fellow soldiers often returned to their homes alone; solitary figures with no homecoming parades or marching bands.

During Desert Storm and even now, the returning young soldiers leave and come home as a unit, generally, and are able to enjoy the accompanying camaraderie of their families, friends and the community. The sendoff is often tearful and patriotic, as I witnessed my friend, Charles Mack, when he was headed for Iraq as a tank commander. I knew Charles enough to wish him well then, and I felt a lot of emotion for the families they were leaving. Thankfully, many did return.

Many returning 'Nam Vets' as they were called, often returned to American shores and had to go through picket lines of war protesters and who often maligned them, rather than applaud their return. I remember falling asleep on the tarmac at Cam Rahn Bay on the evening of my return. I barely heard my name as I dozed, as people in the military could rarely pronounce my last name correctly. Twenty four hours later, I was on a plane home from Ft. Lewis, Wash..

Being in a combat zone and being immersed back into society like that, without any kind of debriefing, is often at the heart of many issues that veterans confront. The body and emotional makeup doesn't have time to re-adjust to civilian life quickly, especially if the homecoming is tainted and associated with dishonor or controversy as it was back then.

I just read about a study that was conducted on the effects of 'jet lag' and researchers are now recommending that if one's flight is over six hours to take a break and stay over until the next day and then, continue on. Apparently the body simply cannot adjust quickly to moving through time so quickly.

You can just imagine the 'jet lag' that most of us probably felt in trying to fit into a new uniform, eating a steak dinner, and heading to the nearest airport for a flight home.

Anyway, the whole thing is a nice gesture by the state even if it is some thirty years after we pulled out of Vietnam officially. Hopefully, the Vietnam Vets who truly distinguished themselves from South Dakota will get some kind of official recognition. Many Lakota 'Nam Vets' will likely be there in their respective contingents.

I was nineteen in Vietnam like most young Lakota warriors and I didn't fully understand the politics of the war until later. Many of the people I encountered along the way sure looked like people of color and I didn't quite understand the role we played as any occupying force. We weren't officially at war with North Vietnam as it was called a police action and that made it even more complicated for a young mind.

I thank 'tunkasila' that I returned safely even without any fanfare. It was sad because after I was discharged I didn't wear my uniform home. I should have been proud of my patriotism as Lakota people are proud of protecting the homeland, too.

This was our country at one time and we were always proud of protecting it from encroachment.

Tahansi Jim Young's song "They Cut Their Names in Stone" is a powerful reminder of the sacrifice that Lakota people made during the Vietnam War.

It's a great tribute to our Lakota warriors and I hope it is playing somewhere in Pierre when we arrive. If not, then I think we need to request it on KINI FM in St. Francis and KILI FM in Porcupine on Saturday.

Notes From Indian Country

500 years of terrorism

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

This morning as I drove through downtown Rapid City I realized that many of the signs that appeared all over this city several days after 9/11 and months thereafter, flags, banners and magnetic stickers on automobiles, SUVs and pickup trucks were nearly all gone.

I suppose it is because most Americans have a short memory. Most Indians do not. The terrorism that struck at the very heart of the Indian people for several centuries is still in their hearts and minds. I wrote about this three years after 9/ll and for those folks with short memories, I repeat those words on this 5th anniversary of that horrible day.

The Indian people never knew what act of violence or terror would befall them from the invaders. But death did come. It came in the form of biological warfare when small pox tainted blankets were distributed to the unsuspecting victims.

It came to them from the muzzles of guns that did not distinguish between warriors, women, elders or children. It came to them in the ruthless name of Manifest Destiny, the American edict that proclaimed God as the purveyor of expansion Westward.

Indian people were often slaughtered like animals often while waving the American flag in pitiful efforts to convince their killers that they were not bad people.

At Wounded Knee in 1890, a slaughter took place that the white man often called the last great battle between Indians and the United States Army. It was not a battle. It was one the last heinous acts of terror against innocent men, women and children. The attack by Islamic terrorists on 9/11 was another.

The Indian people died not knowing why as did the people in the World Trade Center. The Lakota died in fear. They died in the frozen snow of that bitterly cold December day at Wounded Knee while fleeing to find safe harbor amongst the Oglala Lakota. These Lakota experienced terrorism by a government that did not consider them to be human beings. They died in the Twin Towers at the hands of a radical people seeking revenge for reasons the victims did not understand.

When human beings can be labeled as less than human their deaths become meaningless. This is the apparent belief of the terrorists and the early settlers. By portraying all Indians as murdering savages, rapists, kidnappers and worse, the national media of the day laid the groundwork for Wounded Knee. In article after article urging the government to remove the Indian people by any means from their homelands, the media stood guilty of fomenting acts of terrorism. Similar articles in the media and speeches in the mosques in the Nations of Islam expressed similar views of Americans. This laid the groundwork for 9/11. A lie repeated often enough becomes a fact in the minds of impressionable people. Indians are savages, Americans are infidels and Arabs are heathens. Do you see how this logic works?

Just as the Crusaders believed it was their Christian duty to conquer and kill those Arabs they considered as sub-humans and heathens, so too did America duplicate their misguided logic against the First Americans. The people of the Islamic Nations never forgave nor forgot. The Indian people have largely forgiven, but they have not forgotten. The Christians of the Crusade de-humanized the Arabs, the early Americans de-humanized the Indians and the People of Islam now de-humanize Westerners. It is a vicious cycle that is centuries old.

Just as news stories and movies about Arabs portrayed them as less than human, so did the media portray the indigenous people of America. Their lives then became expendable and meaningless and therefore easily sacrificed for what is believed to be a greater cause. Westerners are now fitted into this same category by the Islamic terrorists.

I think America missed a mighty lesson and opportunity when it did not learn how to treat the rest of the world after its mistreatment of its indigenous people. America has still never settled its debt, either morally or financially, with its indigenous people.

America, as a nation, wept when nearly three thousand of its citizens died at the World Trade Center on 9/11. The Indian people still weep for the thousands killed in the more than five centuries of terrorism foisted upon them by a Nation that did not care. They also weep for those lives lost on 9/11 and for the lives of the many soldiers lost in Iraq.

A philosopher once said, "Great Nations are judged by how they treat their indigenous people," and I am sad to say that America has failed to pass the test of time.

After 500 years the Indian still lives in fear of the terror that is still lurking just around the corner. The Indian people have lost so much in the past 500 years and they still live in terror of what will come next for them.

When the Indian people pray in song, they sing for the lives of all who have come before, for all who are here now, and for all that are to come. To the Lakota life is "hocoka," a circle. They know that what goes around comes around.

It is a lesson that America should learn and live by. "Great nations are judged by how they treat their indigenous people." If America had treated its indigenous people fairly and justly and had taken this lesson to heart in the way it treats the indigenous people of other worlds, would 9/11 have happened? It is something to ponder. The signs, posters and stickers may be gradually disappearing, but I hope the deep feelings that caused them to be exhibited are never lost.

The terrorism that struck at the very heart of the Indian people for several centuries is still in their hearts and minds. I wrote about this three years after 9/ll and for those folks with short memories, I repeat those words on this 5th anniversary of that horrible day.

The Indian people never knew what act of violence or terror would befall them from the invaders. But death did come. It came in the form of biological warfare when small pox tainted blankets were distributed to the unsuspecting victims.

It came to them from the muzzles of guns that did not distinguish between warriors, women, elders or children. It came to them in the ruthless name of Manifest Destiny, the American edict that proclaimed God as the purveyor of expansion Westward.

Indian people were often slaughtered like animals often while waving the American flag in pitiful efforts to convince their killers that they were not bad people.

At Wounded Knee in 1890, a slaughter took place that the white man often called the last great battle between Indians and the United States Army. It was not a battle. It was one the last heinous acts of terror against innocent men, women and children. The attack by Islamic terrorists on 9/11 was another.

The Indian people died not knowing why as did the people in the World Trade Center. The Lakota died in fear. They died in the frozen snow of that bitterly cold December day at Wounded Knee while fleeing to find safe harbor amongst the Oglala Lakota. These Lakota experienced terrorism by a government that did not consider them to be human beings. They died in the Twin Towers at the hands of a radical people seeking revenge for reasons the victims did not understand.

When human beings can be labeled as less than human their deaths become meaningless. This is the apparent belief of the terrorists and the early settlers. By portraying all Indians as murdering savages, rapists, kidnappers and worse, the national media of the day laid the groundwork for Wounded Knee. In article after article urging the government to remove the Indian people by any means from their homelands, the media stood guilty of fomenting acts of terrorism. Similar articles in the media and speeches in the mosques in the Nations of Islam expressed similar views of Americans. This laid the groundwork for 9/11. A lie repeated often enough becomes a fact in the minds of impressionable people. Indians are savages, Americans are infidels and Arabs are heathens. Do you see how this logic works?

Just as the Crusaders believed it was their Christian duty to conquer and kill those Arabs they considered as sub-humans and heathens, so too did America duplicate their misguided logic against the First Americans. The people of the Islamic Nations never forgave nor forgot. The Indian people have largely forgiven, but they have not forgotten. The Christians of the Crusade de-humanized the Arabs, the early Americans de-humanized the Indians and the People of Islam now de-humanize Westerners. It is a vicious cycle that is centuries old.

Just as news stories and movies about Arabs portrayed them as less than human, so did the media portray the indigenous people of America. Their lives then became expendable and meaningless and therefore easily sacrificed for what is believed to be a greater cause. Westerners are now fitted into this same category by the Islamic terrorists.

I think America missed a mighty lesson and opportunity when it did not learn how to treat the rest of the world after its mistreatment of its indigenous people. America has still never settled its debt, either morally or financially, with its indigenous people.

America, as a nation, wept when nearly three thousand of its citizens died at the World Trade Center on 9/11. The Indian people still weep for the thousands killed in the more than five centuries of terrorism foisted upon them by a Nation that did not care. They also weep for those lives lost on 9/11 and for the lives of the many soldiers lost in Iraq.

A philosopher once said, "Great Nations are judged by how they treat their indigenous people," and I am sad to say that America has failed to pass the test of time.

After 500 years the Indian still lives in fear of the terror that is still lurking just around the corner. The Indian people have lost so much in the past 500 years and they still live in terror of what will come next for them.

When the Indian people pray in song, they sing for the lives of all who have come before, for all who are here now, and for all that are to come. To the Lakota life is "hocoka," a circle. They know that what goes around comes around.

It is a lesson that America should learn and live by. "Great nations are judged by how they treat their indigenous people." If America had treated its indigenous people fairly and justly and had taken this lesson to heart in the way it treats the indigenous people of other worlds, would 9/11 have happened? It is something to ponder. The signs, posters and stickers may be gradually disappearing, but I hope the deep feelings that caused them to be exhibited are never lost.

Caught Being Good Incentive Program earns points for spending

KYLE - The Little Wound School Elementary's Incentive Program "Caught Being Good" is for students Kindergarten through fifth grade to promote and reward positive behavior, good attendance and advance academics.

Students will be given a token for each of the categories listed and worth one point.

Students may earn up to five points per day, one for attendance, two for behavior and two for daily work. Total points per week will be 20 or 25 points depending on the number of school days for the week. Points cannot be taken away once they are awarded.

The students may purchase items from the Little Wound Elementary Store, which will be open three times a week, 30 minutes per class. The tentative schedule will be as follows: Tuesday, K-1st; 12- 3:30; Wednesday, 2nd - 3rd from 12:30 - 2:30 and Thursday, 4th - 5th from 12 to 3 p.m..

Attendance (1 point per day)

"The elementary store will be located in the old elementary concession room, where school supplies and small items will be available for students to purchase," said Reva High Horse.

In order to receive the point for attendance, the student can not be tardy and must be in attendance all day. Excused school absences do not count for the point.

Behavior (one point per session a.m. and p.m. subject to change)

The student is to abide by all school rules as outlined in the student handbook and the classroom rules. The student is not to be disruptive and must not be written up for anything. The student must display the Lakota Values of Respect, Generosity, Wisdom and Courage.

Academics/Daily Work (1 point per session)

The student must complete assigned school work adequately and/or participate in class.

The students may keep and record their daily points (may be assisted by SA and/or the teacher.)

Beginning in October, the elementary school will again initiate Family Literacy Nights, which were a success last year.

The events will focus around helping families with skills to empower their students in reading and math. Also topics include family health with exercises, walking and alcohol and drug prevention awareness speakers, said High Horse.

Pine Ridge Indian Health Service Electronic Health Record

The Pine Ridge Area Indian Health Service along with Kyle, Wanblee, Porcupine, Allen and Manderson Clinics will be moving toward implementing E.H.R. in the later months of 2006.

Right now all of your medical information is securely stored in a big folder called a medical chart.

The paper chart will continue to contain historical information of use to providers for sometime leading to a truly paperless record.

This will significantly reduce patient safety concerns associated with illegible handwritten notes, misplaced or incomplete records, E.H.R. will also allow providers to prescribe medications, order labs and x-rays and retrieve results faster than waiting for paper results to arrive.

E.H.R. has the ability to display and graph blood pressure, weight, blood sugar and labs.

Chris Bussey is the new general manager at the Rosebud Casino

'It's hard not to like each other if we know each other well'

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Chris Bussey of the Grand Traverse band of Ottawa and Chippewa of Michigan is the new General Manager of the Rosebud Casino. He apparently assumed his new role on August 28 after the Rosebud Fair and reports that he is happy to be here. He said, "I love to be here. I have never worked on a reservation and there is such a large land base here."

The consulting firm of Tracy McCarty of Las Vegas and California was responsible for the executive search that resulted in the hiring of Bussey. He said, "There were a lot of candidates and I was honored to be chosen."

As a traditional dancer, himself, he will fit in well with the summer powwow schedule on the Rosebud. He says he has read a lot of materials about the Pine Ridge reservation as he has a couple of step sons from there and cannot wait to do much more reading about the social and cultural fabric of the area. He also has two children of his own and all are now grown up.

Bussey brings to the Rosebud Casino a wealth of experience that is steeped in experience and continuing education. His experience was gained on the job as he steadily worked his way up the gaming ladder. He began in 1984 as a black jack and craps dealer, then to pit supervisor. Later, he moved on to floor manager and then assistant manager. He got his first job as a manager in 1996 at the Turtle Creek Casino in Traverse City, MI.

His background is in finance as he worked for Merrill Lynch as a broker. His credentials include a Series 7 and Series 66 which allows him to trade stocks and bonds. He is also licensed as an insurance and mortgage broker.

Chris Bussey

"It's hard to not like each other if we know each other well," he said, which is part of his philosophy in building relationships with other communities and businessness.

Chris Bussey signed a three year contract to make a financial difference and provide appropriate leadership to a tribal business that is very viable, yet, appears to be struggling with holding down related operational costs.

He appears up to the challenge as he notes, "One of my skills is to strengthen existing relationships. It is hard to not like each other if we know each other well." It is a great attitude and philosophy given the diversity of cultures and geographical service area that is the Rosebud Casino.

He explained further, "I have been involved in the Chamber of Commerce. I believe in networking and I understand those things and the need to augment that. We can develop and strengthen partnerships in Valentine and Winner."

Bussey will also serve as the marking director with a staff of four people. He said that in marketing one of their campaigns is a "Call to Action" which apparently explores a comprehensive look at a range of strategies. He understands the need to strengthen and train his management team. He said, "We are getting together on a weekly basis in order to gather ideas. Everyone belongs in marketing."

The casino is giving back or 'comping' about three percent of its gaming revenues to the public and Bussey said that is an acceptable level as long as one can eventually see the impact and benefit of it.

He also said that the majority of the revenue comes from the slot machine, up to ninety five percent, and that John Two Strike as the head of the slots department is very conscientious in his work. Bussey said he hopes to work with Two Strike closely and understand the income fluctuations and trends of income generation.

"One has to have continuing education to keep up with the trends. There are tons and tons in gaming. It is about statistics and ratios" he added.

He said if any young person is planning on a career in gaming, the slots are the place to begin as a good slot director is highly sought after. The pay is good and the work goes beyond just Indian gaming.

One of Bussey's priorities is conducting budget training for his managers and to ensure that RST gets its regular payment from the casino. Finally, when asked about how to involve others in the process, Bussey said, "The first step is to shop in their stores and get to know them. Maybe there is some tourism we can promote for them. The Ottawas were traders and I rely on my ancestors to guide me through such decisions."

The Rosebud Casino has more than 200 employees and an average of $13 to 14 million in revenue yearly.

OLC to hold board elections

KYLE - Oglala Lakota College will hold Board of Trustee and Local Board elections in conjunction with the Oglala Sioux Tribe General Election on Nov. 7.

There are five Board of Trustee positions open. Those districts are Pine Ridge, Oglala, Wounded Knee, Pass Creek, and Eagle Nest.

There are fifteen Local Board positions open. Those districts are: Eagle Nest (1), Oglala (2), Pass Creek (1), Pine Ridge (1), Wounded Knee (1), East Wakpamni (2), Pejuta Haka (3), LaCreek (2), and Pahin Sinte (2).

All defendants sentenced in Kyle Health Center AFLAC fraud case

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) All five people with ties to the Kyle Health Center who stole nearly $100,000 from AFLAC have been sentenced in U.S. District Court.

Gwendolyn Cuny, 51, will serve one year in prison and Patricia Twiss, 57, will serve 18 months in prison after they both pleaded guilty to conspiracy, according to court documents.

Cuny and Twiss, both of Manderson, also must pay total restitution of $99,917.

They are both former Indian Health Service employees.

Sheila LaDeaux, 38, of Rapid City, was given three years of supervised release and, along with other co-defendants, make $36,785 in restitution.

LaDeaux and Paulette Herman, 34, of Kyle, pleaded guilty to health care fraud. Herman was given five years of probation and must make more than $5,600 in restitution.

Victor Goings, 54, of Pine Ridge, was convicted by a federal jury of aiding and abetting health care fraud. He was sentenced to three years probation and ordered to pay $1,240 in restitution.

The scheme began in Jan. 1, 2001, and continued through April 30, 2005, according to court documents.

Cuny and Twiss used their positions with IHS to change dates, names and other information on patient records in order to collect money for themselves and family members from the American Family Life Assurance Company.

The five received a total of $99,917 in false claims from AFLAC, according to documents.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am writing this to you because it's been on my mind lately and I was wondering if you could help me understand this question as to why do Lakota women, in general, go with married men who have children?

And who know that these men are married and have been for a long time? It amazes me that our Lakota women are like that.

When I was married I had other women flirting with my then husband and even making crude jokes as to why he was with me?

And their answer was that our marriage was for the sake of the children!! Now that I'm a divorced I see women fighting for left over scraps of another broken down man. It is just amazing for me and my children to see this turmoil happening.

Now, my ex-husband makes no room or time for his kids and he behaves like a child instead of his age and he goes out with women who are our children's age or younger.

It isn't just me that is asking it's others as well cause it's like these women have no shame or self respect or respect for others as well and they go around like their happy while children suffer the consequences. My exes horoscope sign is Taurus.

Just curious

Dear Just Curious:

A generalized answer for every woman and married man is not easy. There are many contributing factors; but the following may create some common denominators:

1. There don't seem to be an abundant number of eligible single men that are responsible, sober, ethical, respectful and healthy. Most of the young eligible men have addiction problems coupled with co-dependency issues.

2. Due to the large number of pregnancies outside of marriage that result in marriage; it is often times assumed by women that all marriages are a result of the desire to create a stable home environment "for the children."

3. According to some of my Lakota women friends, there is a social stigma surrounding being a single woman. It may be interpreted that the single woman is undesirable or somehow "less-than" a single woman and that she is not able emotionally to share her life with a man. There is also the rumor mill that may assume that she is a lesbian.

4. Due to the statistically inordinate high number of alcohol and drug addicted Lakota people, co-dependency is a rampant disease. Many Lakota women go from one relationship right into another; feeding a feeling of insecurity and alone-ness that shakes the very core of the woman's being. Most women would rather be with a man that is not right for her than no man at all.

5. "Winning" a man seems to be a competition. Lakota women are (by my observation) competitive. That is one reason that they do so well in achieving a good education and the seeking of higher employment. They are the successful ones (by percentage comparison to the men), on the reservation and off.

They create new programs, new business endeavors, and a better life through their application of their intelligence and education in their lives. They are the dreamers and are constantly competitive with each other for recognition and acknowledgment of their value in their homes and in their communities. This also leads to much deception, petty jealousies and even the plotting of ruining one-another in the work place to become victorious over one another.

Their co-dependency issues run amok inside their personalities, often times destroying everyone around them so that they feel successful and better than the rest. So they get the promotion, the money, the recognition and create the best homes, the nicest cars and clothes, and the best lives for their children.

Thus said, it is easy to discern why women plague each other. Vast personal insecurity leads them to compete and win at any and all costs.

In a better world they would enjoy each other's successes, be happy for each other and unite together to create what each of them individually wants to create; but cannot create due to the large aggravated problem of competitive behavior.

They are adversaries not sisters. They don't know how to be happy without comparison to each other. They don't know how to feel good about what they are without tearing another woman down and somehow, in their minds, placing themselves above other women.

The sickness in Lakota, is known as being nawesee. It is not a Lakota tradition, but it is a result of years of oppression and co-dependency.

I hope each woman that sees this within herself will begin a new path to wellness and allow herself the freedom from this co-dependency disease.

Dear Anna,

I hope all is well with you. I recently left home for school and I consider it pretty far from home. I was just wondering what you see in my future here, besides the "freshman 15".

Can I make it? The classes are pretty hard for me. I don't want to let anyone down. Will I find love here?

I know that I don't need a man but I feel so alone sometimes. It would be nice to have someone like that around. There is a guy that I really like and I'm not sure how he feels. I'm also scared that I might lose connection with my spiritual ways. I have been having dreams, but am not sure what they mean. I feel like I don't know enough to hang on to HOME, when it comes to the Lakota ways. Will I get help?

Will someone or something guide me to what I need to do? I am so scared that Wakan Tanka has forgotten about me and left me here alone. I'm also worried about my family. Will they be okay and healthy? Do you see my accomplishing my goals and dreams? It seems so impossible.

There is one big dream of mine that I had since a little girl. It feels like it's so far away. Is it even possible? I just want to do something special. What do you see for me?

Looking for guidance

Dear Looking:

God bless you. What you have is home-sickness. We all get it. You are strong in your relationship with Tunkasila and Wakan Tanka and they are strong in their relationship with you. The spirits from home watch over you. Talk with them.

It is hard for anyone who is in an environment that is not culturally "in tune" with their beliefs to demonstrate their own religion or beliefs. For instance, I live somewhere where a "spirit plate" is not understood...so I put aside small pieces of my food before I eat and place them on the edge of my plate and I silently pray as I do this. Sometimes I pocket some food and take it outside and place it on a napkin, usually in a tree.

I know that Tunkasila and Wakan Tanka and the spirits know that I am limited in what I can do and that they understand. I spend quiet moments outside, praying, where my "star-gazing" is not considered disruptive nor rude nor crazy.

Know that the dreams you are being given are demonstrating your strong connection to home and your religion. Know you are not being forgotten. Do not allow others beliefs to interfere with your truth. Even though other people's views may be the majority view that does not make them correct. Remember, once people were put to death because they said the world was round, and that it circles the sun. This was considered heresy.

In that case, as in many others, the majority view was not right. It was so far wrong as to be ridiculous. That is what I remember when I am the only one or just one of a few that know and believe something.

You are where you are so that you can create your dream. Education is necessary and so is expanding your horizons and meeting new people.

Opportunity is more easily found when you expand the number of people you know. I do see music and "the arts" around you.

A boyfriend? Well, okay. Just don't get too carried away, because the right man - the one you are waiting for is quite a while from now in your future.

Make new friends that are different from you. You may be able to teach them something and open their minds; and they may be able to teach you something too.

You are in a good place. Your family is fine. Your spirit is protected and guided and you are creating your dream. Blessings to you.

Dear Anna,

I've been seeing this other man even though I'm already married to another. I am not sure what is with this other man, I think about him a lot. I don't know if he feels the same about me but I'd like to know what do you see coming out of this?

Will I get caught by my spouse or will I get a chance with the other man? I know this probably sounds ridiculous.

Ridiculous

Dear Ridiculous:

It sounds like its about boredom. Creating danger is what you are doing and of course you will get caught unless you quit - it's just a matter of time.

What is it about? Sex. Adventurous sex and personal empowerment. It is, however, a destroyer of all that you hold dear. That's it, that's all...it is not about love nor building a future together.

Maybe it's a lesson you need. If you continue, then I will assume it is what you need to learn about life, loyalty and yourself. Good Luck!

Dear Anna,

I have a friend whom I care about deeply. He loves women. Most of his friends are women, his entertainment is to use the Internet to email women and he subtly flirts with them.

Since I have known him, I have seen women come and go out his life in different contact levels but yet I have to see him sincerely get involved with anyone of them.

Basically, he is what most women would call "a womanizer." To me he has a validation and self esteem issue about his manhood. It is hurting our friendship as I am near the end of wanting to be in this friendship with him.

This last time I found out that he was in contact with a friend of mine through email, I got the feeling of almost feeling like I was dealing with a predator and it isn't a nice feeling. When I talked with him he still can't see what I am telling him.

He tells me over and over that it is alright for him to have female friends that way and that basically it is not my business. It is not my business as we aren't in a permanent relationship but yet he is my friend and I care about him and it's like I want to see him emotional healthy.

This problem had affected him in his work life and his personal life and has cost him past relationships. My question is who is right? Is this an addiction he has or not? He seems to think it isn't but I see it as one. Isn't this just the same as alcoholism with the same behaviors?

Seeking back up

Dear Seeking:

Yep, you're right. That said, so is he - in that it isn't your business, and to add to that and what is even more maddening, is that you cannot control him or make him see the truth or fix him.

He has to come to the understanding all on his own; that denial is not just a river in Egypt. He has a problem, pray for him. That is all you can really do, except to quit associating with him because his behavior is exploitative of lonely women and their feelings.

Therefore; your interpretation that it is sickening mirrors a truth: it is. That feeling of being exposed to someone who is sickening will eventually color your feelings towards him and you will distance yourself from him. When - well, when you quit listening to his excuses and understand your truth is a good one.

Dear Anna,

Hello and how are you? I've been told that there is a person who goes around with me, yet I don't know who they are and I can't see them.

Would you know if it is a family member that is with me? It kind of scares me but I don't really know of anybody else to go to who could help me.

Wondering who it is

Dear Wondering:

This is an interesting question. All of us have "spirits" that go around with us. Usually they are passed-on family members that want to help us and keep us safe. They constantly send messages which can result in just a general feeling about what to do and what not to do. Often they talk with us in dreams. Sometimes they move things or flick lights to ask us to pay attention.

I "see" a grandma. She has long hair with some gray in it and she is also holding a baby. She has a man with her in the background that looks to be quite stern and authoritative (but loving). I "hear" mee-maw, a nick name or possible slandarization of grandma. I also hear, "Denise or Janis."

Porcupine to break ground for $14 million new school

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

PORCUPINE - The reality of a new school for the community of Porcupine is finally here and construction should be completed by December of 2007.

On Friday, Sept. 22, Porcupine School will share in that celebration with the community and parents in a ground breaking ceremony. The activity will begin at 10 a.m. in the school gym followed by a ribbon cutting ceremony at the site of the new school. A power point presentation will be made showing the design plans of the new school.

The new school will be located uphill north of the present school, said Paul Iron Cloud, president of the Porcupine School board.

It has been a team effort from the community in getting the money for the new school and crafting the design of the school, said Iron Cloud. Tom Daschle played a role in helping

Eleanor and James Charging Crow

An EMT story of courage

By Anna Bee
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - In 1966 there was no formal ambulance service on the Pine Ridge reservation. The Wanblee District through the Tribal Work Experience Program obtained money for a van and interviewed 18 men to run two 12 hour shifts a day on the east side of the reservation. James Charging Crow, who had been a member of the police force on Pine Ridge and had certification as a Emergency Medical Technician accepted one of the two positions for $118.00 every two weeks. Shortly after the new program began, the other employee quit. That left James alone to handle the entire east side of the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Left: Eleanor and James Charging Crow have been married 54 years with over 40 years being in service to the Pine Ridge Ambulance and the people on the reservation.

James said, "We had a lot of emergencies, people hurt, people that hurt each other, accidents and births. We rode in that old van, and the stretcher would bang me in the back of the head, and we drove in all kinds of dangerous weather at all hours of the day and night. We helped a lot of people."

In 1972, Essie Kirk White Face developed another program and James began to make $30 a run (round-trip). James and Eleanor birthed at least 14 babies and also had a lot of horrific experiences during that time. "We saved a lot of lives without the equipment that they have now, and during the time of Wounded Knee. Everybody held guns on us. Eleanor said, "We are full-bloods, Jimmy and I, but we drove a van that had U.S. government on it and we went in to save lives on both sides. We couldn't get anybody to help" Eleanor said "so sometimes Jimmy had to carry a stretcher all by himself." Eleanor also said, "Both the goons and the AIM would point their guns at us, I don't know how we did it except that Jimmy would smoke his pipe, but we lived through it and saved lives."

Eleanor became a licensed EMT in 1972 and today is still active with the ambulance service. Eleanor worked as a volunteer beside James for 15 years before she was put on as an employee. "We were always needed by the community" Eleanor said "sometimes we rode with the doctors and the nurses with critical patients." She told

Rosebud hospital collects millions in third party billing

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Shelly Harris, the CEO of the Rosebud Comprehensive Healthcare Facility delivered an overview of health services to the Rosebud Sioux Tribal council on Wednesday, September 13. The overview was in the form of a quarterly report on the fund status, third party resources, health care services, and pharmacy services at the hospital.

It appears as if one of the initiatives that Harris proposed earlier in the year will become reality. She envisioned a redesign of the emergency room area so that patients arriving by ambulance could be afforded some privacy and confidentiality. The solution was a separate entry way for the patients bought in by ambulance and a separate one for those who walk in or are ambulatory.

The hospital received funding in the amount of $150,000 from the Aberdeen Area Office facilities program to undertake the redesign. The new design will allow better patient access and a specific triage room that will allow better flow of traffic.

Third party collections in the form of private insurance, Medicare, and Medicaid have shown a steady upward increase since January of 2005 and that appears to bode well for achieving positive financial health for the institution.

The fund status report reveals an increase of 23 percent improvement over the previous fiscal year in third party collections. It showed an increase from $7,164,835 in fiscal year 2005 to $9,298,799 in fiscal year 2006.

In terms of third party resources, there were 2270 patients with Medicare in January 2005 and by July 2006 that number had increased to 2413 patients. Those patients with Medicare Part D had increased from 0 in January 2005 compared to 470 patients in July 2006. There were 7369 patients with Medicaid in January 2005 and it increased to 7892 patients with Medicaid by July 2006. Finally, there were 929 patients with some form of private insurance and that number had increased to 991 patients by 2006.

Harris' report also does a very credible task of tracking and cataloguing the five leading diagnoses of hospitalization at the Rosebud Comprehensive Healthcare Facility from October 2005 to August 2006. Pneumonia, acute bronchitis, congestive heart failure diagnosis, gastroenteritis, and chest pain were listed in Porcupine to get their new school. "We owe a lot to Daschle and our congressional people," Iron Cloud said. An architectural report was crafted on the poor conditions of the present school, which showed the dire need for a new building. With that information in hand, assistance was provided by Daschle to educate the Congress to assist in the need for Porcupine School to have a new building.

The grant award is $14.9 million. The architectural design of the new school is completed and next is taking steps to start the construction of the school, hopefully by late fall of 2006.

The design of the school has been an effort of the students, parents and community. Glen Barber is project manager for the new school. Barber has more than 40 years of experience in the construction field and some of those include schools in Kyle, Allen and Wanblee and a portion of Batesland School and building for Oglala Lakota College. He retired from the construction business in 2000 but responded to the need for a project manager for the new Porcupine School.

"The project has been really exciting. When you plan a school, you do the research, ecology and environment assessments, hire an educational specialist and that person helps with the standards for classroom space," said Barber. The new school will be 71, 865 square feet, which is double the size of the present school. That is a major change from the old school. There will be 19 classrooms, a media center, a shop, and 20 offices spaces for special needs as well as administration needs.

Iron Cloud said seven architectural firms were interviewed; six were Indian owned and from those, three firms were selected to present to the school board. The architectural firm Encompass Architects of Lincoln, Neb. was selected. Tammy Eagle Bull-Hesson, Oglala Lakota, is president of the firm. The firm has 20 years of experience in design.

The firm brought a strong design team and worked with the school, students and parents on input of the design of the school. "This is the first time I have known a community to get directly involved in designing their school," said Barber.

"The community, the advisory committee, faculty, students, parents, they all worked through this thing from start to finish. They discussed the needs of the desires of the community," said Iron Cloud. Plans were available on "I CARE" nights, which is a parent night at the school, to address the design.

"Today's technology has changed so much, from 40 years when this was built. We didn't have adequate technology, the building is out of date as far as today's technology, This new school will bring the latest state of the art in technology to the students," said Iron Cloud.

"We have been pleased with Encompass' work and that they have worked with us so well," said Iron Cloud. "We are 100 percent completed and waiting for the safety review from Albuquerque, N.M. to make sure all safety requirements are met."

Barber said once construction begins, there will be jobs available for the community. The project will meet with TERO requirements. My experience is that there is a lot of good available help, he said.

The school serves students in most of the districts on the Pine Ridge reservation, including Martin. The enrollment is averages 250 with 60 school staff.

Porcupine School was recently a year-round school with school in session 12 months out of the year but is in the process of going back to a nine month school schedule, said Iron Cloud.

"We operated a 12 month school with a 9 month budget and it caught up to us. We will be going back to a nine month school. We did have summer school," he said.

School board members are Paul Iron Cloud, President; Beverly Tuttle, Marlin Weston, Richard Iron Cloud, Phillip Good Crow, Bernard White Face and Sid Long Hill, district community representative. The school liaison is Bill Koenen; business manager is Leslie Cournoyer and Tom Raymond, Porcupine School principal.

how they worked so many hours, "It is 220 miles round trip from Wanblee to Pine Ridge…many nights we would have to make three or four trips...through blizzards and black ice, deer, cows and we kept the patients safe and got them there" she said.

She recalls the worst and hardest transport of her life, "On Jan. 3, 1995, I came on duty at midnight. My 35 year old son, a traditional sun-dancer and pow-wow dancer had chest pains and said he couldn't breathe. The ambulance was on another call, so the Bear Creek ambulance met us and he got into the ambulance. I used shock pants and life support. I worked on him all the way and gave him CPR with another paramedic. He died in my arms. He left four children. Everyday we think of him."

James recalls a night in the late 1970s when there was a bad accident where a semi-truck had hit a car, "There were three in front and two in back. One died, but four were alive. They got a log chain and pulled the truck up, but it kept falling and crashing into the car. I had them empty the truck and I got a handy-man jack and I jacked it up high and we used the Jaws of Life and pulled the people out. One of those people still lives in Wanblee."

James had to retire in 1996 due to health reasons but Eleanor still works for the Pine Ridge Ambulance both as a debriefer and a cultural specialist. "I understand the language pretty good," said Eleanor. "I taught James English," she said chuckling. I train employees in the culture on how to treat the elderly and how to behave in people's homes." In her job as a debriefer Eleanor helps employees to reduce the stress caused in traumatic situations. "I mostly listen and let them cry," Eleanor said; "and then I help them to shift their focus to more pleasant things."

James Charging Crow was formally recognized by the Wanblee district where he received a district flag. "They tell my story" said James, "of how I'm working all my life and gave me the flag." Eleanor has never been formally recognized or thanked by the tribe. "I guess what makes me feel bad is that the tribe only wants to recognize what is wrong and forget about all the good people do" she said. "Here it took a lady from Phillip to get me the highest nation award for an EMT. That really shocked me, but I didn't get to go and get the award, it was in Nevada" she added.

Eleanor said, "Today, things are better. Even though the ambulance is not everything we want it to be it is much better. We have training and better equipment and more people. I think we do pretty good…we are always doing better."

The Charging Crows have been married 54 years with over 40 years being in service to the Pine Ridge Ambulance and the people on the reservation. They had nine children of their own and raised five orphaned children and several children who did not have good homes.

OST President White Plume makes allies at United Nations

PINE RIDGE - Alex White Plume, President of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, met with Bolivian President, Evo Morales Ayna, and Foreign Minister, David Choquehuanca during the United Nations General Assembly on September 16 in New York City.

Also in attendance were Chief Sid Hill, Faith Keeper Oren Lyons of the Onondaga Nation, Willie Littlechild (Cree) and Tonya Gonnella Frichner, also Onondaga, Kent Lebsock of the American Indian Law Alliance (AILA) and attorney, Tom Blanco, General Counsel of OST.

Choquehuanca said, "Our Mother Earth is mortally wounded. We have been called her to work to say we, the Indigenous people, can no longer tolerate this." He also said that the pollution of water resources was a most important challenge faced by leaders today.

White Plume invited the two Bolivian leaders to the sacred Black Hills. White Plume also plans to travel to La Paz, Bolivia at their invitation in October. Discussion at the U. N. General Assembly focused on the Declaration of the Rights of Indigenous People.

Looking Cloud gets new lawyer in AIM slaying appeal

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) _ The man convicted of killing American Indian Movement activist Anna Mae Pictou Aquash in 1975 has a new lawyer to handle his appeal.

Fritz Arlo Looking Cloud, 53, is serving a mandatory life prison sentence for a 2004 conviction in Rapid City of first-degree murder committed in the perpetration of a kidnapping.

A three-member federal appeals court has since upheld the conviction and denied his request for a rehearing.

Looking Cloud is at a federal penitentiary in Pollock, La., according to the Federal Bureau of Prisons.

In October, he sent a handwritten note to his lawyer at the time, Terry Gilbert of Cleveland, asking that the attorney withdraw from the case, which Gilbert did in December.

This summer, Looking Cloud filed a handwritten habeas petition, the next step in his appeal, and asked for a new trial on three grounds: inadequate counsel, government misconduct and evidence at trial, according to the document.

U.S. District Judge Lawrence Piersol of Sioux Falls has now appointed defense lawyer Mike Butler of Sioux Falls to handle Looking Cloud's habeas request, according to an order filed Sept. 5.

Butler has handled several other high-profile cases in South Dakota and currently represents Elijah Page, a 24-year-old death row inmate who has asked to end his appeals and die by lethal injection.

Another man charged in connection with Aquash's murder, John Graham, is free on bail in Vancouver, British Columbia, at least until Oct. 30, when another bail hearing is scheduled. He is fighting extradition to South Dakota to stand trial.

Aquash's slaying on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation came amid a series of bloody clashes between federal agents and AIM. She was among the Indians who occupied the village of Wounded Knee for 71 days in 1973.

Appeals Court adds American Horse, Hawk to Chief Judge primary ballot

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Citing a lack of consistency between the election ordinance and the Oglala Sioux Tribe law and order code, the OST Election Court of Appeals on Monday ordered the OST Election board to put the names of Joe American Horse and Steve Hawk on the ballot for the OST primary election scheduled for Tuesday, Oct. 3.

The certified list of candidates issued by the election board on Wednesday Sept. 13 included only Lisa Adams on the list of chief judge candidates for the primary election. American Horse and Hawk were not certified because of not meeting two major criteria, both American Horse and Hawk did not provide proof of a juris doctorate or submit written findings or certification from the Supreme Court as required by the election ordinance.

In 1997, a secretarial election approved the popular election of the OST chief judge stating that the chief judge would be elected by members of the tribe at large under ordinances promulgated by the tribal council. The council, through ordinance, required certified candidates to have a juris doctorate from an American Bar American certified law school and a license to practice law in any state or federal jurisdiction and required the candidate to submit a completed review of his qualifications by the OST law and order committee.

Since the 1997 Secretarial election, Patrick Lee was elected to a four year term in 1998 and Cheryl Three Stars Valandra was put in as his successor in 2002 running unopposed. Lee and his opponent, Diane Zephier and Three Stars-Valandra all met the criteria of a juris doctorate from an ABA certified law school, a license to practice law and the submission of a review of their qualifications by the supreme court or judiciary committee.

This is like swatting flies with a twig," said two time past tribal president, Johnson Holy Rock, "the secretarial election took the choice of a chief judge out of the hands of the tribal council and gave it to a vote of the members at large under a criteria established by ordinance of the council, ordinances are the law of the land."

Past election board members and attorneys are saying that the election is governed by the election ordinance not the OST Law and Order Code. As the ballot on the secretarial election stated the election of a chief judge would be made at large by members of the tribe under ordinances promulgated by the council, added past election workers.

The order was signed by Javan Tony Ten Fingers, election appeals chief judge, Francis Pumpkinseed, election appeals judge and Cornel Conroy, election appeals judge on Monday, Sept. 18.

According to Maretta Champagne, election board member, sample ballots may be challenged until Thursday, Sept. 21.

The election court of appeals concluded that the OST Law and Order Code is the law of the land and it does not require judges to have a juris doctorate or a license to practice law and does not require a review of findings from the Supreme Court. The appeals court also stated that the election court of appeals decision is final and that no further appeals to tribal court or the Supreme Court are available.

LWS board election deadline set for Tuesday, Sept. 26

KYLE - With three vacancies on the school board at Little Wound School, the deadline for submitting a completed petition is rapidly approaching, according to election committee chair, Melanie Janis.

Terms of office are expiring for Everett Janis, Taylor Little White Man and Cecelia Fire Thunder. Completed petitions of a minimum of 30 signatures need to be submitted to the LWS business office no later than 4:30pm on Tuesday, Sept. 26.

Linda May and Archie Hopkins are the two board members remaining on the board. The voting for the Little Wound School board will be held in conjunction with the OST general election set for Tuesday, Nov. 7. Those elected on the 7th will serve four year terms.

Little Wound is a K-12 school located in Kyle and serves families in Wounded Knee, Porcupine, Medicine Root, Pass Creek, LaCreek and Eagle Nest districts on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

descending order with total number for each category.

During the same period, there were 30,254 living patients registered at the institution with 698 new patients registering and 22 births and 7 deaths reported. There were also 52,775 ambulatory or walk in visits and 4,976 were for visits for injuries. There were 10,572 visits to the emergency room and of these 2,619 had an injury diagnosis. 679 of those visits were accompanied by an alcohol related diagnosis.

The dental department saw 1,831 patients and the pharmacy had 127,942 new prescriptions and 13,842 refills during this same period.

One graph visually presented the leading causes of injury. Unspecified falls led the list with 356, unarmed fight or brawl had 280, struck by an object was 270, accident from over exertion had 217, and being injured as a result of a cutting instrument had 175.

Finally, a pie chart listing suicide completion statistics for the Aberdeen Area from 2000-2005 revealed 30 females and 93 males.

Lays Bad, Kills Back repeat in 6th grade races as Pine Ridge wins three of four team title

PORCUPINE - American Horse won the 7th/8th grade boys cross country run hosted by Porcupine School on Thursday 22-23 over Our Lady of Lourdes preventing a Pine Ridge sweep as the Thorpes won the girl's 7th/8th grade team title 19-33 over Little Wound, won the 5th/6th grade boy's title 26-37 over St. Francis and the 5th/6th grade girl's title 14-44 over St. Francis.

Loneman's Christian Tobacco defeated his teammate Kyle Blacksmith, last week's winner with a time of 8:18 to 8:27 for the 7th/8th grade title while Pine Ridge's Jessica Tall knocked off last week's 7th/8th grade winner from Loneman, Calandra Wanatee in 9:09 to 9:15. In the 5th/6th grade divisions, both winners made it two in a row as Porcupine's Darrell Lays Bad. Jr. beat Loneman's Wayne Eagleman 6:40 to 7:11 and Porcupine's Crystal Kills Back downed Batesland's Sydney Brown bear 7:11 to 7:38.

Big Foot Conference cross country is in Manderson, next week they are in Batesland and the finals are set for Little Wound in Kyle on Oct. 4.

Little Wound School announces Corrective Action Status

KYLE - Little Wound School sent out a letter to all parents, community members and staff regarding its recent entry into Corrective Action Status under the No Child Left Behind Act. The letter informs them that the school is in Corrective Action Status. This occurs when a school fails to make Adequate Yearly Progress (AYP) as determined by national and state adapted tests in the area of language arts, reading, and mathematics. Other areas of importance are student attendance in grades K through 8 and graduation rates in grades 9 through 12. Adequate yearly progress is the progress needed each year to have all children proficient and advanced in reading and math by the year 2014.

The school improved on the attendance goals in grades K-8, but still needs to improve on the high school graduation rate and also reading and math scores school-wide.

To address these issues the school will be working closely with the school community and implement a corrective action plan that will be effective during the 2006-07 school year. The plan will initially include; appointing outside specialists to advise the school on its plan and progress, getting assistance from teacher preparation programs at colleges and universities and restructuring the elementary school into K-2 and 3-5 grade units to provide greater focus on student reading and math needs at each level.

The school seeks the trust of the school community and parents and their input in working together to develop a corrective plan that will improve academic achievement, attendance, and graduation rates for LWS. If you have any further questions or concerns please contact Linda Hunter, Superintendent at 455-6174

At a special board meeting on August 28, the Little Wound School board unanimously agreed to officially go on record as approving corrective action status "Under Protest" because of the pressure of deadlines that negatively impact effective school planning and guidelines of NCLB that interferes with the attainment of established student outcomes of the school and community.

Todd County senior spends summer at Stanford Aspires for admission to Stanford University next fall

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

Todd County senior, Tootie Herman, of Mission spent the summer at Standford studying political science. She aspires to attend Stanford in the fall.

MISSION - Todd County High School senior, Tootie Herman, spent the summer at Stanford which is often referred to as the "Harvard of the West' where she was admitted to the "Junior Statesmen of America" program and studied political science.

Stanford is a rather elite west coast academic institution and Tootie was able to catch a glimpse of the demands of a post high school education. She said, "Going to Stanford this summer, I realized that is not easy at all. I was in the middle of three-hundred students. I met people from all over the country and my roommate was from Saipan."

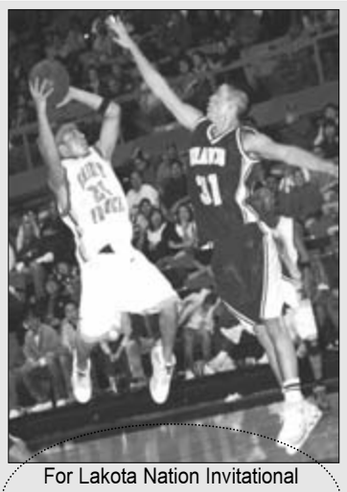
The aspiring Sicangu senior was the only Native American student chosen among the three-hundred and she admitted that the others were quite impressed with her participation in the event.

The determination to attend Stanford is reflected in her personality, attitude and smile which exude a great deal of confidence. She has plans to meet the deadline for application to Stanford on November 1 and then, work very hard to earn her Bachelor of Science degree in political science with a minor in journalism. What is most admirable is that she is also planning to pursue a graduate degree at Stanford in the same disciplines.

Tootie's grandmother, Gwen Herman, is employed as a secretary at the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's vice president's office and she has been a great motivator and supporter of Tootie's dreams of higher education and a place in the work world later on. Tootie explained her grandmother's style of motivation when she said, "I have a curfew on weekends at 11:00 p.m. I can't go anywhere without my work being done. At first I hated it but now I am happy."

Tootie would like to earn her credentials and see the world before coming home to work on the Rosebud. She has a strong desire to work for the 'rights' of the people and their individual freedoms as guaranteed by the U. S. Constitution.

Her outstanding achievements, thus far, include being on honor roll, being the class president during freshmen and sophomores years and having dual enrollment at Sinte Gleska University since her junior year. She also participated in the South Dakota Miss Teen pageant where she was voted 'most photogenic.' Grandma Gwen is quick to point out that Tootie has also earned Advanced Placement in macroeconomics at TCHS and also one credit hour of college work from Stanford in 'honors' political communication.



Tootie is also listed in "Whose Who Among High School Students" and is currently on the RST gang and prevention committee. She also has a sister, Rachel, who is sixteen and is planning to attend UCLA one day.

The daughter of Teddi Rae Herman, Tootie has been planning her career for many years. She understands the need for studying and class preparation and, in fact, is also making application for a Gates Millennium Scholarship which is administered by the American Indian College Fund.

The Rosebud anticipates the future achievements of Tootie as she apparently has been an excellent role model, having led a healthy lifestyle and her dreams of academic excellence are equally as achievable.

Finally, Tootie is quite appreciative of the financial support she has received from the Shakopee Mdewakanton tribe of Minnesota, Wells Fargo, Buches and others.

Is Iktomi back in town?

By Ivan Starr
Oglala, S.D.

It is election time again; however, this year is unusually different. Aside from the fact that we have repeated this election every two years for seven decades, things have been quiet.

It is rather eerie not knowing what our people are promising if they win. Even the usual roadside campaign placards, bumpers stickers, or newspaper ads are not out yet.

As with previous elections, we have a large number of legislative candidates. I am sure these people are hoping to win a tribal council seat, to be one of the lucky 18, for the next two years. Yes, a few of these men and women are going to become the most powerful people on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

According to our constitution, our tribal council can remove our tribal president.

Actually, this group has an established record of removing a president without due process; and nothing can reverse their action… except the council itself. That is what I call power.

In view of this reality, though, we have a significant number of presidential and vice-presidential candidates. I believe their goal is to be in charge of the executive committee.

Whatever their goals are, I think they are a courageous bunch of people. I am sure they know the president is at the complete mercy of the all-powerful tribal council.

In using the term all-powerful, I am referring to the absolute authority vested in the tribal council by the Constitution of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. Accordingly, our legislature controls the president and the executive committee as well as the court system, including the Supreme Court. This should be common knowledge by now.

Sadly, I know people, including some of our current candidates, who refuse to acknowledge this.

They will charge blindly into the political sphere with the idea that they are affiliating with a government that accords equal political, economic, and legal rights to every tribal member. Because we vote every two years, they actually believe we have a democratic system.

When the framers of this Indian Reorganization Act imposed it on the Lakota people in 1935, they did not teach it to the masses.

Classroom instruction could have made a difference regarding our situation today. Consequently, not one tribal member today was ever formally educated about the Wheeler-Howard Act.

At the same time, the federal government's general policy was to enervate the powerful Lakota via a long, systematic, and brutal assimilation process. Forced to attend federal schools for "Indians", children did not learn anything about treaties or the traditional system of government. In fact, they could not speak their time-honored language.

Here we are in the 21st Century, and I can say I am one of those "Indians" who actually endured racial apathy right here on the homeland. I am one of those who endured punishment for speaking Lakota in a parochial residential school. I am one of the diminishing few who can still communicate effectively using the Lakota language.

Anyway, the primary election is set to occur on Oct. 3 in every district on the Pine Ridge. The general election will be taking place on November of 2006.

The new tribal administration will take their oath of office in January of 2007.

However, nothing will change. I believe we are in for another two years of the same stuff we endured for the past 70 years.

The con artist Iktomi comes to mind. Especially, when he duped a bunch of ducks into dancing with their eyes closed. He told them his bag of songs was to honor them. While they danced, the hungry Iktomi clubbed them one by one. The story goes on to tell of one little duck who dared to open his eyes, at the risk of having red eyes forever.

The small duck saw what Iktomi was doing and gave the alarm.

All the remaining ducks scrambled to escape, including the ones in the bag. Iktomi tried to block the doorway with his body but the terrified ducks nearly trampled him to death in search of their freedom. Is there a moral to this story? Anybody can figure that out.

All I know is that after the oath of office, the commotion of inauguration, the speeches and the honoring, most of us will return to our homes and continue living as we have the past two years, and the two years before that.

Actually, we have done this for seventy years and we are going to do it again.

It is not the end, though; there are a few who will get to enjoy the privilege of being related to an election winner. This situation has existed since 1935 and we cannot truly blame individuals.

It is really nobody's fault; the constitution created this situation, not the people.

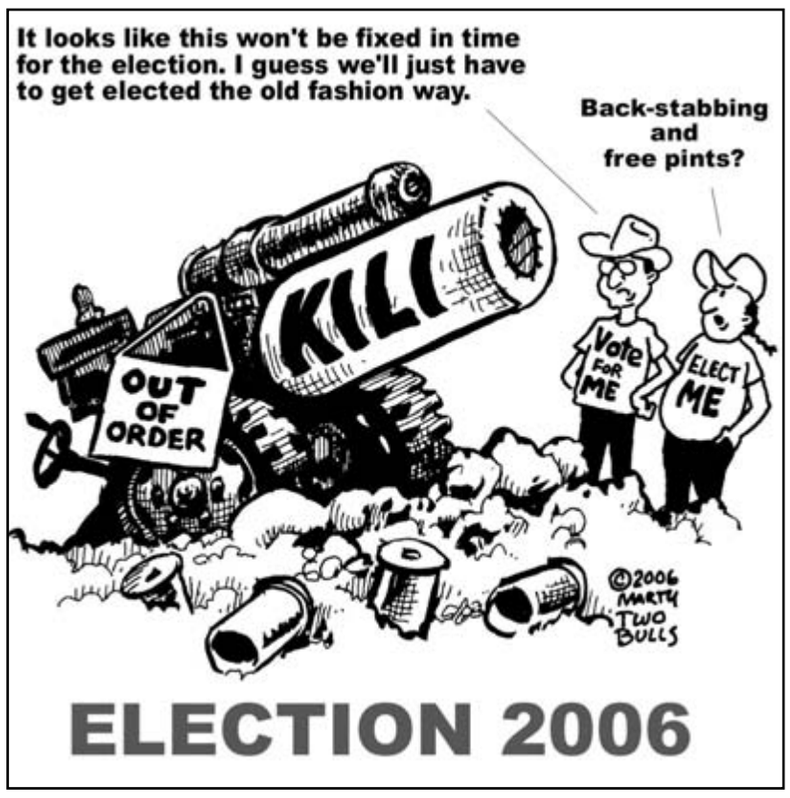
Well, maybe a small handful may be corrupt. The real culprit, however, is the document that supposedly contains the people's laws.

Now, this is not to punish our candidates. I know most of our candidates and they are good people.

I also know of the clandestine few who are not so good. If any finger pointing needs to occur, then let us point them at the cause of our demise - the Constitution of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. I am talking about a Separation of Powers amendment.

This particular idea seems to scare some people.

I don't really know who these people are, but, somebody is certainly resisting such an amendment.



I believe the only amendment we need is one that will take that absolute power away from the Tribal Council and divide it equally and equitably with an Executive and Judicial branches of government.

Elections are approaching fast; I do encourage voters to think seriously about our future. Are we going to allow this miserable lifestyle to continue indefinitely? Are we going to let our grandchildren endure the same things we did? Bear in mind; the only thing that will change things positively is to amend that constitution.

My little "rantings" will not make a difference in how things are running today.

However, I did the next best thing by putting my research and views on paper.

Maybe our youth, at some point in the future, can benefit from my writings.

Exploiting us for the sake of funding

Dear Editor,

Much of the funding for tribal programs is the result of the head count of Rosebud Sioux Tribal members by the census. Many complaints exist concerning lack of assistance and respect from many programs who utilize this head count to bring in the funding for the programs saying they provide service. Many complaints surface of negative program

Directors, who only help certain individuals, or of their drinking and drugging and no one seems to be able to hold them accountable.

Some of our council representatives fall right into the same pattern of continuing to out right exploit each and every tribal member for the sake of funding for the Limited Liabilities corporation, which the Rosebud Sioux Tribe is.

If many of you will wake up and realize that we don't have to allow these programs to exploit us for their funding, Especially if they treat our Lakota Oyate poorly, don't provide the needed services like adequate housing, heat, clothing for the children and even gravel to provide decent roads. Remember that You are being used to bring in funds, regardless if you're residing here on the Rosebud Indian reservation or in Rapid City or incarcerated some where.

It is time to say enough is enough, don't count us any more for your program funding, which are selective in helping, There is a legal way that this may be done.

If enough of us stand by this issue and demand that the tribal programs and government quit exploiting our People. It can happen. It may be a petition or another form which we can send to the United states and the funding sources telling them,

These programs will have to get our permission to fund raise in our name, The churches here on the Rosebud Indian reservation are another example of exploitation.

Think about this, and we will have to begin the process soon, it won't matter if it affects the services and funding several years down the road, They don't help any now and hasn't for years even though they have been using us to bring in the money.

Will Peter's 12 point plan

Editor's NoteThe Lakota Country Times welcomes Oglala Sioux Tribal election candidates to submit their platforms. The platform below was submitted by Will Peters, candidate for president.

Ta Chunku Luta
Waunspewicakiya

1. Stabilize Tribal Government: We must continue to work to totally eliminate graft and corruption from tribal government. Until we stop corruption, we will not be able to entice outside entities to invest in the homeland with businesses that could provide jobs for the People. Nobody wants to get ripped-off, that's why nobody wants to bring their industries here.

2. Protect Tribal Finances: The groundwork has already been laid by the current treasurer to stabilize tribal finances; additional work must be done to safeguard the People's funds by installing internal mechanisms that would totally prevent anyone from accessing funds in an unauthorized fashion. I will require the treasurer to provide bi-weekly reports via K.I.L.I. Radio directly from the President's Office.

3. Complete and Immediate Land Audit: This will be one of the first tasks to be performed. We are nothing without our land, and we are losing more everyday. The Oglala Lakota currently have a controlling interest in only 49% of our original 100% land base. 51% is controlled by outside interests. We must find out how we lost so much land! I suspect that a complete land audit will uncover many instances of illegal land deals.

4. District Allocation Accountability: We must work together to stop the practice of certain people always getting help from their respective districts, while many others are not helped. I will, on your behalf, require districts to provide complete monthly reports to be posted at their respective district C.A.P. Offices. In addition, spreadsheets must be made available when called upon indicating who has been helped.

5. Control Government & Program Spending: We all know at times, it is necessary for tribal officials to travel to lobby on the tribe's behalf. However, that being said, I have seen way too many instances of unnecessary spending in regards to in-services and conferences. When the new casino is finished, we will have with it a new hotel with conference facilities. Through legislation, all tribal programs will be mandated to hold their conferences here at home. This is turn will keep tribal dollars circulating here on the homeland and the savings can be passed on via extra services to the People.

6. Positive relationship with Treaty Council: There has been almost no activity in regards to the Black Hills Claim. The money will never be accepted, but we must act on the many violations of the 1851

Northern Perspectives

Stuck in the "60s" tonight

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I am happy that I took my son to the South Dakota Vietnam Veterans Memorial dedication in Pierre over the weekend. I don't recall my own father telling about his tour of France and Germany during WWII. The only thing I remember was that he and my uncle had met up in Germany. Also, my grandmother Lottie Hawkins as they called her went to a 'yuwipi' and she was told correctly that they would be coming home safe from the war.

I don't know if we 'Nam Vets' are stuck in a time when the nation itself was defining itself, as we were also doing as young men, but the whole experience was good for me. The day afterward, I felt a bit of sadness for many of my fellow Vietnam veterans who have had losses and left a part of themselves in that faraway Asian land.

When we point to statistics that say the young don't know any geography and past events such as the Vietnam War, I am thankful that my little one was able to see the Huey choppers flying and to listen to some of the stories and see many veterans dressed up in their uniforms.

I never took the time to attend Vietnam Veteran gatherings so the event was a cleansing time for me.

I thought of my brother, Edward, who lives in New Mexico and who served with the 25th Infantry Division before I got to Vietnam. He should have been there at the forefront of the parade, because he never has heard the ovation of the crowds or been honored the Lakota way for his sacrifice.

The veterans are an interesting group of guys because they remind me of the Lakota culture.

They don't do a lot of self promotion or brag about their achievements and sometimes that can be a drawback. Sometimes we need to honor them even if it has been done before.

All of Vietnam was a combat zone and you had to be there to get a sense of the smells, sights and sounds. Almost 40 years later, the sounds of helicopters and the white sands of Cam Rahn Bay remain in one's mind. The hills of Pleiku were dry and dusty at time and wet during the monsoon.

Listening to AFVN while on guard duty was forbidden, but I did it anyway and just about snoozed on guard duty. It reminded me of 'Good Morning Vietnam.'

Steppen Wolf sang "Magic Carpet Ride", Otis Redding sang "The Dock of the Bay" and most of us were nineteen. We didn't know anything about the politics of the war; we just wanted to return unharmed to "the world" and to do the simple things like watch television or eat a steak.

Hearing music coming from nearby villages in Pleiku was a reminder of just how close the villages were. I only spent one night out beyond our perimeter and got the chills toward morning as I only had a towel to cover up with. Seeing an occasional child or adult lying in some entry way was not unusual, but the tendency was to ignore it. I remember meeting a Montagnard villager or two who acted as guides for our American forces. They were very much the indigenous people of the land.

Anyway, I am happy that I could share some of my Vietnam experiences with my son as he will remember it and retell it to his own children. My experiences were not traumatic, but relatively uneventful except for a few incoming mortar attacks, at which point the sirens would blare somewhere and we would quickly move to our bunkers. It was funny because we didn't have any place to sit, so we would just stand crowded in the dark sometimes sweating from the heat. We would listen for any ensuring gunfire, but most of the time it didn't come. Most of the time we didn't have our weapons in base camp and I was telling my son that I thank 'tunaksila' that we didn't have to engage the enemy or were not overrun.

Notes From Indian Country

After many years traditionalists are taking the lead

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

One sunny day, Tatanka Iyotanka (Sitting Bull) was sitting on a bench outside of his log home on the Standing Rock Sioux Reservation conversing with his two wives when a Christian minister rode up to the house in his buckboard.

The minister exchanged a few pleasantries and then got down to the business that had brought him to the home of the great Sioux leader. He told the Chief that it was un-Christian of him to have two wives. It went against the will of God. It was barbarian. It was the way of heathens.

Sitting Bull listened patiently, probably with a small grin on his face because he had heard all of this before from the white man, and said to the minister, "Well, there they are. Now you tell them which one has to leave."

Which of these Lakota women would you deprive of a loving home? It was an answer based on plain Lakota logic. But then Lakota logic had baffled the white man for a century. And well it should because it was logic based on centuries of cultural beliefs totally unknown to the European settlers.

The problems between the two races began because by not understanding the culture of the Lakota, the white man then disrespected it. He disrespected it by trying to remake it into something he could understand. If he could not remake it, he attempted to diminish it or destroy it.

Lakota logic and European logic did not blend. It was like trying to mix water and oil.

A Lakota man took more than one wife for many reasons. Perhaps a brother had died leaving a widow with children. In the Lakota way, the surviving brother then became responsible for his brother's wife and children. It was his duty to give them food and shelter. His brother's children became his children and his brother's wife became his wife. Unchristian? Uncivilized?

When the settlers moved west they saw it as their responsibility to disrupt the civilization of the Lakota. Of course we know this as Manifest Destiny. Just as the Spaniards made it an edict to either convert the indigenous people of South and Central America or kill them if they did not convert, so too did the settlers moving west try to convert a people by destroying their culture. Culturecide?

Of course, changing a culture is something that cannot be done over night. As so many conquerors have discovered in history, the best way to create a new culture in their own image is to start with the innocent children.

Institutionalization seemed to be the best way. But in order to do this the new government of the United States needed help. It turned to the many Christian churches and organizations that were already intent upon saving the souls of the so-called heathens. In the late 1800s the government and the church convinced tribal leaders like Red Cloud and others to donate land to the Catholic Church (and other religions) in order to construct Indian missions that would be turned into boarding schools.

Institutionalization had begun.

In collusion between church and state, the boarding schools sprang up all across Indian country. They were precursors of the federal boarding schools like Carlisle and Haskell, schools intent upon acculturation. Stewart, Pine Ridge, Phoenix, Santa Fe, and Albuquerque, were just a few of the Bureau of Indian Affairs boarding schools that soon became familiar institutions across the west.

Hundreds of religious institutions from Arizona to Washington State to the Dakotas had already begun the tedious process of destroying the different Indian cultures and traditions. The same thing was happening across Canada. They called the schools "residential schools" up there. A continent-wide, methodical destruction of language, attire, religion and culture of many indigenous tribes had begun. The same thing was happening across Central and South America.

There will always be that argument by church and state that this was done for the good and for the survival of the Indian people. But was it? Didn't the eventual illegal seizures of millions of acres of Indian land and resources enter into the equation?

The thinking was, at the time that if the Indian was made over in the image of the white man, there would be an end to the Indian problem. The acculturated Indians would assume their roles in society and the headache they presented would vanish. Everybody would just be plain and simple Americans.

However, the process of acculturation did not provide for inclusion. Indians were not recognized as citizens of the United States. They were isolated on lands known as Indian reservations. In Canada they were known as Reserves. They were excluded from participating in the governments of the newly formed states. The message was, "you can act like us, dress like us, speak English like us and worship our God, but you are not welcome to our table.

The process of acculturation was not a complete failure. Many Indians converted to Christianity and became, in the eyes of the federal government, productive citizens. Those who did not were shunned. They were given names by the converted Indians of bucks, wild Indians, full bloods and traditionalists. What is worse, this stigmatization forced the traditional Indians into various stages of poverty. They became the have-nots.

While those who acculturated and converted to Christianity prospered somewhat, the traditionalists remained as the poorest of the poor. And this condition exists even to this day.

Modern terminology still points this out. When someone does not conform, they are said to be "off the reservation."

But I believe those who have been shunned for many years, the traditionalists, are winning over the hearts, mind and spirits of those who converted.

The traditionalists have remained steadfast in their beliefs, they have retained their spirituality and language, and have set the example for those who thought that by abandoning their culture and traditions they would be better off.

When Sitting Bull told the minister to select the wife to leave his home, he spoke volumes of what was to become the assault upon the culture and traditions of the Lakota people.

and 1868 Treaties. Remember that these are legally binding documents that even the Supreme Court recognizes. We must engage in federal breach of contract lawsuits that do not give up the lands. There can be potential positive outcomes from such lawsuits that will benefit all Lakota, Dakota, and Nakota Oyate. The Oceti Sakowin must come together to support this effort, with our combined financial resources, we will be able to hire the best attorneys. The Treaty Council of the Oglala must take the lead in bringing the Oceti Sakowin together for this effort

7. Treaty and Trust Obligations: Our very condition throughout the decades is more than enough evidence to prove that the United States Government has not fulfilled their obligations to us. Here again we must engage in legal activity and start a dialogue in regards to Trust obligation Modifications. With all the cuts the Bush administration is making, we have no recourse but to stand on the legal contracts that have been made with our People.

8 .B.I.A. Accountability: We must call for a federal inquiry into the B.I.A's adverse activities. From my experience, it is clear that although there are some good people within that organization, for the most part; B.I.A. seems to be working against the Tribes instead of with the Tribes. Remember, they are supposed to be there to assist in our quality of life; instead they are financially top-heavy with very little financial resources seeping down to the People.

9. Gaming: It has long been said that we should not be negotiating with the state in regards to gaming. If we are a sovereign nation, why do we not negotiate with the federal government itself? This is the direction we must attempt to move in. Never, in a million years, will Governor Rounds make a decision in our favor, the man seems to have no clue to the fact that because we do not as of yet have an economic infrastructure, all our money goes off the rez. More gaming machines will not only benefit us, but the off-rez economies as well, Vote for Jack Billion, we might have a chance there, otherwise, we have no recourse but to stand on our sovereignty.

10. Tribal Education Department: Thus far, the Tribe and O.N.E.C. have been moving forward in developing the education department. O.N.E.C. is to be credited for the amount of work they have done to support this effort. We are very close to seeing this become a reality. 1% of the 2% right to work fee will be used to fund the department.

11. Constitutional Revisions: A matter of great importance. The constitution of the United States has been amended a total of 18 times to the best of my knowledge. T hose amendments allowed the constitution to evolve as the times changed. Times have changed for us, yet the way we are governed has not, this is why we are not moving ahead in a socially progressive manner. W hen our elected officials take the oath, they are swearing to uphold the constitution of the United States. As a Lakota I would rather sweat to do all in my power to look after our people.

12. Keeping the People Informed: This is what a good leader should do. Before K.I.L.I. went off the air, I either went up there or called in every Friday to report to the Lakota People, they are my bosses. I hope the next council members will take the time to get on the schedule at K.I.L.I. and make reports to the People. Everything the Tribe does should be reported on, in the papers, or on the air.

Conclusion-we spend way too much time fighting the federal government and the B.I.A. over Uncle Sam's Table Scraps, that is political oppression. It is time we take action on a bigger scale. Homelessness, violence, drug & alcohol abuse, and all the other negative issues we face are classic symptoms of POVERTY.

We must now take a stand to aggressively resolve these issues and collectively demand our fair share of the so-called "American Dream" to insure a better quality of life for all of us. We are coming apart trying to hold each other accountable, let us stand together to hold Uncle Sam accountable. It is the only way.

Differences must be put aside for extreme efforts on behalf of the People. Others say we like to fight each other too much. That's only because we have no one who wants to fight us. We are Oglala, the descendents of a great People. We are a hard People, each and everyone of us have strength and are without fear. From the youngest to the oldest, we are strong, can you not see that Mitakuyepi? We must re-establish our place within the Oceti Sakowin, and that is a place of strong leadership.

When I become your next President, I will take that as a great honor and responsibility. I will immediately begin work on this 12 point plan. We will all see who our true enemies are. That will give us something to come together over. We have not, as a People, been into battle for a long time now. Our hearts have become restless as we continue to struggle. We need something to look forward to so we can take it easy on each other. None of us want to live like this. It is time for the Oglala to stand up again; we've been sitting down too long.

This is what I offer the People, my heart and the willingness to do hard work. Nothing is impossible, I am willing to walk into tomorrow and find something better for us. I want to be the President, I know I can do the job, I know how to walk with my People, I know I can't do it alone. I do not fight for personal position and financial gain. I will fight for something greater than that for all of us. Look at the list Mitakuyepi, you have seen the rest, now put a strong Oglala to the test. Friends and Relatives, if you agree with what has been presented, then vote for Will Peters. Together we will walk forward and see what tomorrow will bring. I can't promise nothing but my love, courage, and hard work. These things, I hope you have seen in me. Hece tuwelo, Ta Chunku Luta Waunspewicakiya he miyelo!

Lakota Vietnam Veterans participate in memorial dedication

PIERRE - The state did itself proud as it hosted the South Dakota Vietnam Veteran's Memorial dedication ceremony on Saturday, Sept. 16 with an unveiling of a 7 foot bronze statue depicting a soldier in Vietnam created by artists Sherri Treeby and Lee Luenig.

Choppers flew overhead all day long and Vietnam era rock and roll music played all day behind the capitol building as Vietnam Veterans and their families could be seen relaxing in the shade or looking at names on the moving wall.

The weekend included a whole lineup of activities intended to make 'welcome home' the many South Dakota veterans who served in Vietnam during the period of 1961 to 1975. During that period 28,000 South Dakotans served their country in Vietnam and 210 were killed or missing in action. Lakota warriors from many of the nine reservations have always been credited with serving proudly in disproportionate numbers as they also come from a proud warrior tradition. In fact, Lakota families endeavor to honor them in their own special way.

The city was dressed up in a patriotic theme of red, white and blues as many businesses had emblazoned on their billboards, "Welcome Vietnam Veterans." With the price of gas having dropped to $2.41 in some locations in Pierre the crowds were well in to the tens of thousands. The city had not seen such a gathering ever, according to some vendors.

It was a powerful event and one which allowed fellow Vietnam Veterans from South Dakota to congregate and enjoy the reception given to them. Francis Castaway of the Sicangu Warriors said, "We did the Rosebud Sioux proud. It felt good finally to get a 'welcome home' in South Dakota. We were given a standing ovation." Chet Stoneman of Rosebud added, "It was touching…today was truly inspiring to Vietnam vets, what we went through. During the war we lost our comrades." Nick Leading Fighter, Bob Gassman, William Menard, Cornell Menard, Trudell Guerue, Donovan Shangreaux and Bob Emery were some of the other Lakota veterans in attendance.

On Friday, helicopter rides were available, the traveling memorial wall was open and a quilt of tears was display in the capital which remained opened for visitors throughout the weekend.

Continuous counseling was available through the weekend for veterans. The evening concluded with a concert by the Beach Boys at 7:30 p.m.

On Saturday a hero's parade was held at 9:30 a.m. which traveled a mile and a half east on Capitol Street. The Sicangu Warriors were twenty third in line according to Castaway. A number of Sicangu warriors had attended the gathering in a van and then were camped out on the north edge of Pierre Indian Learning Center.

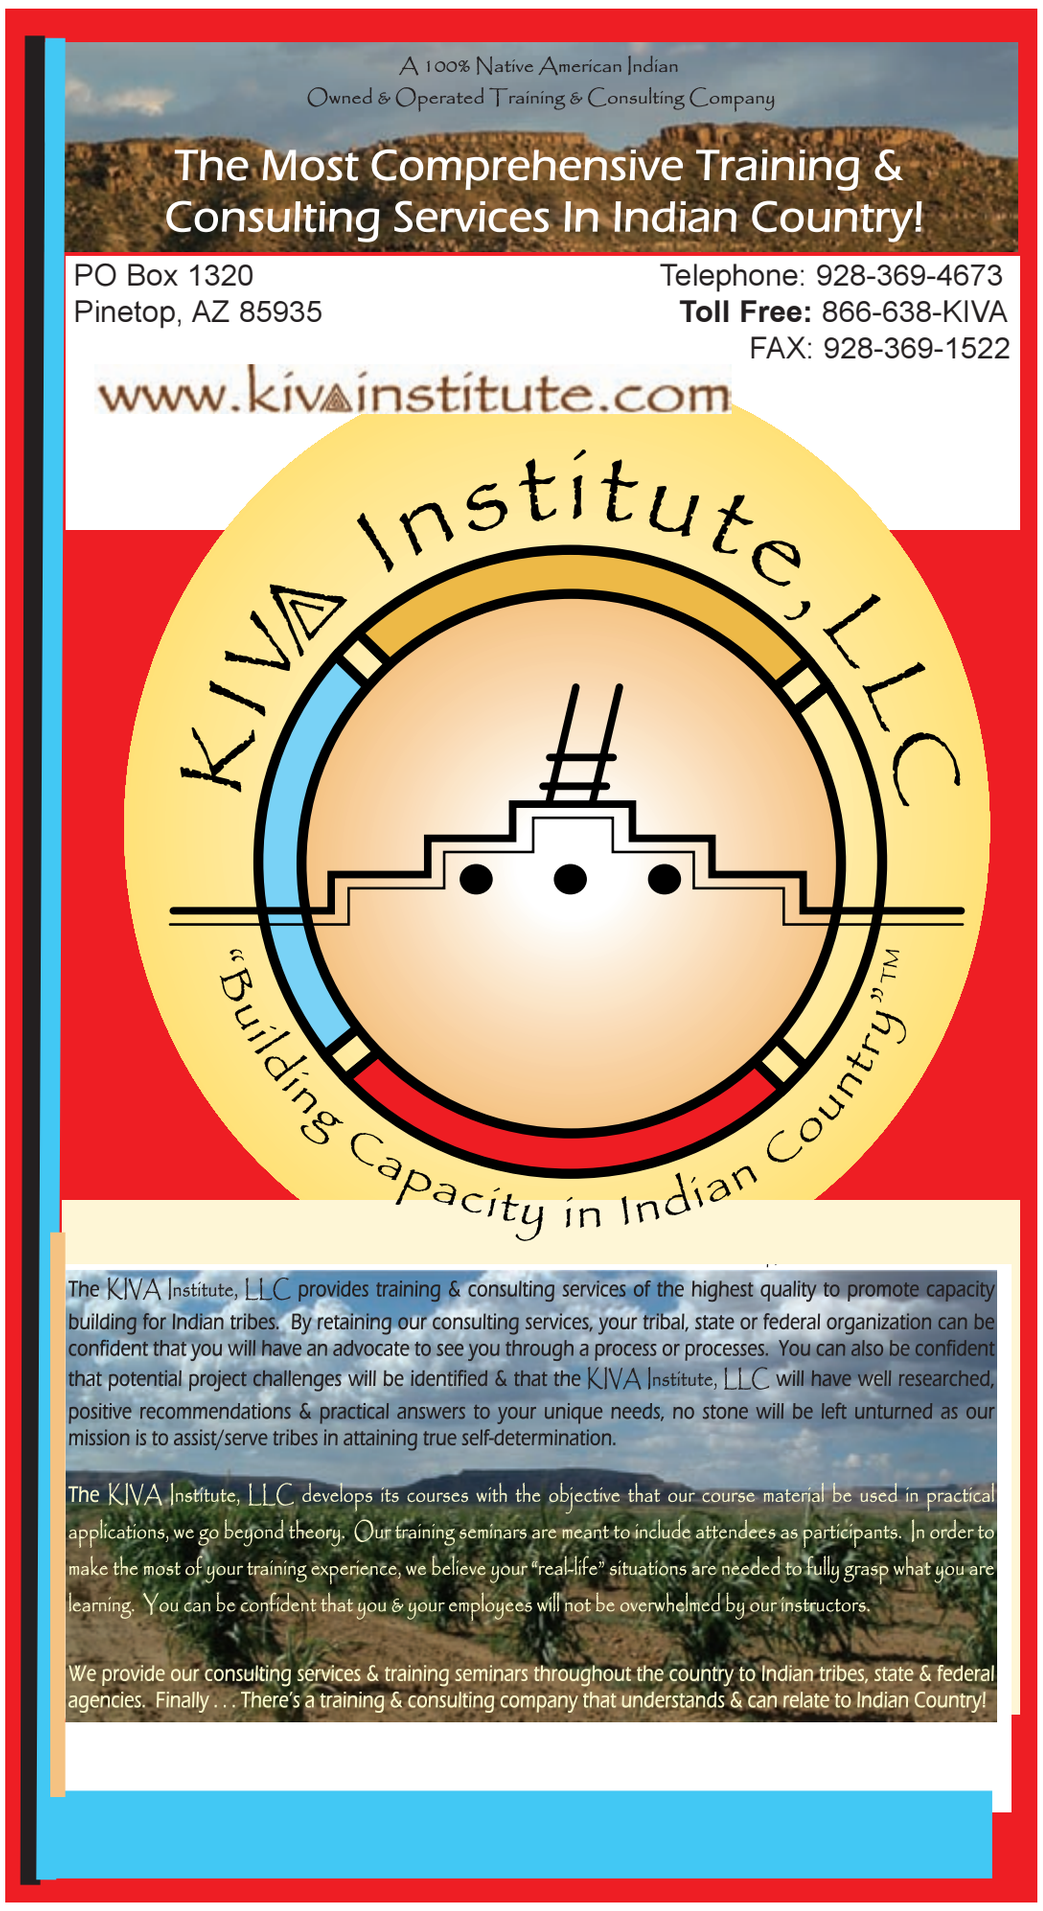
Colder weather had been forecasted with high winds during the rest of the weekend.

The Oglala Sioux had also rented a van and were to bring 27 Vietnam Veterans to the dedication according to volunteer veteran's service officer, Frank Marshall.

Other floats were in evidence from the Cheyenne River Sioux as well as the Oglala Sioux. One from Pine Ridge Agency carried a sign in memory of Vietnam Veterans who had died. The American Indian Veterans Association participated as well as the Pine Ridge American Legion, the Sisseton Wahpeton Vietnam Veterans and the Sicangu Warriors of the Vietnam War.

The memorial dedication ceremony began at 2 p.m. with the unveiling as a large screen digital television was available for those who could not get into the seating area for dignitaries.

The program which was carried live by South Dakota Public TV and SD public radio was also available in two USO tents and several locations in case of inclement weather.



Sicangu Lakota, Francis Whitebird, gave the invocation in Lakota, while the Red Leaf drum from Two Strike community on the Rosebud headed by Pat Bad Hand sang the Lakota Flag song and the Vietnam Lakota Warrior song.

The traveling wall is a replica of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Wall in Washington, DC and stands 8 feet high at its highest and is 370 long. It will remain open 24 hours a day through Monday, Sept. 18 and it is where many Lakota Vietnam warriors are memorialized forever. Names like Blair Two Crow, Frank Jealous Of Him of Pine Ridge and Gabriel Two Eagle and Larry Wayne LaPointe of Rosebud are but a few of the more than 58,000 names on the wall.

A book entitled, "The Vietnam War: South Dakota Remembers" presents stories and photographs of South Dakotans who served in Vietnam was on sale for $64. Adrian Cronauer of "Good Morning Vietnam" fame was the master of ceremonies. His life was loosely portrayed by Robin Williams in the movie. Meanwhile, the duo of Big and Rich sang a tribute to a friend entitled "8th of November."

The memorial dedication ceremony was an overdue heartwarming event for South Dakota Vietnam Veterans and many seemed pleased that it went so well.

Many could be heard expressing their thanks or welcoming each other home. Others simply were not ready to go home as the event was to conclude with a free breakfast on Sunday,

Krogman leads Falcon ground attack over St. Francis

Michaud bulldawgs Crusaders for first Thorpe win

Mustangs run roughshod over Chieftains

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

MISSION/KYLE/PINE RIDGE - Todd County controlled the line of scrimmage as junior running back Gunner Krogman rushed nine times for 175 yards and controlled the airwaves running two interceptions back for touchdowns in their 48-0 win over St. Francis on Friday.

The Falcons rushed 31 times from the line of scrimmage for 294 yards. Krogman scored the last two Falcon touchdowns in the second quarter, one on a 75 yard run from scrimmage and another on a 40 yard return of an interception as Todd County was up at the half 30-0.

Mike Neiss, a 140 pound junior running back carried the ball three times for 53 yards and scored touchdowns on runs of 11 and 26 yards. Jarrett Allen opened the scoring for Todd County with a one yard plunge, CJ Spotted Tail opened the second half with a 21 yard run for a TD and Charlie Moe closed out the Falcon scoring with a three yard run for a TD. Canku One Star, a freshman defensive back scored a third quarter TD returning an interception 50 yards for a score.

Krogman and senior, Albert Her Many Horses led the Todd County defense with nine tackles a piece while Chris Rahn had seven tackles and a sack.

After opening the season with a loss, the Falcons have put together two straight wins and head for Crow Creek on Friday with game time set for 1:30 p.m. central. St. Francis hosts Bennett County at 7 p.m. Friday night.

"This is the first time in the school's history that Little Wound has opened the football season with a 3-0 record," said third year head coach, Darrell Hunter, "and for a little icing on the cake, the Mustangs get an honorable mention nod in the Class 11A football poll out on Tuesday."

The Mustangs rolled up 329 yards of total offense on Friday as they spread out the wealth with seven different players scoring in Little Wound's 46-6 win over Crow Creek. Bryce Hornbeck opened the scoring on a 49 yard end around for a touchdown, Johnny Cloud plowed over from the 10 yard line for the Mustangs second score and JC Mesteth made it 20-0 in the first quarter with a seven yard sweep around the end,

Cloud completed four out of ten passes while freshman quarterback, Jeremy Red Cloud completed his only pass hitting Devon LeBeau with a 12 yard TD pass to open the second quarter and Shiloh Pierce finished the game with 15 carries for 82 yards and one touchdown, a ten yard slant off tackle giving Little Wound a 33-0 halftime lead.

Crow Creek's Larry Gayton, a 175 pound junior wingback, put the Chieftains on the board to open the third quarter with a 90 yard TD pass to Eric Dolezal for Crow Creek's only score of the game.

Averaging over seven yards a carry, Rich Big Boy, a 212 pound senior fullback rushed for 58 yards on eight carries and chipped in a fourth quarter touchdown on a 12 yard drive up the middle. Harold Top Bear closed out the scoring for Little Wound with a 12 yard TD run in the fourth.

"We still have too many penalties," said Hunter, "and I have to continue to remind the boys that we have played smaller schools so far that we need to continue to improve each week; last year we went into the playoffs with a good record and were blown out by Belle Fourche at home in the first round, we need to learn from that and prepare accordingly."

Little Wound travels to Red Cloud on Friday for a 2 p.m. game and Crow Creek hosts Todd County.

In an unusual state of affairs, Pine Ridge on Friday, traveled to Red Cloud; the Thorpes were 0-2 while the Crusaders were 2-0. The Thorpes broke open a tight defensive game with 20 second half points including their first points of the year on offense to pick up their first win of the year 28-8 over Red Cloud.

JD Two Bulls intercepted two AB Morgan passes in the first quarter, running the second one back from the Red Cloud 17 yard line for the first score of the game, Juan Ramos ran the two point conversion in to give Pine Ridge an 8-0 lead. Defense on both sides of the line dominated the rest of the first half with the second quarter closing out with the Thorpes up 8-0.

"Turnovers killed us all day long," said Nick Dressel, Red Cloud head coach, "with seven interceptions and two lost fumbles I'm surprised the score was as close as it was. We would get some momentum going and then turn the ball over"

Will Brewer recovered a Red Cloud fumble midway through the first quarter, then Michael Jack intercepted a Crusader pass to keep Red Cloud scoreless in the first half. On the opening kick-off of the second half, Red cloud's Shay All Runner grabbed the short kick turning it into an onside kick and ran it down to the Pine Ridge 23 yard line. DJ Big Crow cut the opportunity short by intercepting a Morgan pass deep in Pine Ridge territory.

Bulldawg Michaud broke an offensive drought that stretched over 10 quarters in the new season by turning the left end and hustling for a 67 yard TD scramble to put Pine Ridge's first offensive score of the year on the board. Michaud had scored last week on a fumble recovery and an interception and the Thorpes first score Friday was off the Two Bull interception.

After Pine Ridge stopped Red Cloud on a three and out, Michaud came right back with a 15 yard scamper to give Pine Ridge a 22-0 lead.

Billy Scott put Red Cloud on the board with a six yard plunge up the middle and added the two point conversion on the ground. Scott was the workhorse again on the ground for Red Cloud carrying the ball 31 times for 142 yards and a touchdown.

Michaud closed out the scoring for Pine Ridge recovering a Crusader fumble on the Red Cloud 44 yard line and running it back for the score.

"We new it would be a tough game coming into Red Cloud, they werfe pumped up starting the season 2-0, both teams played well," said Pine Ridge head coach, Dave Michaud, "our defensive line put a lot of pressure on their quarterback all day long - we really needed a win and each of our players did their fob and got it sone."

Dominating the game with a smothering defense, Pine Ridge closed out a seven interception day as Two Bulls picked off his third interception of the day as the third period came to a close. DJ Clifford picked off a Red Cloud pass with 4:17 to go in the fourth and with :30 seconds left Michaud picked off an errant Crusader pass to go with his 21 tackles on defense, fumble recovery for a TD and two rushing touchdowns. Michaud finished with 10 rushes for 120 yards as he dominated the game on both sides of the line.

After throwing five TD passes against Hill City, the going was a bit tougher for Red Cloud's senior quarterback, AB Morgan, who finished with 11 completions out of 28 passes for 118 yards and seven interceptions. Andrew Twiss led the Crusader defense with nine tackles and Dave Giago grabbed four passes for 28 yards with three of the catches worthy of the highlight reel as one hand grabs in ;traffic.

"Our close loss to Bennett County that was a battle for 48 minutes really prepared us for a tough game like this," said Michaud, "We were disciplined and focused throughout the game, we just need to build on this win and build some momentum in the upcoming games."

Pine Ridge is 1-2 and hosts Cheyenne Eagle Butte in their 2006 homecoming on Friday night at 7 p.m. while Red Cloud is now 2-1 and hosts Little Wound in their 2006 homecoming game Friday afternoon at 2 p.m.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I really enjoy your responses to people and the wealth of spiritual knowledge and encouragement you provide.

I am writing as a spouse at an impasse. I have a spouse who has been on line for years, I believe, meeting ones needs with numerous activities outside of our relationship.

Do I continue to close my eyes and be the strong person I am, or do I go in another direction? I have been at this point for years, until I just move forward in other personal growth development ways and ignore what I think my spouse is doing.

It is kind of like living with an addict who is somewhere but not so present. I question sometimes if I am imagining all this and creating a problem that does not exist.

Sometimes, I wonder if I am losing it.

If I just focus on my life, I am happy but quite sad for where I think my partner is in life. I am a spiritual person and have received no bolts of directives.

My spouse is a good person in many ways and sometimes I feel I must be very strong to live with this. Strong or perhaps in denial, I don't know.

I appreciate any ideas and advice you have.

In a quandary

Dear In a quandary:

Thank you for your question. You are not alone. I think it is much simpler to bring it down to the basics. Would it be acceptable for your mate to have close-up and personal relationships with the opposite sex?

It is a fact that on-line discourse escalates over time to include emotional attachment and a private and personal relationship. It is also a fact that sex and the discussions of sex, fantasy and the possibility of an implied future relationship are present.

Men and women that create and participate in on-line correspondence with the intention of fulfilling a need for sexual stimulation and do that in an obsessive way are often addicted to the stimulation and fantasy sex act without wanting a personal commitment.

The problem is, of course, that it victimizes many people. Many lonely hearts are searching for a life-partner and utilize the on-line availability to search for "the one." People that cruise the internet for fulfillment of sexual fantasy are playing a dangerous game.

There are somethings that are understood when two people make a commitment to be together. One of them is to be faithful to each other; that does exclude many things besides the actual act of intercourse.

It implies no lewd conversations with members of the opposite sex, no soliciting of sex with others, no hanky-panky, etc. Was President Clinton being faithful to his wife because he didn't actually have intercourse with Monica Lowinski?

I know quite a few people that are now living together or are married that met on-line. That demonstrates how personal the correspondence can be, and where it can lead. Given that, if a person is not available (meaning that he/she is now involved in a committed relationship) why would he/she cruise on-line?

Any correspondence that includes intimacy is an act of betrayal to the wedding vows and agreements between to conscious committed adults.

What should you do? That is not such an easy question to answer. Your husband's on-line relationships are placing an emotional gulf between you and him You are feeling isolated with the problem and insecure with his intentions.

Eventually, it will take your relationship into more of a platonic type of lifestyle as you lose your trust and your respect for him. The motivation behind his on-line activities demonstrates a lack of respect for the intimacy you and he have shared.

Do you have to get a divorce? No. He can stop. He can understand that it is a betrayal of your marriage. He can see that it is an addiction. He can get help.

What if he doesn't see it that way? Well then it depends on how you see it. Where do you see the two of you next year? In five years? In twenty years? Can you live with this?

I feel sad for you, I know you love him, I know he is basically a good man. I know that you have a lot of memories and have overcome many hard-ships together.

Give him a chance to recover from this unhealthy habit.

If he chooses to ignore your view-point, then remember life is about quality and make your decision based on your internal happiness and understanding of what is acceptable in your life. Good Luck.

Dear Anna,

Right now I'm in high school and I don't know anybody and I just want a boyfriend and could you send me the answers to my question, would I get a boyfriend?

Wants a boyfriend

Dear Wants:

Try making alliances and friendships with the girls first. After you have a lot of girlfriends, you can hang out with them, and where the girls go, the boys will follow.

You will have a boyfriend, but not for a while. Take the pressure off from that focus and just decide to make a place for yourself with friends and activities. Sports are a healthy outlet and boys like girls who are athletic.

Some boys like girls with brains and are attracted to the smart ones (those are the really smart boys).

Relax and quit feeling bad about what you don't have and look at what you do have. Everybody likes a person that is happy and friendly; not lonely and desperate. Being in high school can have some really rough days - but you are young and sometimes having a boyfriend can be the worst thing for you; as it can take you away from the focus of your studies, activities and other friends. Hang in there kid.

Dear Anna,

I had an affair on my husband about two years ago, I got pregnant at that time and had a son. I don't know which guy is the father, but think since my baby looks like my husband that he is his. Is he?

The guy that I was seeing just got married and he and his wife are having trouble and I think he wants to see me again.

He said he thinks the baby is his. What should I do?

Wondering

Dear Wondering:

Can I ask you a question? What do you think life is about? Your child belongs to you and your husband. Stay away from the past. Please write me and tell me what are you thinking: What do you want in life? What do you think about yourself?

Are you in addiction? Who do you want to be when you grow up? What relationship do you have with the Creator?

What do you want for your children? What kind of world do you want to live in? How are you helping to make your world a better place? What are you contributing? Why are you married?

Dear Anna,

Everything is crap in my life. My boyfriend just broke up with me, I am not getting along with anybody at work and I might be fired, I can't pay my bills, my auntie just passed away, my car needs a new carburetor and tires, my sister is pregnant and the guy wants nothing to do with her, I live with my family and there are too many people at my house, my mom's boyfriend came home drunk and broke my mom's lamp and my fish-bowl and my dog has mange. Will things ever get better?

Life Sucks

Dear Life Sucks:

Yep. It has to. Just before everything changes things tend to fall apart: The boyfriend thing is good, he wasn't anybody you needed to have in your life; the job: you will be laid off; so this is an opportunity to go back to school.

Your car will be repaired, fix it before you lose your job; I know it is hard but death is within the natural order of life - don't take it personally, don't consider the guy having nothing to do with your sister a bad thing; you can move away from home in six months and there is a new inexpensive treatment for mange, you just put a little on the back of the neck and it clears most cases up.

What you have described my girl, is life.

MINUTES

Unapproved Shannon County Board Meeting September 11, 2006 Minutes

The Shannon County School Board held a special meeting on Monday, August 11, 2006 at Batesland, SD, for the purpose of reviewing the budget and personnel considerations. President Eagle Bull called the meeting to order at 5:22 p.m.

Members Present: Angie Eagle Bull, Todd O'Bryan, Chuck C onroy

Member absent: Melvin Cummings, r uth cummings. Other present: Dr. Margo Heinert, Superintendent, Maurice Twiss, Special Services Coordinator, MaDonna Peterson, Business Manager, Patti Nelson, Administrative Secretary

All actions recorded in these minutes were by unanimous vote unless otherwise noted.

7068 Approval of Agenda Motion by Conroy to approve the agenda, including additions. Motion carried.

7069 Personnel Motion by O'Bryan to approve the administrative recommendation for termination of a classified employee. Motion carried.

7070 Propane Bids

Bids were accepted until Aug. 25, 2006 for propane to be supplied to the district (small tanks only), as listed: Westco, Alliance, NE, $1.449 per gallon (firm bid). Motion by O'Bryan to accept the bid submitted by Westco to supply propane to the district's small tanks through August 31, 2007. Motion carried.

7071 Housing Committee Motion by C onroy toapprove the administrative recommendation to change the designated housing committee members from the Superintendent, Building Principal and Board President to Superintendent, Building Principal and Director of Facilities & Maintenance. Motion carried.

7072 District Mileage Reimbursement

Motion by O'Bryan to keep the district's mileage reimbursement rate as determined by the state. Motion carried.

7073 Dress Code policy

Motion by Conroy to acknowledge the first reading of hte proposed District Staff Dress C ode Policy. Motion carried.

Pine Ridge Indian Health Service Electronic Health Record

The Pine Ridge Area Indian Health Service along with Kyle, Wanblee, Porcupine, Allen and Manderson Clinics will be moving toward implementing E.H.R. in the later months of 2006.

Right now all of your medical information is securely stored in a big folder called a medical chart.

The paper chart will continue to contain historical information of use to providers for sometime leading to a truly paperless record.

This will significantly reduce patient safety concerns associated with illegible handwritten notes, misplaced or incomplete records, E.H.R. will also allow providers to prescribe medications, order labs and x-rays and retrieve results faster than waiting for paper results to arrive.

E.H.R. has the ability to display and graph blood pressure, weight, blood sugar and labs.

OST Headstart gets $1.5 million for renovation of centers

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PIYA WICONI - "Oglala Lakota College is totally committed to operating the Headstart program that was taken over from the Oglala Sioux Tribe in August of 2005," said both Tom Shortbull, OLC president and Michelle Yankton, OLC Headstart director, "our goal is to work for higher enrollments and to work at improving the program each year."

The college received good news on Monday as South Dakota's congressional delegation announced an award of $2 million dollars from the Tribally Controlled Colleges and Universities program of which $1.5 million represents a one year construction grant to renovate current Headstart centers and build new headstart centers on Pine Ridge Reservation.

"Last year we were funded for the construction of two student dormitories one in Kyle and one in Pine Ridge and even though we did not know if we could get another construction grant funded so soon the need to improve the Headstart centers was so great that we had to try," said Shortbull.

Michelle Yankton and Tom Shortbull

"The building in Pine Ridge that houses nine headstart centers is an absolute mess, there are problems with the roof, with the heating system and the kitchen and it is basically just worn down," said Will Peters, council representative from Pine Ridge Village and chairman of the Education Committee who with then tribal president Cecelia Fire Thunder were instrumental in moving the headstart program from the tribe to the college last year.

"We knew when we took over the program from the tribe that the facilities were not up to par, that we would really have to work to find the resources to renovate them, rebuild some and replace others," said Shortbull, "the grant provides $1.206 million to renovate the Pine Ridge center and money to purchase three Governor homes and put one in Batesland and two in

John Around Him journeys home

KYLE - Respected Lakota language teacher and Vietnam Veteran, John Around Him, journeyed to the spirit world and was laid to rest on Wednesday in Kyle. As a highly regarded sun dance helper and 'eyapaya' in Lakota country, his legacy in perpetuating Lakota spirituality and culture has left an indelible path for all to follow. The wake and funeral saw hundreds of Lakota people who came to together to say goodbye. A Cheyenne River veterans group presents a blanket to John Around Him, Jr. during wake services, while many other dignitaries from several Lakota bands came to pay their respects throughout the day and night. Changing gas prices impact Lakota country

RST to purchase station despite fluctuations

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - It is difficult to accurately gauge the impact of 'up and down' gasoline prices on the lives of Lakota without examining the reasons for the fluctuations.

Apparently, a couple of issues nationwide impacted the increase in recent months. When refineries in the Gulf Coast region increased production in anticipation of another hurricane which did not come, it created a greater inventory for the Midwestern region.

The price of crude oil has fallen below $60 a barrel and this summer BP oil shutdown a pipeline in Prudhoe Bay, Alaska and the ripple effect kept gas prices high.

The Gus Stop in Mission reflects the slowly falling price of a gallon of regular unleaded at $2.39 per gallon.

Apparently, gas prices in eastern South Dakota have been less than the western part of the state. Gas prices in Sioux Falls are around $2.32 per gallon, while prices in Rapid City per gallon were around $2.47. This difference is apparently due to a system of pipeline that eastern South Dakota is able to access at a cheaper price.

The price of gasoline has gone from well over $3.00 per gal a month ago or so, to as low as $2.37 at the Allstop in Rosebud to $2.32 at the BP self-service station in Mission. The slow descent has been a positive sign for those who live in an already tight economy.

The recent upswing in prices has had a definite impact on the frequency of travel and volume of traffic

Children of the corn syrup:

Obesity, diabetes becoming epidemic

By Mark Butterbrodt
Special to the Times

PINE RIDGE - "The McDonald's "Happy Meal" for children used to be the standard adult portion size," says Dr. Stephen Ponder, Sac & Fox tribal member, and a pediatric endocrinologist at Driscoll Children's Hospital in Corpus Christi, Texas. "That is how much serving sizes have increased in recent years."

"Americans now spend $37 billion a year on fast food, using credit cards, ten times as much as just a few years ago," he pointed out to a large, appreciative audience of Oglala Lakota health professionals at Casey Family conference room in Pine Ridge on Sept. 14.

Dr. Ponder, who is a Certified Diabetes Educator and has juvenile diabetes, devotes much time to presentations about how adult diabetes, sometimes called type two diabetes, can be prevented by healthier lifestyles. "The earlier we health professionals encourage healthy nutrition and exercise, the better," he emphasized, by showing a picture of a six month old baby. "We need to get involved early. By the time I see children, they are often 50 or 100 pounds overweight. To me, this is exactly like waiting until someone's cancer has spread throughout his or her body and then the doctor decides to send the person to a cancer specialist."

"We have a weight reduction clinic at Driscoll Children's Hospital, and it's a good one, but even at our clinic we have only about a ten per cent rate of weight reduction," he cautioned.

His talk, entitled "Children of the Corn Syrup," suggests that the current epidemic of obesity and diabetes is paralleled by increased use of cheap corn syrup, or fructose. "Remember when pop dispensers were behind the counter? Today children can get unlimited refills of pop because it's cheap. In the last two years consumption of milk has dropped 40 per

OLC Headstart grant

Wanblee."

The just awarded grant starts on Monday, Oct. 2 so work on the Pine Ridge center is scheduled right away.

According to Yankton who came in as the temporary director in March of this year and became permanent director on July 28, the Headstart Bureau in Washington SC AHS funded OLC for 611 slots, 511 in headstart and 100 in early Headstart with 25 of those slots for prenatal.

In the first year OLC had 422 students and this year they are up to 432 with 27 headstart centers and five early headstart centers.

"Our goal is to continue to improve the operation," said Yankton, "obviously work on the facilities is a priority, this new grant will really help us but we will continue to look for additional resources to help renovate more of the centers and maybe purchase or build new centers. We are also committed to improving the educational program for the students, building a stable qualified staff and improving each staff member through regular training and support for each teacher and aide to work towards a degree in early childhood education."

Enrollment takes place throughout the year and interested parents who would like to enroll their children may contact a center in their local community or call the main office at 455-6117. At the present time Headstart has eight job openings; four bus drivers, one in Porcupine, three in Pine Ridge, one teacher aide in Pine Ridge and one in Oglala and teachers at Manderson Early Headstart, Porcupine Early Headstart and Pine Ridge Headstart.

"We need to improve on our turnover rate with staff, we are committed to hiring qualified personnel, especially those who want to continue their education and we always need bus drivers who have their CDL's," said Yankton, "and we really need to improve our enrollment, I know there are no shortage of children out there, call us."

"Taking over the tribe's Headstart Program has been a big challenge for the college," said Shortbull, "the facilities needed a lot of work and the staff had been up in the air for months about where things were going but we are committed to bringing stability to a vital program on Pine Ridge Reservation, a program that has the potential to build a strong foundation for the future of the Oglala Sioux Tribe and the Lakota people."

even in Indian Country. As a matter of fact, it has had a noticeable impact on those driving to the casino and the profit margin realized at the Rosebud Casino according to RST Vice-President, Wayne Boyd. The May and June net profit figures from earlier reports did not meet expectations and lower gas prices will likely lead to an increase.

"The cost of gas is only one aspect. The cost of propane effects who we can serve. A hundred dollars doesn't go very far" Boyd said, as he referred to the tribe's administration of LIHEAP funds. He also pointed out the cost to travel to Sioux Falls, for example, had doubled.

A similar impact on other businesses reservation-wide has also been felt by some. Shelly Harris, the CEO of the Rosebud Hospital said that when gas prices were higher only work related travel was allowed. She said, "The increased expenses have been outrageous. We had to cut down on travel and it had to be work related. The public health nursing department goes out every day as well. It has helped us financially, especially with services we provide. We are able to use the money somewhere else." With the lower gas prices, the hospital will now ease travel restrictions.

For RST and the Rosebud Hospital, the medical evacuations of tribal members to Rapid City or Sioux Falls has likely represented a substantial increase in underwriting that vital function and any additional easing of gas prices will allow the re-programming of funds elsewhere.

The recent drop in the prices of a gallon of $.70 cents or more will likely be good news for Rosebud and Pine Ridge residents as Lakota people can now resume some of their routine trips to powwows, shopping in Rapid City, or when they find themselves 'cruising' the boulevard.

On the Rosebud, after a feasibility study was conducted the RST council passed RST resolution 2006-239 which authorizes the purchase of Ralph's Service Station in Mission for $330,000. All financial and closing documents will be taken back to the council for final consideration. Boyd said, "The primary goal is to have a place to service vehicles and to be able to change tires. The tribe needs a motor pool." At present, many of the tribal programs have their own vehicles and a central motor pool would consolidate them and put them under one roof.

Boyd also pointed out that with RST owning its own gas station, it will be able to save the Rosebud Law Enforcement Services some $36,000 on gas for its vehicles. The former Swenson's gas station was one of the other locations examined, however, it did not allow for any expansion.

An updated check of the local gas prices revealed the variability of prices on the Pine Ridge reservation and in Martin. In Pine Ridge at Big Bat's regular unleaded sells for $2.37 a gallon, in Kyle at Lil' Angels it is $2.47 per gallon, while in Martin at the Fresh Start a gallon of unleaded sells for $2.44.

Children of the corn syrup

cent, while consumption of soda pop has increased by 300 percent," he stated.

"Just one can of 16 ounce soda pop per day results in a 16 pound weight gain in a year's time," he continued. "Over 65 percent of American children have television sets in their rooms and are bombarded with over 10,000 food and soft drink ads in a year."

"Fructose-enhanced foods and beverages in excess exert several bad effects on the metabolism of children, resulting in overweightness and eventually diabetes," Dr. Ponder pointed out.

"A little fructose is all right, but the government heavily subsidizes the American corn-growing and processing industries which produce the fructose which is fueling the present crisis. The significant increase in being over weight and adult diabetes in teenagers and children occurred at the same time the American food industry began using large amounts of corn syrup (fructose). Countries like Mexico where we are exporting large amounts of fructose corn syrup are seeing the same problems with obesity and diabetes," he said.

The solution to the epidemic of being over weight and diabetes is early prevention in the form of plenty of exercise and a healthy diet. "Speaking from the experience of raising three children, you have to use lots of patience. On average, we need to offer toddlers a new vegetable 15 times before they will accept it. We cannot give up after just one or two tries," he said.

To illustrate how far we are from feeding children a healthy diet, Dr. Ponder observed that if everyone was eating as healthy as is currently recommended, we would only have 50 per cent of the fruits and vegetables that we need in this country.

"We need to get involved early. By the time I see children, they are often 50 or 100 pounds overweight. To me, this is exactly like waiting until someone's cancer has spread throughout his or her body and then the doctor decides to send the person to a cancer specialist."

-Dr. Ponder

The SAFE campaign at Driscoll Children's Hospital has been developed by Dr. Ponder and his colleagues to combat the epidemic of overweightness:

Skip or stop high calorie drinks, Alter your snack habits, Forget unhealthy fast foods, Exercise daily (SAFE). Specific steps include: Choosing diet sodas over regular sodas; keeping snacks small and healthy; reducing fried foods; limiting TV and video game playing to two hours a day. More information on this positive campaign to encourage healthy lifestyles is available at www.driscoll-childrens.org.

Dr. Ponder was in Pine Ridge as a member of the American Academy of Pediatrics" Committee on Native American Children's Health, which was making site visits also at Rosebud, Standing Rock, and Sioux San in Rapid City. CONACH advocates for the health needs of Native American children, most notably by bringing the epidemic of diabetes in Indian Country to the attention of the medical community.

CONACH members, who included Judith Thierry, RN, head of maternal-child health for the Indian Health Service, met with both community people and Indian Health Service employees at Pine Ridge to discuss the health needs of Oglala Lakota children. Members finished the day at Wakanyeja Pawiciyapi in Porcupine. This innovative mental health program which utilizes Lakota healing concepts, was recently awarded a grant by Indian Health Service Department of Maternal-Child Health.

The committee's suggestions and recommendations will be made available to the Oglala Sioux Tribe and to the Indian Health service unit at a later date.

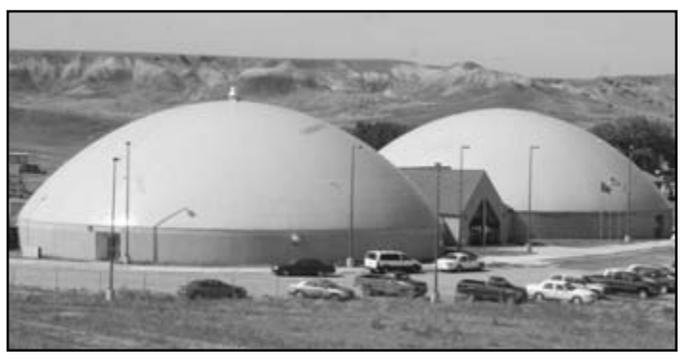
Dr. Ponder's presentation at the Casey Family building was attended by representatives of several tribal organizations including the Community Health Representatives, students and staff from Oglala Lakota College Department of Nursing, Bright Start.

Also the the Indian Health Service Diabetes Prevention Program, the Indian Health Service public health nurses, and several interested individuals from the community. Mary Tobacco and Karen Red Star of OST Health Education sponsored the talk and were ably assisted by Arlene Iron Cloud and Elaine Yellow Horse.

Shannon County celebrates new Red Shirt Community School

Enrollment nearly doubles in first year of new school

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent



RED SHIRT - On Wednesday, Sept. 20, the board of Shannon County Schools, the community and school staff and visiting officials celebrated the new Red Shirt Community School. Although not totally completed, students started their fall semester in the new school on Wednesday, Aug. 23.

"Ground breaking for the new $4.2 million school took place in September of 2004 and it should be completed in a month or so," said Maurice Twiss, longtime staff member of Shannon County Schools, "you would really have to go back to 1984 when the board made a commitment to keep the school at Red Shirt open and to work at investing in it but it wasn't until 2002 when the board asked for a needs or parent interest survey and with the results started to really plan for a new school in Red Shirt."

The 31,000 square foot school is really two domes with a connecting building that includes four classrooms, a gym, a kitchen, space for community meetings and room for a community health clinic.

"We still have some paving to do," said Twiss, "and we have some landscaping that includes what I call beautification with lawn and trees and shrubs."

"The new school means so much in the way of opportunities for not only families and their children and educational opportunities but also it means a lot for the community with a new school that has room for community meetings as well as space designed for a community health clinic," said Ruth Cummings, a school board member.

To build the school, the board made an investment in a three phase electrical line from Hermosa that cast Shannon County Schools $750,000.

"The new school is wonderful," said Marlene Stoudt, starting her third year as Red Shirt principal, "the building is new, a new gym, it is warmer, it is more quiet and already the morale of the students is up, we love it and are so thankful that the school board decided to invest in the Red Shirt community."

Last year the school had an enrollment of 29 students and this year after a month of school, there are 49 students enrolled; the school has a capacity of 125 students.

Porcupine School breaks ground for new building

PORCUPINE - Emerson Skeets, director of the BIA Office of Financial Management Compliance, joins Porcupine school students during the groundbreaking ceremonies on Friday, students include Ernest Weston, Daylon Black Bull, Aaron Black Bull, Kateri Means and Katie New Holy.

Black Bull spoke on behalf of the student during the ceremony on Friday.

On Sept. 22 the community of Porcupine celebrated the ground breaking ceremony of a new $14 million school.

Construction will begin in the late fall and should be completed by December of 2007.

The new school will be 71,865 square feet and will promote a design for improved technology resources for the students.

State absentee voting under way

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) - Secretary of State Chris Nelson said all counties have received copies of the Nov. 7 general election ballot, and absentee voting may start. By state law, the deadline for absentee voting to begin is Tuesday, but the process may start whenever ballots are ready, he said.

``Almost everything is set,'' Nelson said recently. ``All of the counties have their ballots. We are still working on some of the final AutoMARK programming. That's taken a little longer than we hoped it would, but the ballots are in place.''

The AutoMARK is an electronic voting machine that must be available for use by the disabled at each polling place. It allows voters who are blind, have impaired vision or conditions that make it difficult or impossible for them to mark ballots in the usual way; the machines also will provide language assistance for American Indian voters who are not fluent in English.

By midmorning Wednesday, four people had cast absentee ballots at the Hughes County auditor's office, said Jennifer Deyo, junior deputy finance officer.

``We've had a few come up to the office and vote,'' she said.

Deyo said 58 absentee ballots had been requested earlier and were mailed out to voters. Several people also have picked up sample ballots and information explaining the 11 issues that are on ballots in addition to candidates, she said.

Nelson said many people may vote absentee so they can take ballots home and study those issues.

Absentee ballots can be picked up and later returned to auditors' offices, they may be requested for mail delivery, or people can vote early by simply going to auditors' offices.

Those who are sick and confined may designate others to bring them the ballots.

Early voting has been popular in South Dakota since the 2004 Legislature changed state law so no excuse is needed for absentee voting.

Previously, people wishing to vote absentee had to swear that they would be away from home that day, were unable to get to the polls because of illness, could not get off work, were observing a religious holiday, or attending college away from home.

Almost one-fourth of all votes cast in the 2004 general election were done by absentee balloting.

Nelson does not believe early voting will be as heavy this year.

``I don't see it being quite as high as two years ago simply because we don't have two huge Senate campaigns out there pounding the drum for it. I think we will end up somewhere in the 20 to 24 percent range,'' he said.

``Those who do vote absentee may wait towards the end of the absentee period simply because there's a lot of these campaigns out there that people haven't even heard from yet,'' Nelson said.

Among hot-button issues for South Dakota voters are measures that would:

*Ban most abortions

*Add $1-a-pack to the tax on cigarettes

*Revise the valuation of real estate for tax purposes

*Legalize the use of marijuana for medical purposes

*Repeal video lottery

Coop members to recieve capital credit checks from Golden West

WALL - The recent million dollar rain didn't keep at least 492 people from registering at the Golden West Telecommunications Cooperative's Annual Membership Meeting in Wall on Saturday, Sept. 23.

Nearly all of those registering also received their portion of the nearly $2.1 million in patronage capital credit checks the Cooperative returned to its members.

The checks included $1,575,505 in margins or profits for the operating years 1988 through 1991 along with an additional $500,000 that was spread proportionally across the remaining margins through 2005. In all, nearly 18,000 checks were handed out at the meeting or have since been mailed to Co-op members.

Golden West Board Chairman Rodney Renner focused his remarks on the "You're in Good Company" theme from the Company's 2006 annual report. Renner pointed to the significant dollars the Cooperative continues to invest in technology upgrades, the Company's education program that makes $1,000 scholarships available each year at 44 high schools throughout the state and the Company's economic development program that annually invests $200,000 in local job creation projects as signs that "you are, indeed, in Good Company with Golden West."

Golden West General Manager/CEO George Strandell thanked the membership and employees for the excellent year the Cooperative experienced before touching upon some of the service improvements, growth and cost saving products that have been introduced since last year's meeting. Those accomplishments included an investment of $19 million in technology upgrades, the tripling of Internet speeds, the extension of the Company's call center to Hot Springs and its further expansion in Rapid City and the introduction of SmartPAKS that enable people to save money by bundling together their phone, TV and Internet service. The SmartPAKS are currently available to approximately 70% of the Golden West customers and should be available throughout the Golden West service area by the end of the year.

Strandell also encouraged those attending the meeting to vote NO on Initiated Measure 8 that was introduced by the cell phone industry to remove the 4% Gross Receipts Tax from cell phone bills. "Golden West pays gross receipts taxes, in lieu of property taxes, to support our schools and communities and so should out-of-state corporations who do business here," said Strandell noting that Golden West recently paid more than $2.5 million in gross receipts taxes.

Director elections at this year's meeting saw two incumbents running unopposed for seats on the 12-member board. Those reelected were incumbents Kenneth "Sonny" Zickrick, Jr. of Long Valley and Dale Guptill of Interior in District III.

Following the business meeting, Cooperative members were entertained by the music of From the Heart. Several lucky Cooperative members also went home with door prizes including Esther Murtha of Hot Springs, the winner of the $500 grand-prize drawing.

Cheyenne River man named Minority Small Business Person of the Year

SIOUX FALLS - The U.S. Small Business Administration has named Robert Laurenz of Pierre as its Minority Small Business Person of the Year for South Dakota. Dakota 2000 of which Laurenz is the President is a Native American-owned company that supports commercial, state, local and tribal government agencies with information technology services.

He offers Internet service, email and assistance in computers and website building.

Dakota 2000 was founded in 1995 and it has successfully completed contracts with several government agencies according to a press release from the SBA.

Laurenz is enrolled at Cheyenne River and grew up on a ranch in central South Dakota and is still active in the family ranch. He is dedicated to improving the economic and social conditions of Indian Country.

He was presented the award in Pierre on Sept. 18 and will be recognized also during SBA's Small Business Week next spring.

Thoughts that come from the heart

John was truly a legacy

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

Last week, the Lakota Nation not only lost a valuable link to the richness of the language and the history of our nation, but he left a legacy. Samuel John Around Him died Sept. 20. He was 64.

He spent a great deal of his life teaching and he taught with a passion and dedication to the belief that we needed to preserve the Lakota language, history and ceremonial way of life.

He touched the lives of many through his teaching and through his humility. That is made John so easy to learn from, was his humility.

Humility is a human trait that is hard to come by. It is a trait that bonds one to the Creator and to compassion of the people.

He was a highly respected sun dance helper, father, language teacher, and he spent many years helping inmates at various prisons with song and ceremonies and helping them to understand the spiritual ways of the Lakota people.

I valued John's help many times. He worked many years at Little Wound School, teaching our kids the language, song and history of the Lakota people. His teachings touched the lives of many, many children.

He touched my life and my children's lives as they attended school at Little Wound School. He touched the lives of many. I worked at the school for ten years and he was there.

He was my mentor at the school, anytime I need help with the language in working with public relations. Anytime I had questions on the language, history or culture, I would go to him. He had patience. He believed it was not only up to the schools to teach the language but it needed to be taught at home within the tiwahe.

Years ago, there was controversy at the Bennett County High School over the way their coronation was depicting Lakota spirituality. I asked John to go to the board meeting to explain why it was an insult and he was treated rather rudely. He told me that he was a veteran and he didn't care for the way he was treated.

He was a historian, he knew the history of the how that event evolved and it wasn't racism, we needed to learn, both sides. It was ignorance.

When my mother died in 1998, John came to pay his respects and he told the story of how he and his wife were married and they had my mom 'stand good for them' or be their witness at their wedding. He told me she was good luck for them as their bond had their longevity.

He has such strength, not only in his teachings and humility but in his journey home. When someone like John journeys on, it makes us afraid at times, because people like him have a wealth of knowledge and patience in sharing it that was never ending. We have few left like John that didn't believe in using Lakota language and healing as a commodity but as part of life. It is a way of life.

In reality though, his teachings will go into the next generation, it may change a little with time and how society changes but the core of it will go to the next generation. The songs will be carried on.

It is fitting and appropriate that we salute and honor our friend, John Around Him, in this particular issue. He made it a point to stop in for coffee when we first begin our work in Kyle at the Lakota Fund building and then, when we moved to Martin, he didn't disappoint us.

He often stopped by to chat and to share the latest news or to find out the latest news. In Lakota circles, when people meet they will often say, "oyakiye" which means to "tell it" or tell the news. As many people know, John was dedicated to his work in preserving and promoting Lakota spirituality and language.

At the school, his skill as a great resource to staff and community was legendary and which was a tremendous example of his "tacan waste' or generous heart. His leadership in practicing the sun dance the traditional way was well known.

He graced us with his presence and for those of us who recognized his special gifts, we are better for it. There were times I would get discouraged in publishing the paper and he was encouraging in that we needed to always teach, the language and the history and the spiritual ways. When he would tell me that I felt encouraged, it was because I respected him greatly. We will miss you, leksi.

Upcoming tribal election

In more mundane matters, the Oglala Sioux Tribal elections are fast approaching and all tribal citizens are highly encouraged to get out and practice their constitutional right.

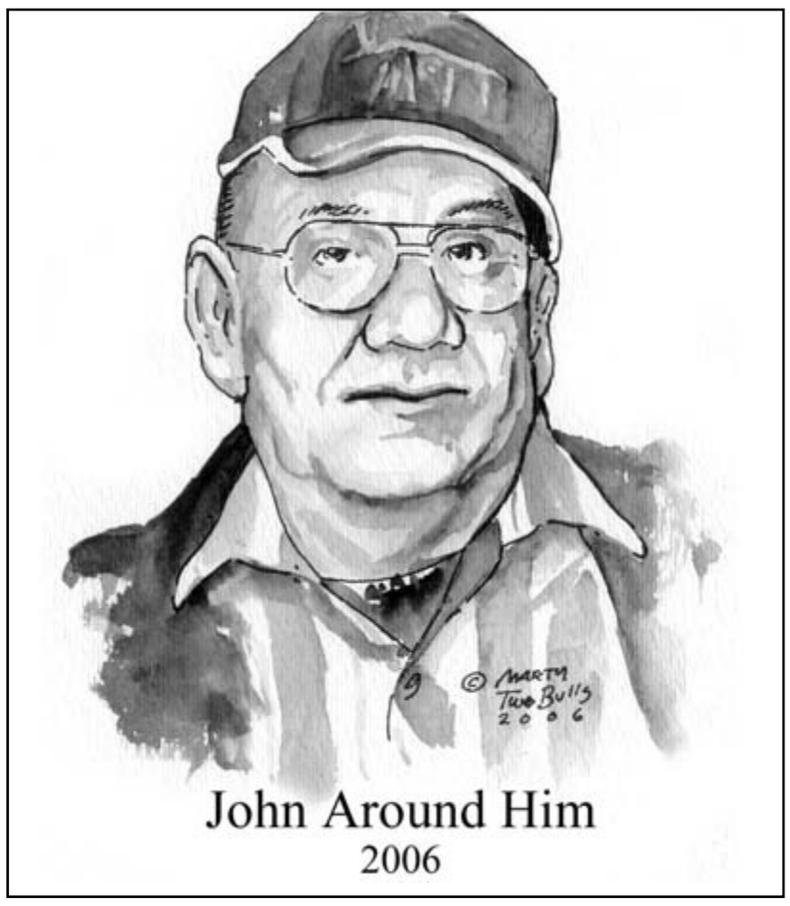
When we endeavor to be good tribal citizens, the right to vote stands right up there with our other individual freedoms of speech, due process, and so forth.

We have a responsibility to examine the profiles and platforms of all of our candidates at all levels and contribute our voice to the process. When we are fully involved as such, we are less likely to be frustrated by the electoral process as the hope is that the best candidate will be chosen by a majority of people who have the wisdom to make the choice that we can live with for two years.

There are many obstacles and opportunities, alike that are confronting the Oglala Lakota oyate. The manner in which they are outlined as priorities in this election will be best served by those individuals who have the foresight and the best interest of the people in mind as they go forward with a vision in mind. The solutions are likely at hand and our responsibility is to elect those candidates who approach their work with a sense of dignity and concern for the oyate.

Take a stand and get out and vote on Tuesday, Oct. 3.

Our publication date is on Thursday, but we will have the results posted on our website at www.lakotacountrytimes.com.



No smoking on hospital property

Effective Nov. 15, Pine Ridge Indian Health Service will enact their policy of no smoking on the hospital compounds of their facilities where patient care takes place.

These facilities include the Pine Ridge hospital and the parking lot, the Kyle Health Center and parking lot and the Wanblee Health Center and parking. This has been a national move involving most hospitals like Rapid City Regional and Sioux Falls hospitals.

In the past years, airports, educational institutes and restrurants have been enacting this policy for healthier environments. Little Wound School enacted this policy for their entire compound several years ago for students, staff and community.

The Rosebud Indian Health Service hospital will start their policy on no smoking effective Dec. 1.

The opinions expressed in Letters to the Editor and Opinion Pages are not necessarily that of the editor or staff of the Lakota Country Times.

What do the State of South Dakota, Oglala Sioux Tribe, and Flandreau Sioux Tribe have in common?

Dear Editor:

Long ago, tribal societies did not use corporal punishment, but instead used shame and ostracizing of wrongdoers to keep their communities in line.

With shaming, community members knew when they had overstepped the boundaries of local laws and mores.

Long ago, even newcomers to this land were convinced their land would be far different than the monarchy they left behind. The laws they wrote were dependent on community values and mores.

In today's society, laws exist to corral and isolate those who cannot exist in our society.

When these perpetrators are isolated and taken out of the community, where is the help from the community to assist in training the perpetrator on what is or is not acceptable?

Recently I read about how the State of South Dakota is trying to retract the law limiting terms of service for Congressmen. I read about how the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council ousted their president without due process.

And now I read about how Flandreau Sioux Tribal members elected a new Chairman, but the former chairman's family, on the election board, will now not allow the new chairman to be seated.

It brings me back again, to traditional tribal ways.

Long ago, tribal government was set up with deliberateness, so that no one could accumulate power and ultimately abuse power.

In the old days, tribal government was set up so that every person had to serve a short term in government for two reasons:

1) so they would know that taking that leadership position didn't mean power for themselves, but to accomplish things for the people; and

2) because absolute power corrupts absolutely. This concept crosses all nations.

So how do things like lengthening term limits for Congressmen even cross the minds of honest people? How can you have a good and fair government if you don't follow your own laws of due process?

And how is it tribal members can elect a new tribal chairman (I think the people believed it was time for a change) and then the relatives of the ousted chairman come together and take that victory away from the winner?

I think it all comes down to shame.

Community members need to stand up and provide that ounce of sanity, that pint of shaming, that visible and audible OUTRAGE at those without shame as they continue to do these things.

For those of you, who refuse to follow due process or procedures within your own governments, shame on you!

No one elected you to be a politician for life. If you truly want to make change in this world of politics, train others to accomplish your position because we should each and all be responsible for teaching our future replacements good and positive governance qualities.

And to those of you, who are without shame, wake up and smell the coffee! Is this how you want to be remembered?

As someone who couldn't let go of power and stayed in office by treachery?

You continue to shamelessly use your relatives to oust someone who legally gained the voice and trust of the people; go look for your morals because you lost them somewhere.

Who am I to write this to you? I am no one; except that I have determined to speak up with a small voice of conscience in the face of injustice.

Hihanni ki, wi cokan hiyaye wahehanl

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The Lakota phrase comes from leksi Albert White Hat's book and it translates, "tomorrow when the sun is in the middle of its journey."

It is an interesting phrase that in English could simply refer to the time of the day. In Lakota, the feeling is that the sun is a living being that is on its daily journey. As Lakota people went about their daily affairs, the sun as the messenger of warmth and light was intimately connected to those daily activities that spelled survival and growth.

Autumn is a time of harvest while cooler temperatures seem to sweep through Lakota country all too quickly, although we do not have a lot of variety in the colors that we enjoy.

Ghost Hawk park on the Rosebud 'rez' is barely beginning to begin a changeover to yellow, while Yellow Bear canyon and lake toward Kyle has already seen the leaves start to fall off because of windy conditions. Doggone it, I wished we had more reds and oranges as they do in the northeast.

There are many ways in which we also find ourselves 'in the middle of our journey' especially when we are young.

As we journey through this contemporary world which is wreaking havoc on Lakota life, it is getting increasing more difficult to navigate. There are so many ways in which we are assaulted, from car wrecks to illnesses to the scourge of alcohol and drugs.

I will be thinking of leksi John Around Him of Kyle who has journeyed into the spirit world last week as he will be laid to rest. He often came by the Lakota Country Times office to visit with the staff and I only caught a glimpse of his generosity of spirit and wonderful repository of Lakota language and culture. He was the kind of elder that you didn't want to ask questions of, but you simply sat and listened to what he might offer. It was the kind of setting which one tried to learn something in Lakota, but you knew that he would be moving on all too quickly.

Lately, I often wonder why we praise people so profusely when they pass on to the spirit world instead of doing it when they are amongst us. We should talk kind to them while they are walking amongst us with their greatness and generosity rather than making ourselves look foolish and coming up with phrases to describe their contributions to Lakota life when it is too late.

The greater lesson that leska John would have rather we learned is to value each other in a sincere way and stop being jealous of others who might have out achieved you on many fronts because that is something you cannot control.

There are those who have fancy cars, jobs and job titles and I applaud them without a bit of envy in my heart because that is the Lakota way.

We need to elevate those who are so fortunate because as I like to say 'time is the great equalizer' and we need to enjoy each day that we are given.

When the sun is past the time of the middle of the journey it is written, "wicokan sanm iyaye ki' and it is a time reference that can easily be applied to our life as we journey each day toward the end.

The end of the day may be written as, "anpetu wi icana wiohpeyatakiya ki mahel iyakte - the daylight sun will soon go down in the west.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Wayne Weston: platform for Oglala Sioux Tribe vice president

By Wayne Weston

Candidate for OST Vice President

What is the definition of leadership? I want to give my understanding of leadership to the Oyate so there are no misunderstandings to my philosophies. I believe a leader must be in sync with the conscience of the people.

The conscience of the people is not by only what is vocalized, I sometimes think there are special interest groups that abuse this to make people believe they are speaking for everyone, but that the conscience of the people must also come from the spirit of the people. I believe this conscience understanding must come from prayer, meditation, listening, and interacting with the Oyate.

It must take an open heart and open mind and making the best decision based upon those criteria's. I truly believe that we have been conditioned into a "win/loss" philosophy where we dwell in contention amongst ourselves and there is no continuity, if we do not agree and find ourselves in the "loss" column we find ways to put ourselves in the "win" column.

This vicious cycle is extremely frustrating and causes us to fail our obligations to the Oyate. I have heard of the "Win/Win" approach, but I believe this is not realistic, what I believe is the "Middle-Ground" philosophy which takes hard work and working together. I believe our ancestors lived this way and found balance in their lives.

I have heard this way called "making a compromise", where we ask ourselves "Can I live with this?" if we are able to come to this point and talk I believe we have made progress and therefore having continuity.

My background has been mainly in program development; this is taking a critical look at projects and/or programs and finding the best approach on developing or strengthening those existing components or projects.

What I believed to be my strength was not that I possessed all the expertise, but I sought out the right individuals who had the expertise and directed them of what needed to be done and worked directly to keep everyone on track, giving each specific tasks and deadlines.

I believe this is what development is about.

I do not believe in micro-management, but giving direction and encouragement.

I believe as the vice president there are certain limitations and advantages this position holds. I believe the vice-president is able to support the overall administration and contribute through research and analysis.

This position would be able to handle projects maybe not at the scale of President or Council, but projects that would complement the overall goal of that administration. With two year terms this position would set two sets of goals:

1. Short term goals that would not lapse two years to complete. This will take critical analysis to reach a realistic conclusion.

2. Long term goals that would be carried into the next administration. Ground work will be done with a plan to carry that out by the next administration.

This should be done with intense research and planning.

I believe as a Lakota "Wicasa" there are two key concepts that must be a part of every decision one makes, that is "Protect" and"Provide" the best interest of the Oyate.

I have grown to appreciate a parable that goes "it is wiser to teach a person to fish then providing that person with a supply of fish". I believe that in order to provide and protect the Oyate they must be given the appropriate tools, skills, and resources so that they are empowered.

It has been too long that we are dependent on outside help to sustain our life way, it is time to look within. This I believe is the greatest challenge we face as a people who have surpassed great odds to be where we are today.

Development of an economic infrastructure is vital to this empowerment.

I believe that once we have developed an infrastructure, this includes our roads, water, courts, law enforcement, laws, land security, and our belief that it can be done, and then we can begin developing strategies to bring jobs to our home land.

I foresee that this endeavor will take hard work and working together as our ancestors lived before we became dependent. As a candidate for vice-president I do not make promises, but the willingness to commit myself to do problem solving.

Getting the tribe out of "High Risk"

By Cecelia Fire Thunder

Candidate for OST President

Mitakuyepi

Two years ago I asked to borrow the power of your vote to lead our great Oglala Lakota Nation, first in the primary then in the General Election of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. This power was returned to you on May 29, 2006 when the Council removed me as your President in a 9 Yes 5 No vote violating the 2/3rd rule.

I am once again asking you to loan me the power of your vote on October 3, 2006 when you go to the polls in our primary election to be one of the two candidates for the General Election.

I need your support once again to complete the financial accountability efforts started to get the tribe off "high-risk" status.

The years from 1999 thru 2004 spending and financial irresponsibility in Program funds and no opinion audits have taken up much time in this administration to remedy with success and I want to thank all involved in the continued work.

In the first months of my administration records of financial impropriety were turned over to Criminal Investigation of the Federal Government, this investigation is continuing.

The unpaid bills and audit findings totaled millions of dollars for these years in tribal program. We were successful in setting up negotiations with federal agencies with documents and filing of tribal financial records accomplished with the hiring of 5 individuals with the loan from our relatives in Shakopee. The organizing of these records allowed the tribe to find the records needed to answer questions from the audits and we successfully settled large amounts, $18 million of the Shakopee loan settled bills and replaced Federal dollars that were spent that should not have been spent.

I need your support to continue with this effort of getting our tribe off "high risk", which is closing out all the questions from 1999 thru 2004. I need your support to finish a national effort to get a Bill into Congress to fund tribal law enforcement based on the data to be collected in a study.

Law Enforcement

Has not received any substantial increase in many years and I was able to get national tribal leadership to support a study to get the data to support the request for new funding at a level needed to support law enforcement services for Pine Ridge and Indian Country. My administration was able to get $1.5 million dollars to keep our department afloat, along with successfully removing the "match" requirement for additional grants from the Department of Justice.

I need your support to keep the momentum going in completing the Mni Wiconi Water project; the message to Congress and BOR was to not fund any new water projects until this one was completed.

Your voice to all council candidates is to establish a recall process that gives the power to remove a sitting President and representative at the hands of the people who elected them for cause.

This recall process, language for separation of powers and code of ethics need your voice to push as you ask your candidates to complete this and put to referendum along with four year staggered terms and Business Council that have been completed.

Education

Is the answer to ending poverty and need all who care about children to help create a plan including the state schools, parochial and tribal schools leadership, there are around 5500 Lakota children K-12th grade attending school on the reservation.

At any time these children are moving from one system to another, attendance and graduation are two primary challenges and we need the help of parents and guardians of these children to help as well.

My membership on the Great Plains Tribal Chair Association allowed me, with the help of our leaders, to question the services and advocacy on our needs of Tribal schools, which led to the successful injunction against the BIA Indian Education Program to stop the restructuring process for our region.

We are the experts now with the number of Lakota who hold responsible positions of administration within our schools on the Pine Ridge.

District Governments

Under the constitution have the power to plan and find resources to build and enhance the community, this includes immediate and long range planning to meet the growth, economic, health, social and education needs of a community. I have and will continue to support this effort to support strengthening the capacity along with finding resources to sustain and support district development and growth.

Land

Who we are and with the land office and land committee will educate ourselves and others on Oglala Land Issues as only a handful seem to have all the information. There are 95,000 fractionated landowners with a little over half being Oglala and others of other nations. The issues are many, however it is time to take ownership of our land issues, starting with families coming together to districts and tribe.

Consolidation, trading and selling are all important things we need to understand to make better choices about our land individually and collectively. There have been numerous efforts over the years on our land and what is feasible to develop. The land on the surface and under has been documented and each district government needs to invest time in understanding what is in their districts. With the population growth each year increasing by 250-300 births a year, district governments must do more to understand land needs to accommodate housing and development.

FMHA annual payment of $870,000 was reduced to an estimated $342,000 thus freeing up half a million dollars, this successful effort was done thru this administration via a rider on a bill that was signed into law by the President of the U.S. This was an Oglala Sioux Tribe effort that benefited 28 other tribes that had outstanding FSA debt.

Tribal Courts

Need resources to do their job, but what they need is for tribal government to stay out of its business, again for outside investors to invest on economic development projects, we must strengthen the courts and allow them to enforce the law, interpret the law and apply the law. All candidates must make a commitment to make this happen with the first quarter of new administration.

Health Care

Is a treaty obligation and there is never enough money to meet the health care needs of the people.

The real amount we need never reaches Congress and even then the number is reduced, leadership needs to prioritize increasing the amount along with assisting any way we can to find other resources through the tribe and Indian Health for important educational endeavors on prevention as many of the acute health care problems we have are preventable and controllable.

Community based prevention efforts are necessary and even more successful are school based efforts, week long staff in all the schools are needed to assist our children in understanding and getting information to make better choices for mind, heart, body and spirit for a long life. An immediate and long term health care plan for the reservation is necessary so appropriate resource funding can take place.

School based programs are underway, nursing home project is underway, air ambulance project is underway, expansion of outpatient and emergency room is underway and I want to finish helping our hospital get the funding to make the ICU operational so our people stay instead of being sent all over the state for cardiac emergency.

Finally, I want all the schools and college to meet and talk about how we can meet the needs for hospital workers including tribal members to be doctors, dentists, nurses, PA's, etc.

I am asking for your support on Oct. 3, 2006 by loaning me the power of your vote again.

Le miye, Mata Canali Winyan.

Concerns of Denver area media coverage

By Carol Berry
Indigenous Training Resource Council
Lakewood, Colo.
Chickasaw303@yahoo.com

For Denver's Indian community, this month ushers in a political season marked by media bias. In a couple of weeks, the daily Rocky Mountain News will begin its annual drumbeat of censure against protestors of the Columbus Day parade.

Much of the most blatant anti-Indian sentiment appears in On Point columns written by Vincent Carroll, editor of the RMN editorial pages, but, as indicated below, it also appears both in the subject matter of articles printed and in topics omitted.

Parade opponents have asked parade organizers and the city itself to dissociate the name "Columbus" from the principle of Italian pride on which the parade allegedly is based. They note Columbus' record as a slave trader and perpetrator of genocide, crimes for which he was held accountable even in his own day, and urge an end to a city-sanctioned event celebrating the murderer of some Native Denverites' ancestors.

In contract, a RMN columnist asserts that, "It was inevitable that Europeans would find their way to this continent, that the two civilizations would clash, and that more rational and technologically advanced one would prevail over the primitive and outnumbered one. That's history, traditionally celebrated by the victors and condemned by the vanquished." (Mike Rosen, RMN, Sept. 30, 2005)

After framing the local, annual parade protest as a violation of free speech (rather than terming the parade's name and intent on expression of hate speech or inflammatory speech), the RMN will pray out every morsel of controversy and half-truth it can find.

Than, with October's end, and the RMN's exhaustion of its repertoire of blame re the Columbus parade protest, the newspaper turns its attention not to American Indian Heritage Month, but to a glorification of Thanksgiving and implicit disapproval of Native activists who choose to fast on the day that ushered in centuries of death and devastation for Indian people.

Last November was particularly sorrowful, with the loss of Profesoor Vine Deloria Jr., possibly America's foremost Indian scholar and a beloved leader. Native dignitaries came from across the country to his funeral near Denver. The story of his life and death ended up at the bottom of page six in the RMN (compare this to the coverage given the death of Rosa Parks, Euroamerican leaders, Martin Luther King Jr., and others).

Further, the RMN's Carroll chose the day of the funeral (Nov. 18, 2005) to term Prof. Deloria's body of knowledge 'utterly wacky" in his column. It is hard to imagine what further evidence would be required to show the RMN's complete lack of knowledge of and respect for the Indian world. Public outcry was ignored, and no apology to the community was forthcoming from the paper.

In contrast, a couple of months later (Jan. 21, 2006) the RMN devoted a three-page spread, complete with color photos, to the funeral of a Native soldier who died in Iraq. It is unfortunate that such an acknowledgement could not have been extended to professor for his years of service to the Indian community and his national prominence.

Subsequently, the RMN announced the Denver March Powwow (March 24, 2006) and displayed in a separate instance a photo of a child in traditional regalia (March 22, 2006). It provided limited coverage of the North American Indigenous Games held in Denver.

However, the paper did not cover nationwide educational or Native business summits in Denver, major policy developments, such as those that threatened to close down the local urban Indian H=health program, regular National Congress of American Indian news, major initiatives of the Native American Rights Fund headquartered in Boulder or those of the Council of Energy Resource Tribes in Denver. It did not commemorate key anniversaries in connection with the Native American holocaust (which it essentially denies). Regular coverage of Denver Indian Center, Denver Indian Family Resource Center, Denver Indian Health and Family Services, and other programs is simply lacking. Suitable for coverage in the RMN apparently are militarism, athletics, and Natives (particularly children) in beads and feathers or dance regalia that resembles formal clothing of two centuries ago.

Unacceptable are intellectuals perceived to be outside the mainstream, political dissidents or activists, developments of trends affecting contemporary Indian people, attempts to correct American history to accurately reflect what actually happened to Native people, any hint of treaty violations in Colorado or elsewhere, or analyses of such movements as preservation of sites sacred to the indigenous world.

A further sampling from the RMN:

On Point, Oct. 6, 2005: After a supposedly accurate depiction of the grisly details of Aztec sacrificial practices, Carroll opines: "For grotesque cruelty, the Aztec rituals have few if any rivals in the history of high civilizations, but slavery, torture and cannibalism were hardly unusual for the age. The first two could be found almost everywhere on the planet. Cannibalism was less common, but tribes up and down the Americas, from the Iroquois in the north to the Tyupis in what is now Brazil, regularly feasted on their foes." Further,

"Columbus was no saint, as the protesters at Denver's Columbus Day parade this weekend will obnoxiously remind us. What they'll refuse to acknowledge is that this magnificent navigator was also a man of his times. His callousness did not stand out 500 years ago in the same way Hitler's and Stalin's cruelty rocked the collective conscience of the 20th century." According to RMN, "the only real 'Native American's' were dinosaurs and cockroaches. Indians were Johnny-come-latelys, too, many crossing the land bridge from Asia" (Mike Rosen, Sept. 30, 2005)

On Point, Aug. 16, 2005 (Carroll's column, in this instance concerning sports mascots): Carroll published a "wonderfully combative' statement by Charles E. Kupchella (head of the University of North Dakota, home of the "Fighting Sioux") concerning the NCAA's "haughty decision" to ban certain Indian mascots: "The university has a logo, not a mascot," Carroll quotes Kupchella as "indignantly" informing the NCAA. The basic message of Kupchella's letter to the NCAA is as follows, Carroll states: "your recent decision, dear NCAA, is high-handed, ignorant, insulting and intellectually sloppy. Please answer a few basic questions you neglected to answer in your edict so that I can appeal it and, when the time comes, sue you."

(On Point, Jan. 10, 06) Carroll takes a passing swipe at the indigenous struggle in Chiapas, noting that Subcommandante Marcos is "an intellectual who professes to identify with the oppressed and who laces his speeches with pretentious claptrap."

The RMN's website records some Indian-themed coverage in "your Hub," a weekly insert featuring citizen-contributed articles, including those discussing lacrosse as a Native American sport (March 28, 2006), appraisals of Native American artifacts (August 29, 2006), and "mines used by Am erican Indians to make paint" (September 3, 2006.

The RMN is an editorial ("Abramoff's Clients Deserve Scrutiny, Too", Jan. 6, 2006) states that "tribes hide behind claims of 'sovereignty' and duck fiscal oversight, to mention many of the taxes other businesses must pay." In fact, casinos are stringently operated under the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act of 1988 and, in addition to being required to fund tribal government services and economic development, must help fund the operations of local government agencies and charities. As a result, millions go to taxes and other revenues for state and local governments.

On Point, July 13, 2006: When the judge in the Cobell case (concerning mismanaged individual Indian trust accounts administered by the Department of the Interior) was removed, the TMN rejoiced. After all, the judge had denounced foot-dragging Interior as the "morally and culturally oblivious hand-me-down of a disgracefully racist and imperialist government…the last pathetic outpost of the indifference and Anglocentrism we thought we had left behind."

It is the 21st Century and the RMN is a prominent publication in a major American City. There are Native people alive today who grandparents knew those directly affected by the horrific consequences of Manifest Destiny. The 9/11 tragedy with its 2,000 deaths does not begin to approach the scale of the millions dead in the North American Native holocaust.

It is a tribute to the courage and resourcefulness of American Indians that at least some people are alive today to begin rebuilding their tribal nations. It is beyond all likelihood that the RMN would comprehend the Native point of view. But it should somehow occur to the editors that demeaning the survivors is cowardly and in appropriate, to say the least.

The opinions expressed in Letters to the Editor are not necessarily that of the editor or staff of the Lakota Country Times.

HUMAN PAPILLOMA VIRUS

THE CAUSE OF CERVICAL CANCER

What is HPV?
A common virus. There are many types of this virus. Some types of HPV (Human Papillomavirus) can be passed from person to person through sexual contact.

How common is HPV?
It is very common! It is estimated that 75% of sexually active people will get HPV in their lifetime.

If I get HPV, will I get cervical cancer?
Maybe. Most types of HPV are relatively harmless and will go away on their own. However, in some women HPV will cause the cells of her cervix to grow out of control. If this is not caught early then cervical cancer can develop.

Will I be able to tell if I have HPV?
Probably not. Most people do not know they are infected with HPV because it does not cause changes that can be felt.

What can I do to protect myself from cervical cancer?
Get a Pap test every year! This test will help your health care provider to see if there are any changes or problems that you cannot see or feel. Regular Pap tests and careful medical follow-up can help catch changes or abnormalities before a woman develops life-threatening cervical cancer.

Can I protect myself from HPV?
A person can reduce their risk of getting HPV by staying in a long-term, mutually monogamous relationship with an uninfected partner, or limiting the number of sexual partners. Also, if used correctly, using condoms can reduce the risk of HPV infection. But remember even if you do these things you can still get HPV and not know it so it is very important to get a Pap test.

Red Cloud grabs third place in Region 4A golf, team qualifies for State

Todd County's Prue lone state qualifier in 3A

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

LEAD-DEADWOOD - The Red Cloud boy's golf team earned a state tournament berth for the entire team with a third place finish in last week's Region 3A tournament hosted by Lead-Deadwood. The Goldiggers, the host team, won the Region with a 316, belle Fourche was second with 356 while Red cloud was third with 361, Little Wound was 7th with 413 and Pine Ridge was 8th with 507.

With an 89, Red Cloud senior AB Morgan took 7th individually, Red Cloud's Montana Sierra and Little Wound's Michael Lays Bad tied for 8th with 90. Red Cloud's Mike Twiss and Joe Richards were 12th with 91's and Corey Mills will go to State also as the Crusaders fifth golfer, he finished with a 99.

"This is a fantastic finish for our developing program," said Lenny Clifford, Red Cloud coach, "all of our golfers make a tremendous sacrifice each day to travel long distances to get to a golf course to practice on-Gordon is 41 miles one way and Rushville is 28 miles, these young golfers have made the commitment and we have seen overall team improvement each year."

The top 20 individuals qualify for State along with the top three teams, Little Wound's Josh Mousseau and Napolean Lays Bad earn their State ticket with a 94. Jess Nichols, Lead-Deadwood, took individual honors with a 73, Lance Collins his teammate finished with a 75.

Local golfers participating included: Joe Keith/PR 96, Eric Long/PR 111, Darrin Merrival Jr./PR 123, Donnie whirlwind Horse/LW 135 and Stephen Ross/PR 177.

Alex Prue, a freshman at Todd County, took 11th in Region 3A with a 93 and qualified for State. The Falcons finished sixth in the region with a team score of 486. Parkston won the Region with a 339 while Parkston's Trevor Freudenthal took individual honors with a 75.

The State A golf tournament is scheduled for Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 2 and 3 at the Spearfish Canyon Country Club.

Cloud rains on Mustang parade, Falcons cruise over Crow Creek

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE/STEPHAN - Little Wound came into town undefeated with three straight wins to open the season and some honorable mention points in the poll, Red Cloud was trying to bounce back from their first loss of the season against Pine Ridge. The Crusaders ended up winning a hard fought defensive struggle 14-12 in cold, rainy, windy conditions as junior running back, Billy Scott carried the ball 31 times for 208 yards and two touchdowns.

"We struggled with turnovers last week and we really wanted the team to take better care of the ball," said Nick Dressel, Red Cloud head coach, "between our concern about turnovers and the weather conditions, we basically stayed conservative and let our offensive line open up holes for Billy to run through."

Little Wound came into the game with a balanced offense and despite the sloppy field conditions found some success both through the air and on the ground; Shilo Pierce carried the ball 17 times for 119 yards and Johnny Cloud was eight of 13 passing with one touchdown.

The Mustangs opened the scoring as Cloud hit Devon LeBeau for a 19 yard TD pass in the first quarter as Little Wound went up 6-0. Red Cloud came back on a Scott 49 yard TD run in the second and a Sun jung Park point after gave the Crusaders a 7-6 halftime lead. Scott added to the lead in the third quarter with a four yard plunge for his second TS, Park's PAT gave Red Cloud a 14-6 lead. Bryce Hornbeck scored on a seven yard run in the fourth to bring Little Wound within two points at 14-12. Little Wound's two point conversion attempt was stopped by Red Cloud's defensive line.

Cloud gave Little Wound another scoring opportunity as he hit several receivers in a late fourth quarter march down the field that ended as Art Vitalis, a junior defensive back intercepted a Johnny Cloud pass in the end zone to end the Mustang comeback attempt.

Red Cloud moves their record to 3-1 and will host Cheyenne Eagle butte on Friday while Little Wound is also now 3-1 and travels to Martin for a Friday night game against Bennett County. AB Morgan and Breanna White were selected 2006 Homecoming King and Queen with attendants including: juniors-Ken Franks and Audrey White, sophomores-Danielle Locust and Jacob Franks and freshman-Steven Vitalis and Laree Pourier.

Thorpes roll over Braves

Pine Ridge evened their season record at 2-2 with a 34-14 win over Eagle Butte Friday night in cold rainy conditions that produced a number of turnovers on both sides of the line.

Pine Ridge went out quickly scoring three touchdowns in the first half and going up 20-0 as Dave Bulldawg Michaud scored on a 16 yard run and a 19 yard fumble recovery for a touchdown and Louis Ramos two yard run. Eagle Butte got right back into the game taking advantage of Thorpe turnovers to score two TDs on a Tyson Maxon 74 yard TD run and a 93 yard fumble recovery and return for a TD by Spencer Peterson to close out the first half down 20-14.

Michaud closed out the Thorpe win in the second half with a 10 yard run for a TD in the third and a 55 yard TD run in the fourth finishing with 13 carries for 149 yards and three touchdowns and a fourth TD on a fumble recovery return. Michaud added 18 tackles on defense to lead the Thorpes, Ramos added 15 tackles and DJ Clifford helped with 10.

Pine Ridge hosts Todd County on Friday night. Michael Jack and Robin Webber were named 2006 Homecoming King and Queen.

Todd County closed out their road game at Crow Creek at halftime with a 50-0 win over the Chieftains.

Gunner Krogman ran for two touchdowns Friday and Mike Neiss caught a CJ Spotted Tail 11 yard pass for a TD and added two two point conversions to lead the Falcons to their third win of the season. Jesus Duran finished with nine carries for 93 yards and a touchdown while CJ Spotted Tail hit two TD passes, the first to Jaden Allen on a 11 yard reception. Albert Her Many Horses added a seven yard TD run and Canku One Star helped with a five yard TD run.

Todd County travels to Pine Ridge on Friday night while Crow Creek travels to St. Francis.

Lakota spiritual helper and language teacher journeys home

By Associated Press and Times Staff

KYLE - Lakota spiritual helper and language instructor John Around Him has died of bone cancer at his home near Kyle. The parking lot and auditorium at Little Wound School were filled to capacity on Monday and Tuesday night as wake services were held. Lakota people, relatives and friends from across the state came to say goodbye.

The funeral was held at at 2 p.m. on Wednesday in Kyle, preceded by traditional wake services held at Around Him's sun dance grounds in Yellow Bear Canyon.

As in traditional wake and funeral services, star quilts, flowers and cakes are brought to the services to honor. There were many, many star quilts, cakes, and flowers adorning the school gym where John's wake was being held.

A Vietnam Veteran, Around Him was a highly regarded emcee at cultural events, powwows and honoring on the northern plains. His many years of service to Little Wound School in promoting and perpetuating Lakota language use was a hallmark of his life's work. He also was an instructor with the Lakota Studies Department at Oglala Lakota College.

Around Him's service in the U.S. Army during the Vietnam War sensitized him to the emotional and counseling needs of young returning Iraq War veterans. He also helped at-risk young people and worked off the reservation with American Indian inmates in South Dakota prisons.

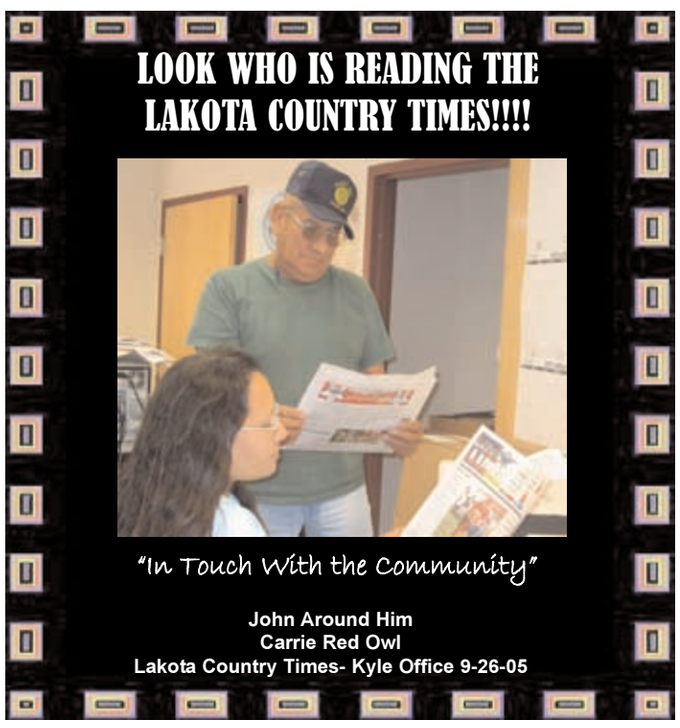
Around Him worked tirelessly to maintain connections to their culture and heritage by offering pipe and sweat-lodge ceremonies. He also did cultural awareness training for prison staff.

Because of his work, he was honored last month when Gov. Mike Rounds declared Aug. 28 ``John Around Him Day'' in South Dakota. The honoring was held at OLC's He Sapa branch campus in Rapid City.

Around Him spoke Lakota as his first language and he was generous in teaching and illustrating its proper written and spoken form.

Matilda Montileaux, a second-grade teacher and language teacher at Little Wound School who worked closely with Around Him, said he taught elementary, middle school and high school students over the years.

He gave opening prayers at school functions, announced for powwows and helped start a youth drum group.



``They were young boys then, and now they basically have families of their own,'' Montileaux said. ``And they're still singing.''

Around Him had taught Lakota language at Oglala Lakota College for three years and took on more leadership when longtime Lakota language teacher Calvin Jumping Bull died last year, according to Tom Short Bull, President of OLC.

``Now the issue is who is going to come and fill the void that John has left,'' Short Bull said. ``Hopefully someone will step forward, but we're really losing a lot of really good people on this reservation.''

Those who knew Around Him said his passing is a big loss for Lakota people.

``But I think what he has taught us, we should be able to use to carry on,'' said Montileaux, also Around Him's niece. ``Basically it's up to us to carry on the teachings. Not just about the language, but about life in general.''

John Around Him highly respected spiritual helper, Lakota language teacher and Vietnam Veteran speaks on the language and tiwahe

Editor's note The following interview was published by Lakota Country Times in the summer of 2005.

Special to the Times

KYLE- John Around Him was a highly respected spiritual helper and Lakota language teacher. A Vietnam veteran, Around Him, was able to relate to the young returning Iraq war veterans. As a sun dance leader and singer, he also promoted the use of Lakota language by encouraging those present to pursue the language. He says that tunkasila only understands the Lakota language and that anyone who is involved in ceremonies should learn the language at least.

Around Him taught in the Lakota Studies Department at OLC. Previously, he taught the Lakota language at Little Wound School and was able to draw some comparisons between teaching college students and school age children.

He said that he was able to look backward and see that, "There should be some uniformity in the language curriculum standards reservation wide. This would enable a child who transfers from one school to another to make the transition in Lakota easier."

He noted that, "In elementary and high school, one cannot simply give handouts as a way of teaching Lakota. Lakota language, history, and culture cannot be separated out, but that is the way the school districts approach language learning. Parents also have to be involved in the life of their child in order to promote and encourage Lakota language use."

When students are studying a topic in Lakota, there needs to be a specific block of time, like five continuous days, devoted to the subject so that it can be learned.

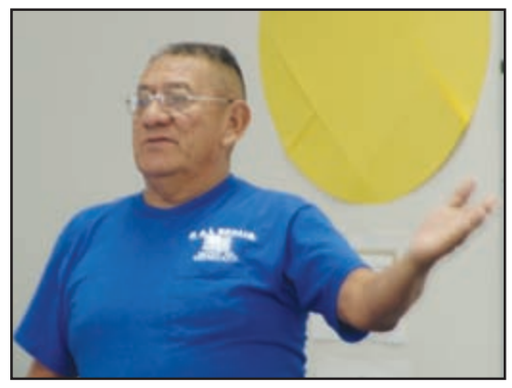
Some topics simply cannot be learned in one day, such as the kinship terms. Standard school district lesson plans usually require topics to change quickly and not enough time is set aside to learn each lesson, he said.

Around Him said that reservations schools need to develop their own language curriculum so that there is uniformity among schools.

That is where the college can collaborate with the schools in promoting good language use. Language teachers do not have a lot of freedom when teaching; even working in P.L. 95-638 contract schools and that is a hindrance.

He often spoke of the proper usage of the Lakota term "mitakuye oyasin" noting that it was inappropriate to use it at the end of prayer these days or as misused by politicians. The origin of the word is very powerful and more complex than most people realize. The word is held sacred in history and was used in a sacred manner with respect to spirituality. When broken down into its component parts, "mi" means "me," "takuye" is "everything" and "oyasin" means "come to me." He concluded by saying, "Wico'iye le unu'onihanpi sni waste sni yelo" or "It's not good the way they use the word without respect."

With respect to the eagle feather, Around Him made the point that the eagle feather requires special care because of its significance. When giving a feather, the sponsor has a responsibility to teach about its care. It as seen as spiritual messenger from all eagle nations of the universe. Furthermore, it should not be used as a fashion accessory as is seen now days.



At the college level, students have not retained enough Lakota from their school days and often need to be taught basic Lakota again.

"They should learn it at the reservation high schools and why are we teaching those things again," he said. "Such things as colors, numbers and phrases. Lakota language use should begin at the Head Start level. They should be teaching language immersion at least one hour a day. Parents can put Lakota terms on the refrigerator and this can be a great way to learn." according to Around Him. Desire is an important part of the process.

"The language has to start at home. Language is everything, the culture and history. Parents that are fluent have to teach their children. But yet they don't." He said "takuwe?" Why is it that way?

For example, parents can put labels up in the home with words to help teach children. "You can't really blame the schools and the college for not speaking the language, it has to start at home," he said.

The Vietnam War is an experience that often lingered in the mind of Around Him.

"The language has to start at home. Language is everything, the culture and history. Parents that are fluent have to teach their children. But yet they don't." He said "takuwe?" Why is it that way?

He was fortunate in that he was spiritually grounded in the Lakota way. It allowed him to leave the horrors of war behind and to integrate back into society.

He noted that, "Many young Lakota warriors who also follow the Christian way often follow the ten commandments. One says 'thou shall not kill.' It is a source of confusion for them as they are trained to kill if put in a combat situation."

Today, many of the returning veterans of the Iraq War often need some kind of counseling intervention, also, so that they can put the war behind them.

Around Him said, "We need to recognize the kinds of interventions that will help them adjust, such as the Pipe ceremony, the Christian way, or the Native American church. We need to accept the young veterans in order to recognize the stress and flashbacks that they may have."

Around Him was also a highly recognized sun dance leader on the northern plains.

His sun dance grounds are located in a beautiful location in Yellow Bear canyon. He believes in the authenticity of the sun dance and, as such, allows only Native people to participate. He said, "You have to follow the seven laws at your sun dance, so it is more understandable and respectful."

"The tiospayes now do their own. It is run inside of the communities. Like mine, I will know how many would be dancing next year because of the commitment they made last year,"he said.

He also spoke of the importance of women's ceremonies in Lakota life. He said, "I think there are only four ceremonies in existence, because we know the songs and how to do the ceremony.

The Hanble' ceya, the hunka pi, onikage, and the wi wang wacipi. It is a culture change. Some of the ceremonies are lost, but I know they are trying hard to continue the women's ceremonies."

At the time of the interview he said his granddaughter would be going through a Isnati awica lowanpi (womanhood) ceremony.

He said, "This lady in Rosebud, one time she held a ceremony and she told the men, 'All you men move back a little, this is a woman's ceremony.' I have respect for her."

It takes a year to learn many of the ceremonies. Language is a very important part of ceremonies, also. He said, "I have a tape of Uncle Stanley Looking Horse, before he passed away. He stated, 'We are going to bring the pipe out. I want all of you to learn your language. Learn it, speak it, the pipe is going to come out. The only language they understand is Lakota. When you pipe fast, you pray in Lakota." Stanley Looking Horse was one of the original pipe carriers and a spiritual singer.

Around Him was a great resource and cultural teacher. He often served as a Lakota cultural consultant to area schools, in addition to his regular teaching load at Oglala Lakota College.

He is well traveled on the northern plains and often assisted at other sun dances and ceremonies. He authored a Lakota language tape and booklet with Albert White Hat of the Lakota Studies Department at Sinte Gleska University.

He was often heard as an "eyapaha" at powwows, speaking at cultural functions and conducting veteran's honorings.

He has three sons and two daughters, Milton, Amaris, Clovia, Charles and Samuel and nine grandchildren.

Sentencings under way in theft of Missouri River tribal money on Standing Rock

By Carson Walker
Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) - Probation and repayments have been ordered for six of 10 people who stole from a Standing Rock Sioux Tribe fund that gets interest from federal money for land the tribe lost when the Oahe Dam and reservoir were built.

The six have been ordered to repay thousands of the nearly $100,000 stolen, according to documents in U.S. District Court.

All defendants were elected officers in the Running Antelope District and were charged with stealing and embezzling.

The main amount the federal government awarded to the tribe, about $90.6 million, is held in trust by the federal government. The Standing Rock Sioux Tribe draws money from the interest earned, according to a release from the U.S. attorney's office.

That amounted to a $1 million payment to the Running Antelope District in January 2002.

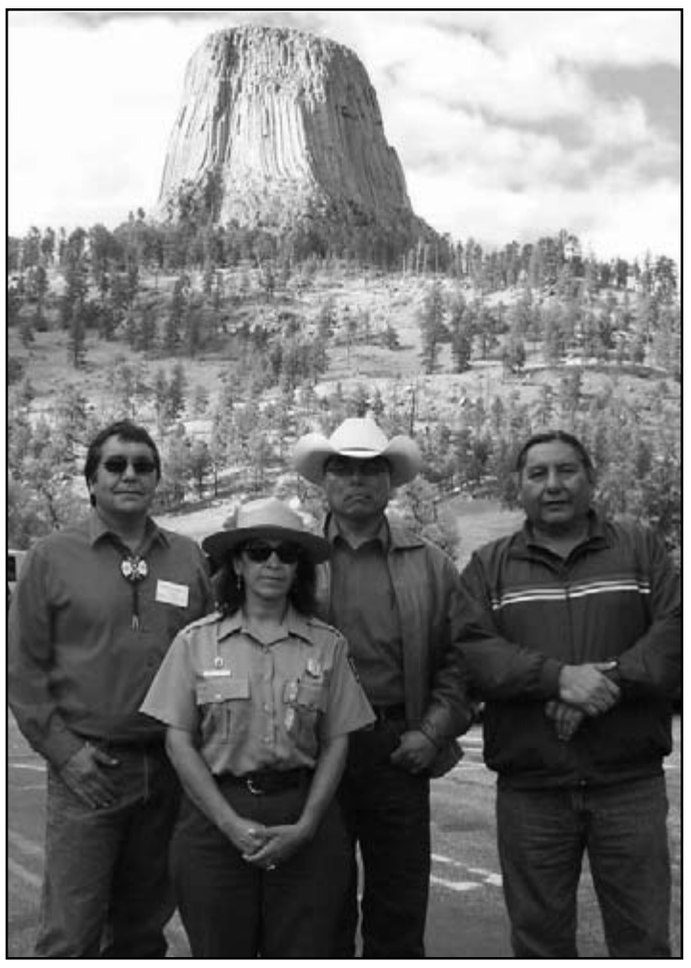
District Chairman Leslie Bobtail Bear, Vice Chairman Virgil Standing Crow, Secretary Gayle Henry, Treasurer Susie Long Elk and Planning Commission members Ralph Taken Alive, Jennifer White Eyes, Leroy White, Dale Weasel and Alvina Howard all pleaded guilty to felony embezzlement and theft.

All nine received money illegally for unauthorized travel, consulting fees, loans and other payments, according to prosecutors.

Restitution ordered so far includes: $10,500 from Howard; $8,500 from Weasel; $4,000 from Henry; $2,700 from White; $2,500 from White Eyes; and $2,000 from Taken Alive.

Sentencing dates are Sept. 25 for Long Elk and Standing Crow and Oct. 16 for Bobtail Bear.

Long Elk signed a factual basis statement indicating she took $94,600 by withdrawing money from a Mobridge bank, according to court documents.



``She kept some of the money for herself and distributed the rest of the embezzled funds'' to the nine other defendants, according to the statement.

Standing Crow stole $17,000 and Bobtail Bear took $6,000, according to factual basis statements signed by each and filed in court.

Instead of pleading guilty, Allen Flying By stood trial in Aberdeen in August and was convicted of three felony counts and one misdemeanor count of embezzlement and theft from an Indian tribal organization. The jury acquitted him of two other counts.

He's scheduled to be sentenced Nov. 20.

Flying By was the Running Antelope District representative to the tribal council when the money was stolen. The Standing Rock Sioux Tribe removed him from office in 2003 for financial mismanagement.

100th anniversary observed at Devils Tower

DEVILS TOWER, WYO. - A three day celebration was held last Sunday to mark the 100th anniversary of Devil's Tower in northeast Wyoming. Special guests included, Rodney M. Bordeaux, Rosebud Sioux Tribe president; Wyoming Governor Dave Freudenthal; Eugene Little Coyote, president of the Northern Cheyenne; RST council representative Russell Eagle Bear; RST traditional chief John Spotted Tail and Dorothy Fire Cloud, monument superintendent. Fire Cloud emphasized the management of the park takes into consideration the concerns of the Lakota and Northern Cheyenne who honor the historic site.

Yankton tribe gets grant for correctional facility

LAKE ANDES - The Yankton Sioux Tribe Adult and Juvenile Correctional Facility will receive $695,000 for its justice system, Sen. Tim Johnson said in a release.

The grant supplements a previous $2.9 million award to finish construction of the 21-bed facility, which will house nonviolent offenders under tribal jurisdiction.

``This funding will help nonviolent offenders transition back into society by providing the necessary facilities and adequate rehabilitation programs,'' Johnson said.

His day will end at with a meal and "question the candidate session" at approximately 5:30 p.m. at the Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort Restaurant and Motel in Kyle.

Big Bats will be candidate Fullers first stop on Sunday morning for breakfast at 10 a.m.

Free Biscuits and gravy will be served to the public from 10 a.m. to 10:30 a.m.

Eagle Butte man charged for killing his wife

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - An Eagle Butte man has been charged with killing his wife.

Federal grand jurors in Pierre indicted Jamie Kevin Roach, 42, on one count of second-degree murder, according to court documents.

He is accused of killing Debbie Sue Roach, 44, on Sept. 5 at their Eagle Butte home on the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation.

The indictment said Roach killed his wife by strangling and cutting her throat.

The maximum sentence if convicted is life in prison.

Roach is scheduled to stand trial in November.

SFIS students experience electronic theater

Elementary students watch with great interest of Dr. Hasler's show. "This is great in 3-D! said some of the students as they donned their 3-D glasses. Photo courtesy of the St. Francis Indian School gifted and talented program.

ST. FRANCIS - More than 500 St. Francis Indian School students and staff enjoyed three presentations of "Looking at Earth from Space: An Hour of Spectacular Visualization" by Dr. Fritz Hasler recently.

Dr. Hasler is a NASA Emeritus Scientist and Adjunct Professor at University of Utah who has presented his program internationally.

His visualizations appear on covers of magazines such as Newsweek, National Geographic, Popular Science, and TIME as well as on National and International Network TV.

The NASA REASON Project and the SFIS Gifted and Talented Program sponsored the presentations. Students and teachers alike saw HDTV and video projection technology on the large screen.

Some of the pictures included the 1972 Apollo "Blue Marble" image of the Earth. Other images included Hurricane Katrina, thunderstorms, annual blooming of the northern hemisphere land masses and oceans, fires in Africa, and carbon monoxide exhaust from global burning as well as the currents and vortexes in the oceans that bring up the nutrients to feed tiny plankton and draw the fish, whales and fishermen. Other images included how the ocean blooms in response to El Nino/La Nina climate changes.

Dr. Hasler demonstrated the use of Google Earth for satellite and aerial photography to help find a house.

The purpose of the presentations was to give those present the opportunity to see fantastic pictures of the earth from outer space, help students connect the pictures to classroom science instruction, and to generate some excitement and motivation for learning about science. Thank you to Dr. Hasler and the NASA REASON Project!

Other happenings at SFIS included the music program by Todd Green, who played 30 different instruments.

Green presented two assemblies to the students on Sept. 5 and a public concert on Sept. 6.

The SFIS Gifted and Talented Program seeks gifted student nominations in the categories of Intelligence, Creativity and Divergent Thinking, Academic and Achievement, Leadership, and Visual and Performing Arts.

The above enrichment experiences bring opportunities for all students that they ordinarily don't get to see.

If you know of a student who seems unusually talented or interested in one of the above areas, call or stop in at the Crazy Horse Resource Center at SFIS and ask for one of the Gifted and Talented Program staff members.

Artist's camp on Sept. 30

MANDERSON - A festival of the arts "Peace is Like a River" will be gathering of poets, activists and musicians at Kiza Park, north of Manderson on Saturday, Sept. 30. The gates open at 10 a.m. with a free giveaway of books for children and a free community meal. In case of the bad weather, the event will be at the Wounded Knee School. There will be some well known writers, artists and poets attending.

State conference seeks to improve education of Indian students

PIERRE (AP) - Educators need to gain a better understanding of American Indian students so they can help those students perform better in South Dakota's schools, a state official said Monday.

A state conference being held this week seeks to create ``an understanding of what Indian students and communities go through and how we can better reach those families and kids, how we can cross fences,'' said Keith Moore, director of Indian education for the South Dakota Education Department.

South Dakota teachers, school administrators and state officials are working to improve the academic achievement of Indian students, Moore said.

The average score of Indian students falls below statewide averages in standard achievement tests.

Educators also have to address cultural differences that can affect Indian students' performance, Moore said.

In a federal test that is given to fourth- and eighth-graders in all states, the scores reported last year showed Indian students were improving in math and reading achievement but still lagged behind the state average.

And in the test used to measure South Dakota's progress under the federal No Child Left Behind law, 59 percent of Indian students scored as advanced or proficient in reading, compared with the statewide total of 83 percent.

And 43 percent of Indian students scored advanced or proficient in math, well below the 73 percent statewide total.

In addition, Indian students drop out of high school at a higher rate than the statewide average.

In a presentation Monday, an education consultant told those at the state conference that students can escape poverty if they get a good education.

'Poverty-stricken families often discourage young people from leaving to get an education because relatives are one of their most cherished resources and they don't want their children to leave.'

-Littlejohn

Those students also need the help of a teacher or someone else to encourage them to pursue an education, said Jim Littlejohn of Columbia, S.C.

Littlejohn explained research done by Ruby K. Payne on the impact of poverty on learning.

He said people of all racial groups wind up stuck in poverty, which he defined as a lack of resources.

People of different income levels take different approaches to situations based on what they need to do to survive, Littlejohn said. Teachers dealing with students from poor families must understand those students and help them learn the rules that apply in schools, which are largely operated on middle-class values, he said.

Littlejohn said he escaped poverty after growing up in Pennsylvania because a coach helped him realize he needed to improve his grades in order to attend college.

He said after he got a job in South Carolina, he had to learn some new rules because he had no idea how to eat grits and he initially did not understand that golf was about making business contacts.

Poverty-stricken families often discourage young people from leaving to get an education because relatives are one of their most cherished resources and they don't want their children to leave, Littlejohn said.

A teacher can help encourage students to get advanced educations, which is the best way to boost income, he said.

``Give them the tools so they will have an opportunity,'' Littlejohn said.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am writing to you to ask you what you see for me in the upcoming years. I recently broke up with my boyfriend and now I am seeing a new guy from high school.

I am a single mother of two. I guess I am just curious if I am ever going to meet the right guy and be happy. Thank you for your time.

Miss Curious

Dear Miss Curious:

We come into the earth with an agreement with the Creator. It is pre-arranged with us and with the Creator that we will be born into a certain family (family dynamic lessons), live in a certain geographic area (social and economic climate), and join together with other certain individuals for life experience.

All of these conditions are agreed upon for our highest good (the best lessons for each of us, in accordance with what the personality (spirit in person-hood) needs to become the most enriched soul that we can be. We come to the earth and are born into our soul family. We meet others on our life path that are also our soul family and included in that, and not ever separate from that is the experience of joining with a mate. Some people do have an agreement not to mate (priests, nuns, and others with a particularly strong soul mission). However, for most people, there is always a mate.

Someone to teach us, to learn with us, to unite with us, to grow with us, to teach us the most about love that can be learned. To assume that you are excluded from this Divine Plan, is to assume that you have not been included in the plan of the Creator and in your own soul plan. That is just plain silly and dumb. Each of us attracts the mate that suits our development within the framework of time. For example:

When you are sixteen, and socially dimwitted by hormones and emotions and limited life experience, you will join with another human being to learn the most in your development plan as a spirit on the earth. When you are twenty-five (these ages are arbitrary, these are just examples), you will meet with another human being, most likely to pro-generate (have children), who will then be new members of your soul-circle, and will have the genetic make-up to be who they are designed to be by the Creator. This relationship may or may not thrive, depending on the needs of the persons involved on their soul journey.

Let's say then at 34, the relationship falls apart, and you are joined with another human. The journey may include the dynamic of self-expression through work or avocation for the enrichment of the both of you. We are male and female on the earth. The Yin and the Yang.

They go together and compliment each other. It is the natural order of things. When you have reached the point in your personal development of reasonable balance (spiritually, emotionally, physically, and mentally) you are most suited for a successful relationship. Until the time of balance all relationships struggle. Sometimes the balance can be achieved together, in rhythm - thus you have a successful long term relationship. In most cases, however, due to the imbalances of each person, many relationships are destined to end when the journey of learning is complete. You are not excluded from love in your life. Work on achieving healthy attitudes, understanding, rid yourself of jealousy, easily triggered anger, resentment and emotions of revenge. As you are, so you will attract. Patience will give you your mate when your spirit is ready for the next voyage on your life journey. In the meantime, enjoy the relationships that are presented to you without sucking them dry for the need to be in a permanent commitment.

Blessings to you. You will, by the way, meet the next long commitment person about this time next year.

Dear Anna,

So sorry to bother you again, but I really need your help, I have some things that are bothering me: One guy I keep thinking about him, it scares me that I am ugly or something. Sometimes I like to go to school but I don't want anything bad said to me.

This is so stupid and obsessive, but do you still see me playing basketball?

Sometimes I have doubts about things I feel like I just want to give up and quit, sometimes when people tell me things I don't trust them anymore. Things are just going so bad for me. Will things ever change at school for me? Will things get better? I had so much respect for a guy at school, turns out he said something mean about me and I heard it, what's wrong with me did I do something wrong to him am I an evil person? Right now I am trying , struggling with a goal, to accomplish it. Thank you for your time and I will pray for you.

God Bless and Gracias

De Nada:

You know what? High school can literally be the pits. Self-esteem issues, vicious opinions of others, social inequities, attitudes of dysfunction, and the competitive attitude of corporate America all exist within the institution known as high school.

Now, first of all, you are absolutely beautiful - in spirit as well as physically. Somehow in high school boys and girls are walking around with really heavy-duty shades on their eyes. High school people usually cannot see their own beauty, the beauty of health and youth, physical strength and open and expectant minds, so they obviously miss the obvious beauty of others.

Many boys and girls want so much to "belong" that they sacrifice their respect and honor to be a member of a group, to get attention, to get a laugh.

You have suffered from such a numb-minded young man's insult. I apologize for him. Someday, hopefully, he will grow up and will learn that cruel humor is as much of a weapon as a gun. It kills the spirit of others.

I don't like to go where I feel people are talking badly about me or where they don't respect me either.

Sometimes whether I like it or not, I have to go. I pray for the hearts to open, for the minds to be doctored, for the respect and honor of one human being to another to be realized. That is all that I can do. You know what? It works a little better all the time. The advantage that I have over you however, is that I am an adult. I really have more choices over where I show up.

You can and will play basketball. You are in charge of that part of your life. See yourself playing (in your mind), practice every chance you get, and sign up, show up, and play.

High school is the preparation ground for life. It isn't the last chance or the final arena for success. It is where people learn about other people. It is where choices are made as to future goals and life-path.

You are learning what you need to know for future success. You will go to college, and you will see life differently very soon.

You have a boy-friend in your near future, before the end of the school year. Learn there too, not to let him take advantage of you because you feel the "need" to please him, so that you can keep him.

If you let him dominate you, then you will learn a much harder lesson than if you make the decisions about how much of a role this temporary man will play in your life. Keep your head high, your eyes open and your pants on.

You are brilliant and a star. Your gift of music will light up the world. Hang in there kid, high school will eventually be in your past, and you will be a rich survivor.

Dear Anna,

I like you column, I read it every Friday. I like your advice to people. I was wondering if you can help with some of mine? Will me and my ex-boyfriend ever get back together? Will my schooling be good?

Will my auntie be okay and my mother and grandmother, will my dad's side of his family still remember me? Will I ever get money this weekend? Will I get to talk to my ex? Will we get to gather or just talk will my sister come back?

Stressful!

Dear Stressful:

In sequential order I respond: Thank you. Yes I can help you with some advice. You and your ex-boyfriend may "sort-of" get back together, but it will not work out in the long run. He has just broken up with a girl, and like most men, when they do that they look to the past instead of looking to the future. When they hook up with the past, then everybody remembers why it won't work, and then the woman of the future comes in, and Blewy, Cabooey and Bang! He is unfaithful to the woman of his past (you) with the woman of his future (her). Please be smart and avoid this whole scenario by remembering exactly who he is.

Your education is what you make of it. Study hard and you will do well.

Your auntie is doing very well and recovering nicely. Mom and grandmother are fine. Your father's family will finally get over their internal struggle and welcome you into their hearts. It just takes time.

Probably not much money this weekend - you need to wait another week or so. There probably isn't much conversation with your ex this weekend, but you will talk to him and probably see him next week.

You sister will, eventually, come back.

Blessings to you.

OST primary election too close to call

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - With close to 400 challenge votes across the reservation left to be counted or discounted, it is too close to determine who will go into the general election in both the president's and vice president's race. When the unofficial results were tallied primary election night, presidential incumbent Alex White Plume finished with 523, four time president John Steele had 462 and past president Cecelia Fire Thunder had 460.

William "Shorty" Brewer finished with a strong lead for vice president with 896 votes in the unofficial tally Tuesday night. Five votes separate second and third place and the opportunity to move on to the general election; Wayne Weston has 614 and Melanie Two Eagle has 609.

The ballot for OST chief judge was challenged with the election court of appeals and Joe American Horse and Steve Hawk were added; American Horse received 1,191, Lisa Adams 850 and Hawk 833.

Prairie Wind moves opening back cites water and structural problems

By Tom Crash

PINE RIDGE - Originally, the new Prairie Wind Casino was looking at an early August 2006 opening to coincide with the annual Oglala Nation celebration; construction delays moved the opening to Labor Day, then it was moved to no later than Nov. 15th but today a combination of water problems and structural problems have most people involved in the casino construction project looking at mid March as the earliest possible time to open.

"In construction you always have things come up, unplanned problems, delivery delays, employee problems and when you work in South Dakota you have weather problems especially if you are building during the winter season," said Doug O'Bryan, tribal member and local contractor.

There is enough water for the new casino and hotel but it seems that to meet code of 100 psi and to have the required fire protection, the new facility needs to have a new water reservoir and two new booster stations, one at the casino and one half way to Oglala.

"On Monday of this week we received a notice to proceed," said O'Bryan, "booster stations are pre-built but take 16 weeks to deliver from the time of the order and once they are here take a week or two to install, depending on the weather. The reservoir takes six weeks to deliver and another couple of weeks to install, depending on

Rosebud Casino Fuel Plaza celebrates one year of operation

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - There was a definite party atmosphere at the Rosebud Casino Fuel Plaza located 22 miles south of Mission on U.S. Highway 83. The occasion was the one-year anniversary of the Fuel Plaza's opening for business on Sunday, October 1. It is owned and operated by the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

Complimentary hot dogs, individually wrapped buns, cheese hot dogs and soda were the menu of the day, marking the occasion, while tee shirts and caps were available to those who purchased differing amounts of gasoline. In fact, everyone who stopped at the gas pumps also had their windshields cleaned off. A number of customers could be seen purchasing beer also.

The Rosebud Casino Fuel Plaza celebrated its one-year anniversary with free hot dogs and soda. Deejay, Mark Iyotte, play music all day while visitors from various states stopped by. Photo by Beaux Beauvais.

Mark Iyotte of Rosebud was the deejay for the day as he had his sound system set up and a lot of country and western could be heard throughout the parking area. Travelers from such diverse places as Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Colorado could be seen, according to Iyotte, as well as local traffic from the Sicangu Nation and Nebraska.

Ron Andress, a FEDEX agent from Ainsworth, NEB, regularly stops at the Rosebud Casino and the Fuel Plaza in the course of his work. He said, "I come to play Blackjack often. The prices are competitive. I come by from Tuesday through Friday." He also noted that he had won a drawing for $25.00 a number of times over the duration in which he has been stopping by. A customer had to purchase a set amount of gasoline in order to be registered for the drawing.

Earl Bordeaux, Jr. former RST council representative who resides in Antelope community was shopping in the Fuel Plaza convenience store with his family. He said, "This one year celebration is good. It is Lakota owned and that is good."

Kenny Prue, also of Antelope community had hitched a ride and was waiting for a free hot dog and soda. He said he would catch another ride on home. Eustace Night Shield, Principal at Spring Creek elementary was seen with not one, but two hot dogs while he and his wife enjoyed the celebration. Rosie Bad Hand of Two Strike was also enjoying the occasion with her family. She said in Lakota, "Ake' wol yahi?" Did you come to eat again?

Rosebud Casino Manager, Chris Bussey and his girlfriend were also seen visiting amongst the crowd. His office oversees the operation of the Fuel Plaza and he has a vested interest in its successful operation.

Fuel Plaza manager, Emma Michalek, a Sicangu tribal member was able to sit for a brief interview about the one year anniversary sale and celebration.

She has been the manager at the Fuel Plaza since January and comes with management experience from the Corner Market in Valentine and customer service experience at the Rosebud Casino.

Three hundred hot dogs had been ordered, but were all given out by 2:30 p.m. and more had to be purchased in Valentine as the event was scheduled to go until 4:00 p.m. Michalek says her goals are to see the fuel plaza profitable and to treat customers with respect. She said, "When I was hired, there was a lot that had to be done. There was no accountability. We promoted ourselves as a truck stop, but there wasn't anything in the lounge." She proceeded to furnish the lounge and to create a floor plan for the store that was more customer friendly.

She concluded by saying that the Fuel Plaza is perfecting its purchasing regimen in order to keep the shelves adequately stocked, as well as finalizing its capability to process E.B.T. cards for food items.

The Fuel Plaza is located 12 miles north of Valentine, NEB and is strategically located just north of the Sicangu Village housing area. Located a couple of miles away, it is within walking distance during nice weather and the store is able to serve the shopping needs of those Sicangu tribal members.

The Fuel Plaza as a tribal business is located in a strategic location along Highway 83 and sports a large clean space for truckers to park their rigs.

The Fuel Plaza falls under the supervision of the Rosebud Casino, administratively and provides regular reports to the RST tribal council as to profit and loss margins and performance.

the weather."

There doesn't appear to be the same clarity with the structural problems facing the new hotel and possibly casino. Different people describe a bulge just inside the door that has caused a window to bow out almost a inch and some cracks in the sheetrock.

"There is a clay in the soil underneath the new construction and you work really hard to keep moisture out during construction but sometimes you may even have a bit of vapor and it causes problems and especially when you build in the winter it makes it a real challenge - I don't see any of this as insurmountable, it is definitely fixable and shouldn't hold things up too much," said O'Bryan.

"We had the construction company put some engineered fill in between the clay and the foundation so that should have provided some give if there was any moisture," said Walt Big Crow, council representative from Wakpamni district, "right now the council has a construction audit firm, McGovern Greene, at the site to review all of the construction and how it relates to the blueprints and construction plans and schedules and looking at any cost cutting moves and any change orders. They hope to give us a report by the middle of next week with an action plan to follow."

"On Monday of this week we received a notice to proceed," said O'Bryan,

Peska Construction has brought engineers out to the site earlier this week and Lenart Brown Eyes, OST construction manager has brought in his own engineer as well.

According to those involved in the project, Peska said last week that the casino would be done at the end of October and that the hotel will be structurally done soon after but will still need the installation of fixtures and furniture, both structures will need the added water system to be completed before actual completion.

Construction of the new Prairie Wind Casino and hotel was made possible by a $20 million loan from the Shakopee Mdewankaton Sioux Community in Minnesota.

Currently the casino employs 204 people, the new casino and hotel will employ 30-40 additional workers.

Restraining order to keep Wagner Indian Health Service clinic open

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

SIOUX FALLS - On Thursday, Sept. 28, U. S. District Judge Lawrence Piersol issued a restraining order granting a restraining order that will keep the Wagner Indian Health Clinic open.

The suit filed by Yankton Sioux Tribe general counsel, Charles Abourezk, on behalf of the tribe cites the 1851 and 1868 Ft. Laramie Treaties and other statutes. He said, "Essentially, the judge's ruling is based upon federal statute, regulations and policy, U. S. C. 1631 b1. It requires an impact study. It is also based upon prior allegations of the lack of consultation with the tribe."

The original plan was to close the emergency room portion on Saturday night, as the Indian Health Service and other officials wanted to change it to an urgent care facility which would have also reduced the number of hours that it would remain open.

Abourezk said, "The goal is to keep it open. There is a study being conducted by the I.H.S. called the "Sharpless Study" which shows that tribal members will die if the emergency room closes."

Abourezk as general counsel for the YST filed legal action in 1994 and was able to assist in keeping the clinic open and this recent action is a part of that continuing effort. Over the years, a number of proposed deadlines to close the emergency have been overturned.

Apparently, the local Wagner Community Hospital is unable to adequately accommodate the emergency needs of tribal members if the clinic had closed.

Abourezk said of the latest ruling, "This is part of the ongoing effort to maintain a level of health care and education support at a time when the Bush administration is dismantling the part of the federal government that serves Indian people."

If the federal government does not comply with the restraining order, Judge Piersol said that a contempt of court hearing would be held. Senator Tim Johnson and Senator John Thune have co-sponsored legislation to fund the emergency room at the Wagner clinic at a requested level of $500,000.

Nearly 10,000 empty FEMA trailers are freed up, some will come to Indian country

HOPE, Ark. (AP) _ Nearly 10,000 emergency housing trailers that were intended to be sent to the Gulf Coast to help Hurricane Katrina victims have been freed up for other uses.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency parked the trailers at Hope Municipal Airport in the months following the hurricane. The agency came under criticism when the trailers sat empty.

FEMA officials said that regulations against placing the homes in flood plains prevented their use on the Gulf Coast.

On Friday, Congress approved a homeland security spending bill that included a provision allowing FEMA to sell or donate the trailers to municipalities, nonprofit groups or American Indian tribes.

Sen. Mark Pryor, D-Ark., said he would prefer that the homes had gone to hurricane victims as originally intended, but selling or donating them to cities or community groups was better than letting them sit unused.

``Allowing the homes to sit and deteriorate at the airport is an abuse of taxpayer funding and should not be an option," Pryor said in a statement.

Pryor and Rep. Mike Ross, D-Ark., sponsored the measures in their respective chambers before the provision went to a conference committee. Sen. Tim Johnson, D-S.D., added the option to convey the trailers to Indian tribes to house the homeless.

``I am proud that the 9,778 fully furnished manufactured homes sitting in Hope, Arkansas, may finally be put to good use," Ross said. ``These are the kind of commonsense solutions the American taxpayers expect and deserve."

FEMA was directed to work with the Department of Interior to transfer the trailers to tribes, depending on need.

Indian housing has been a problem for decades. According to a 2003 survey, an estimated 200,000 housing units are needed immediately in Indian country and approximately 90,000 Indian families are homeless or ``underhoused."

The Homeland Security Department's inspector general has said that U.S. taxpayers could be stuck with a maintenance bill of nearly $47 million a year for thousands of trailers that sit parked at sites around the country.

"The goal is make lemonade out of lemons. FEMA has trailers they can't use in the hurricane affected region, and Indian Country is in desperate need of housing," Johnson said. "FEMA said their hands were tied by red tape and this provision undoes the knot."

"While these trailers are not ideal housing, they fill a need and give people a place to hang their hat" Johnson continued.

"This only begins to make a dent in housing problems in Indian Country. I will continue to work to find ways to help families in need find homes across South Dakota and I hope that this is a first step toward addressing the housing needs in Indian Country."

Okreek man gets 46 months for causing fatal accident

PIERRE(AP) - An Okreek man will serve nearly four years in prison for causing an accident that killed a man.

Chester Jason Stoneman Jr., 31, earlier pleaded guilty in U.S. District Court in Pierre to involuntary manslaughter.

He was driving on the Rosebud Indian Reservation in December when he crashed. The accident killed Brandon William White Hawk of Rosebud, according to court documents.

Besides serving 46 months in prison, Stoneman must also pay $673 in restitution.

Our Views

Happy Birthday to "US" the Lakota Country Times

It seems like only yesterday that we celebrated one year of operation. Our two-year milestone just sort of snuck up on us and we didn't get to announce that fact to our readers.

This week announces our second year birthday on Oct. 4 with Volume III, Issue 1.

Our journey has been somewhat 'bittersweet' as the market for Native news seems crowded at times as we all vie for the same advertisement dollars.

We have endeavored to bring the news into as many Lakota homes as possible with as much energy and commitment as we are able to muster.

Our primary target area has been the Oglala Lakota Nation and our neighbors, the Sicangu Lakota Nation.

We continue to grow in circulation and in this last year, we have added our online edition that highlights stories of our area. We will continue to work on the development of the site to be a Lakota news center.

As Connie Blanco, our Business Manager and Graphic Design/Production Department says, "it takes baby steps to grow."

She has been a mainstay at the paper for the past year.

Our philosophy has been to deliver the news in a professional manner, while invoking a philosophy that is imbedded in the spirit of the Lakota.

We certainly admit to making mistakes here and there, but if we were perfect we probably wouldn't be in the journalism business.

Human nature, changing circumstance and the fabric of Lakota society is forever evolving and we work very hard to translate that into up-to-date news that will impact our people, all the while making a positive difference in their tiospaye.

We will continue to serve our primary target area, while providing culturally-relevant materials and literacy materials to our schools which will serve to enhance their efforts at language and cultural preservation.

The Lakol wicohan or Lakota way as described by Dr. Archie Beauvais in his column is often heard in a song that says "Lakol wicohan ki tewahila ca winyuskinya waci wauwe."

The singer is saying that he values the Lakota way of life and he is dancing this way, happily.

It is in that vain that we often approach our work in bringing culturally connected news to our immediate area and the outer lying areas of mainstream America.

We value all of our readers and will continue to bring you news and feature stories that continually integrate lessons, thoughts, and perspectives of the Lakota oyate and news that impacts your family.

We do that happily as we keep grounded in the profound nature that resides in the Lakota way.

Finally, we are able to translate Lakota and English back and forth and that is a feature which allows us to successfully integrate that into our work.

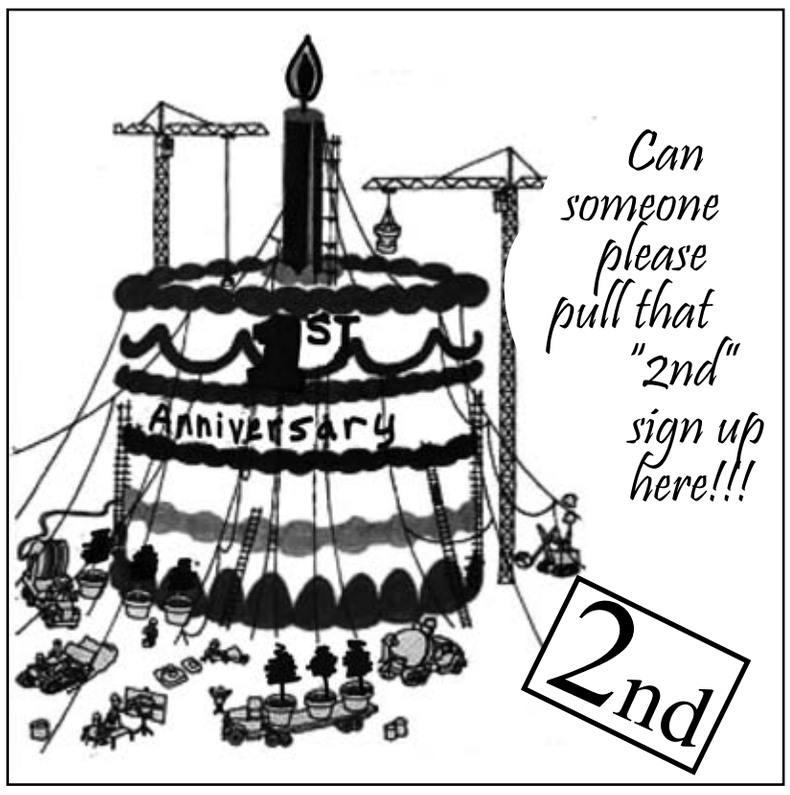
Of course, we have to express our deep appreciation for those wonderful Lakota speakers who have assisted at times. Friends such as the late John Around Him, also Rev. Francis Apple, Albert White Hat, Sr., Pat Bad Hand, Archie Little, Ned Metcalf, the late Calvin Jumping Bull to name but a few have been invaluable in their published materials and occasional advice on proper Lakota.

We appreciate our past employees who contributed their part, even the littliest contribution, still they were a part of helping us grow, Larry Pourier, Nanette Kills In Water, Carrie Red Owl, Ernestine Chasing Hawk, Tish Shangreaux, Jason Wolters, Jackie Jordan, the late Monte Ecoffey, Billy Dubray, Wallace White Dress, and Albert Apple. Brooke Dean is invaluable.

We thank our contributers Dr. Archie Beauvais who brings us that Sicangu news; Tom Crash, who is our sports connection and tribal government writer, Jerry Matthews of Double M Photography, who graciously serves the schools in photogrpahy and lends us his photos; Anne Bee, our reader's favorite columnist; Patty Pourier who writes of emotional healing and Ivan Star, who gives our readers a different view of current issues, and Tim Giago who kindly lends us his syndicated column.

The staff at Lakota Country Times really appreciate the help of Lakota Funds and all the expertise they have given us.

Last, but certainly not least, we have a need to express our sincere gratitude to those advertisers who have entrusted their message to us.



We have represented them to the best of our ability and will continue to do so in a conscientious and courteous manner.

The business relationships which we have carefully nurtured and crafted have been mutually beneficial.

We are thankful for those partners who support Lakota owned and operated small business.

We say, "Lela pilaunyanpi. Wowapi le Lakol wicohan unkiseya teunhilapi." We also treasure the Lakota way.

Indian Healthcare Improvement Act did NOT Pass Internet Gaming Bill passed

Dear Editor and tribal leaders:

When Congress is in session into the wee hours of the night and is hurrying to adjourn, that is the time we must be most watchful. And, sure enough: we lost on two key issues. Like Tim Wapato says, "The Whiteman never sleeps, we must be on guard!"

In the Senate, it takes just one senator to place a hold on a Bill. Sen. Sessions (R-AL) and Sen. Coburn (R-OK) both placed a hold on our Indian Healthcare Improvement Act. At the last minute, Senator McCain, Sen. Burns and Sen. Enzi conducted an intense lobbying effort, but Sessions and Coburn refused to lift their hold. Appreciation to Sen. McCain: Phone: 202-224-2309 or 202-224-2235, Fax; 202-224-5429

In a surprise move, the Department of Justice raised last minute objections to Indian healthcare improvement act and Sen. Sessions used the objections to sink the bill!

Gordon Belcourt from Rocky Mt. Tribes and myself from the Great Plains Tribes made last minute attempts to reach tribes in Oklahoma and elsewhere to get to Coburn to lift his HOLD, but all Tribal Offices were closed for the day. The Senate was still in session late on Friday, Sept. 29, 2006.

Please tell Sen. Sessions and Sen. Coburn how disappointed you are in their action: Sen. Sessions: Phone #202-224-4124, Fax # 202-224-3149 Sen. Coburn: Phone #202-224-5754, Fax # 202-224-6008

On another issue: Sen. Kyl (R-Ariz.) was successful in attaching his Internet Gaming Bill to the Ports Security Bill which passed. Indian Gaming Tribes must review the language, which if not correct, could severely impact the revenue numbers under Gaming Compacts.

Things to empower yourself

Denial- it's not a river in Egypt

By Patty Pourier

Addiction has been in the media a long time. But since the decade of free love and drugs, it has been more prevalent.

Hollywood has been comfortable with addiction. Maybe because of the loose life styles like Marilyn Monroe's, and Elizabeth Taylor's.

But in the past 30 years, recovery from addition has hit the big screen as well.

In this millennium, Shark Tales, the animated movie, talks about a treatment program. Nemo- the orange animated fish speaks about alcoholism and a 12-step program.

Then the 90s brought us "28 Days", a story of a woman played by Sandra Bullock that was in treatment for chemical dependency.

In the 80s a movie titled "Stuart Fix The Family," was based on co-dependency and recovery.

Washington has followed suit. We have the generations of Kennedy's that have had their addictive behavior and consequences thereof, on the 6 o'clock news for going on five decades now.

Then Betty Ford came out of the closet, so to speak, and was a confessed recovering alcoholic. Nancy Reagan toted "Just Say No" to drugs while living in total denial of what was happening in her own family with her daughter smoking dope regularly.

Denial is a defense that is used so the person can continue the dysfunctional behavior.

The thing about denial is it is a behavior that works to keep problems at bay for a while.

A person who is alcoholic, denies the fact they drink too much, they drink out of control and will deny they have a drinking problem at all, for a long time.

Many will deny alcoholism and lose their job, their family, their bank account, their respect, and their health, and continue to deny that drinking has anything to do with it.

The fact is, people who have addictive personalities, use denial when uncomfortable stuff comes up, to keep in their own comfort zone.

The first defense that is addressed in recovery of dysfunctional behavior is denial. It is the first of the twelve steps of a recovery program.

It goes like this, " Step one-We admitted we were powerless over ___-that our lives had become unmanageable." With alcohol the blank would be filled in with "alcohol". If you were married to an alcoholic, making you co-dependant or co-alcoholic, the blank would be filled in with "the alcoholic", for food disorders, the blank would be "food".

That is why being around an alcoholic seems so crazy.

Stuff goes on right in front of you and they deny it is happening.

It is referred to in recovery circles as the pink elephant in the living room. Every one walks around it, cleans up after it, and denies it is there -- all at the same time. Crazy isn't it.

Bob Woodwords new book "The State of Denial" is probably not a big "AH HA!" to many Americans.

I mean, lets face it, George W. confesses putting the plug in the jug decades ago when Laura gave him the ultimatum, "Me or the booze."

However, both George W. and Laura have lived in complete denial of the dysfunctional behaviors and defenses that go along with the disease of alcoholism.

And when a person is suffering from the disease of alcoholism, defenses like denial, are part of the tools one uses to cope on a daily basis.

These defenses become habits and are used to cope with all kinds of problems.

Not just problems around drinking. It is a coping tool used for survival.

George W. continues to use denial on national and international proportions.

Right down to losing our sons and daughters to war in Iraq.

I only hope and pray we can find leaders that are not as dysfunctional as our President and First Lady -the next time around.

It is in our hands to get out and vote for healthy people in our elections.

November 7 is an important day. For state and for Oglala Sioux Tribe.

Do your part and vote for people living healthy functional life styles, if you can find any on your ballot.

Lakol wicohan ties us to Lakota country

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

As I journey in this last trimester of life, it occasionally dawns on me that are still many ways in which the Lakota life is evident today. The term "Lakol wicohan" is one that comes to mind that describes the unique traditional ways of the people. The term is often heard in traditional Lakota songs and prayers that are offered.

In a day and age when a decreasing number of elders are regularly seen at cultural and social gatherings, we all have a responsibility to maintain the evidence of the beautiful Lakota culture. We need to do what we can to keep in the forefront and demonstrate to the kids what we know as we pass it on. Some now days are obviously more versed in language and culture than some of us, but the rest of us may have some skill where we can also contribute a little something.

I often get positive comments as I work to analyze Lakota and explain its development. Sometimes my particular brand of spelling is based on the way I hear Lakota and I am thankful when someone points out that it was off the mark. The late John Around Him wouldn't tell me directly that my writing made me sound like a 'D" speaker, but he did tell Amanda who passed it on to me. I would sometimes use a 'd' in a word and it is one that is not found in Lakota.

My cousin, Ned Metcalf, once teased me about being highly educated and yet, a writer.

However, he did like my attempt to at least devote some time to writing about the Lakota language and that was encouraging. Writing is a natural part of being an educator, like me, and it is a skill that can only be developed through practice daily.

My target goal is to write a text on some aspect of Lakota life, but I'm still waiting for inspiration from 'wankatuya' or from way above the earth where 'tunkasila' resides.

I have one advantage over other writers who sit in some ivory tower and write about Lakota life and promote their career; I was born and raised here and my career isn't going anywhere, but I can legitimately write about Lakota people in an authentic way as I understand the form and function of the language.

I chat with others from time to time on language and it adds to my overall understanding as I learn something new almost daily about Lakota. Pat Bad Hand told me a couple of days ago that he and "Chris" had broken down the term 'na sula' which means 'brain' in Lakota. He said they decided that it could mean 'to give a seed.' It makes sense, because as Lakota people who first created the word in the beginning of time, may have labeled the sharing of thoughts and words as a 'seed' which is shared and which germinates in the young.

As an attentive and advanced student of Lakota, I told Pat I need to sit down with him and do that kind of word analysis and put it out there to the people. It something that should be done in the schools, but probably is not because there is no time beyond the basic lesson.

There are still some very articulate and wonderful Lakota speakers, but their knowledge must be captured in print or audio form for safekeeping for future generations. I plan to do some of that, as the Lakota language is very special. Some will say "Lakol wicohan lela tewahila" which literally means that one 'holds the Lakota teaching and way of life in a treasured way.'

I was at a wake the other night for a relative and the first night's wake saw mostly young people and I marveled at the absence of adults. I was struck, however, by a number of young Lakota middle school students who were practicing a Lakota traditional song in the bathroom.

At first, the young women's singing seemed out of place, but as time went by I realized that their efforts to learn and preserve a song is something we want. I was quite impressed as the young ladies sang the song the next night in front of a much larger crowd as they served as the 'wica glata' for the Red Leaf singers.

I have to applaud my friend, Pat and Dorothy LeBeau for their interest in the Lakota language.

Pat says he always reads my column, especially when promoting the language. He said he has often used Lakota incorrectly over his lifetime and sometimes will get a chuckle when mis-used.

This will be a test to see if Pat really is one of loyal readers. His wife, Dorothy, has had a lifelong interest in the language also and knows its place in the lives of our Lakota children.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Notes From Indian Country

Unraveling the source of domestic violence in Indian country

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

A recent news series by Jodi Rave, an American Indian writer for the Lee Enterprises newspaper group, has focused on violence against Indian women, and rightfully so. The series includes a number of interviews with women that have been abused or comments from those women involved in programs intended to address this most serious issue.

But what the series does not address are the possible reasons behind this abuse and it also lacks comments from Indian men working to address the same issues, nor does it include interviews with men who stand accused as abusers.

As a Lakota man now in his seventh decade, one that has been an observer of Indian people and issues as a journalist for more than 40 years, I would like to expand upon the series of articles by Ms. Rave, but from an Indian male perspective. As one might not gather from the series, most of us are not women abusers or wife beaters.

For the past 40 years I have employed Indian people, both men and women. I employed them in a coffee and donut shop I owned when I was young and I have employed them for the many jobs it takes to publish a weekly newspaper over the past 26 years.

I didn't keep statistics, but I did make certain observations simply because of the number of women I had in my employ. Yes, I did have women employees that lived in an abusive atmosphere. When they came to work wearing dark glasses to cover the bruises around their eyes I often sat them down and talked to them.

Now mind you, in nearly every case, these female employees of mine were the breadwinners. They were the ones who held the jobs and brought home the paycheck. Their husbands or significant others were the stay-at-homes who did nothing to help support their family.

Much of the abuse usually happened right after a payday. The working women go out with their husbands or boyfriends to a local watering hole to unwind, which of course means getting drunk.

At some point in the evening the woman realizes her kids are home alone and she has to get home to carry out her duties as a mother.

If her spouse or boyfriend has not confiscated her paycheck by then, her attempt at leaving the party seems to be reason enough for him to make a grab at getting the money from her purse so that he can continue to party.

When the women come to work the next day broke and bruised, I always talked to them. "Why are you letting this bum live off of you? You are a good and decent woman and yet you have this terrible guy living in your house with your children taking your paycheck every week and blowing it on booze while you and your children go without? Why are you letting this happen?"

The stock answer usually is, "But I love him."

And the fact that she loves him allows this man to continue to beat her up, take her weekly paycheck, abuse her children and leave her on the fringes of extreme poverty.

Historically, when Indians were forced to settle on small reservations, the Indian male was stripped of his weapons which kept him from doing the one job that made him a man; feeding and supporting his family. While many Indian women found jobs with the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Indian hospital, the schools or with the tribal government, most Indian males found themselves without jobs. Unemployment on many Indian reservations to this day exceeds 50 percent.

When an Indian male discovered that he could no longer assume his role as leader and provider for his family he felt totally emasculated. This loss of self-esteem and self-confidence caused many men to turn toward substances like alcohol and drugs to help them forget and to help them cope.

Too often this culminated in the man striking out at the one object he loved, his spouse or girl friend. The hurt he felt within himself often manifested itself in violence against others, especially against someone near to him.

Stripped of his ability to provide for his family through the hunt, an activity that was as much spiritual as economical, and denied the opportunity to find gainful employment, many Lakota men retreated within themselves boiling with an anger even they did not understand.

And then came the horrific time when Indian men and women were forcefully taken from their homes and placed into boarding schools where they were physically, emotionally, and oftentimes sexually abused by their well-intentioned keepers.

How much of the abuse we see today in Indian families is a harbinger of those horrible days spent at Indian missions and Bureau of Indian Affairs boarding schools has never been researched in-depth. But from my personal perspective, I think many of today's problems of alcoholism, drug abuse, and spousal abuse involving both men and women; can be traced back to those days.

I encourage Jodi Rave to continue her articles on this very touchy subject, but I would also advise her to use the deep pockets of her news organization to further research this topic by including the harm caused by the boarding school experience.

Too often all of the blame falls upon the shoulders of the Indian male and if this is the case, the reasons this happens should also be a part of the topic. After all, it is impossible to find a cure if one does not know the source of the problem.

A column for and about women veterans

(This month's column features Michael Dennis MA, Clinical Psychology Intern at VA Black Hills Health Care System, as a guest contributor responding to reader's questions.)

Dear SAS:

I just returned from Pierre, S.D. where there was a dedication ceremony for the Vietnam War Memorial. It was an exciting time, but I also felt grief. I have had a hard time sleeping since I got home. I remember the sound of the helicopters. My dreams have not been good dreams. The celebration was a happy time, but now I am feeling tired and sad. How long will this last?

Dear reader:

Based on your letter, it sounds like you have been experiencing mixed emotions about the dedication ceremony for the Vietnam War Memorial.

You mentioned that it was an exciting and happy time, yet you also felt grief, had difficulty sleeping, had troubling dreams, and have had troubling thoughts of the sound of helicopters.

There are a variety of explanations for what you are experiencing, and there are no easy answers.

Perhaps in the past you were exposed to traumatic events that involved actual or threatened death or serious injury, or a threat to the physical integrity of yourself or others. You may have felt intense fear, helplessness, or horror. After exposure to distressing events like this, people may have a difficult time remembering important parts of these events, may feel numb, or may feel like they are in a daze.

People may also experience troubling thoughts, images, of the event. They may have dreams of the event, a sense of reliving the experience, or distress on exposure to reminders of the traumatic event.

Based on what you are describing, it sounds like you may be experiencing distress after the dedication ceremony because you were reminded of your war time experience. While I do not know the details of your past experiences in the service, your attendance at the dedication ceremony may have triggered thoughts about a service experience(s) that you had in which you were overwhelmed with intense fear, helplessness, or horror. In such situations it is typical for individuals to experience symptoms of anxiety or nervousness, such as: Difficulty sleeping, irritability, poor concentration, being easily startled, and restlessness.

Often times, people feel like avoiding reminders that bring back troubling memories of past events. Thoughts, feelings, conversations, places, activities, and people are sometimes avoided. Relationships with family, friends, and co-workers may also become strained.

It is difficult to estimate how long you may experience these symptoms. These upsetting thoughts, feelings, and dreams may fade. If the troubling symptom(s) lasts for longer than four to six weeks, it may be helpful to contact a mental health professional. In the mean time, it may be helpful to stick with your normal routine of activities in the following ways: Trying to stay in contact with family, friends, and co-workers; and maintaining your schedules, such as eating, sleeping, and leisure activities. If you so choose, following a spiritual path through prayer or meditation may also be helpful in relieving these thoughts and feelings. If you are able, communicating with others you trust about what you are feeling may also prove effective. Exercise and relaxation training may also be helpful in coping; however, be sure to consult a physician before doing so.

It is also important to avoid pushing down these negative thoughts and feelings by following a destructive path, such as abusing alcohol or other substances.

Having said all that, it is also important to be mindful of the statement that you made about the Vietnam War Memorial Dedication being a "happy" and "exciting" experience. Crises can provide opportunities for growth. If you have not dealt with thoughts and emotions that you have had about your service, now may be the time to sort those out. You may now be to the point where you can make more peace with your experiences.

For all women veterans: There are many places to get help with problems, or to socialize with other women veterans. Contact your nearest VA community outreach clinic, Vet Center, or VA facility for more information. Some avenues available to women in Western South Dakota include women veteran support groups at Rapid City Vet Center and VA Hot Springs, SD. The Substance Use PTSD treatment (SUPT) program offers a semi-annual retreat for women veterans and spouses of veterans.

Also, the Women Veterans of the Black Hills meets four times a year for luncheons throughout the Black Hills. And, at each VA there is also a committee that can provide information about health/wellness services for women veterans. For more information, contact the contributors listed below.

If you have a question, please write a letter to one of the following individuals:

Dr. Sally Weyer at the VA Black Hills Health Care System, 3625 5th St., Rapid City, SD 57701

Arvine Standing Elk at the Martin Vet Center, PO Box 910, Martin, SD 57551

John will be missed

Dear Editor:

Which issue of Lakota Country Times would have the information of the passing of John Around Him.

He was a great man and will be missed by us at Oxford federal prison.

We would like to share this information with our Native American men here.

ESPAGE VOICE

Our youth have to acknowledge their history and only then, can they move on… in freedom

Special to the Times

I went to a traditional powwow, in Morton, Minn., during the Labor Day weekend. The master of ceremonies was an associate professor from Western State University.

His Dakota name is Ed Hdi Nazin (Stands in His Place). His English surname was Cavender; it is now Dr. Chris Mato Nunpa (Two Bear).

It was one of his relatives, a Mdewakanton elder by the name of Two Bear, who started this particular celebration many years ago.

The older man wanted to remember the warriors that fought in a battle that occurred in 1863 at the current powwow sight.

His dream is now an annual powwow commemorating the heroes who fought in the Birch Coulee Battle.

The oral Dakota accounts of the fight are candid and more truthful telling of a noble struggle.

The Dakota fought to preserve their way of life and their lands. Some of those warriors stood with the 38 executed at Mankato (Maka To) in what became the largest mass execution in United States history.

The biased newspaper accounts of the time did not consider the Dakota side. Instead, the fiery reports promoted resentment among the settlers.

They overlooked the fact that the Dakota resided in that area since the 1500s. The Dakota people were indignant when the newcomers began claiming their lands and treating them like animals.

By this time, the media had stirred up an incredible amount of public hostility toward the Dakota. In the public eye, they were the "savages" and "heathens" who will kill you rather than talk to you.

Local towns as well as the state offered rewards for dead "Indians."

In the Thursday, Sept. 24, 1863 issue of the Daily Republican, a Winona, Minn. newspaper, an ad announced the state's reward increase to $200 "for every red-skin sent to Purgatory."

The article further stated that this sum was worth more than all the dead Indians east of the Red River.

All of this occurred during an event called the "Minnesota Uprising". Actually, it was a war, not a civil disobedience, as suggested by the newspapers.

It began in mid-August 1862 and ended on September 26, 1862.

The Birch Coulee fight took place on Aug. 24.

How did all this begin? Let me begin with their first treaty signed in 1805 where the Dakota granted full US sovereign jurisdiction to 100,000 acres in what is now the Twins Cities area.

The federal government agreed to pay 2 cents per acre or "deliver the value thereof in goods and merchandise. The Dakota retained hunting rights in the area.

In 1837, another treaty relinquished 35 million more acres east of the Mississippi River in southern Minnesota. This piece of real estate was ceded for about 8 cents per acre.

Compensation for the land went from the Indian Agent directly to local storeowners to pay off bills. The money never reached the Dakota.

In 1851, the Mendota and Traverse De Sioux Treaties forced the reluctant Dakota to cede more of their ancestral lands, about 24 millions acres.

This left them a narrow strip of land, about ten miles on either side of the Minnesota River.

In 1858, the Dakota were again forced to give up more land, the southern half of the narrow reservation straddling the Minnesota River. The tension between the settlers and the Dakota reached a volatile level.

Although many Dakota were willing to adopt the new ways, they had to cope with many overwhelming obstacles.

The weight of a succession of injustices inflicted by traders, settlers, and local federal government agents had become painfully intolerable. For instance, when a group returned from their annual hunting excursion to the Great Plains in the summer of 1862, they found their village burned to the ground.

Most of the Dakota had lost their previous year's corn crop to an insect infestation and had survived a long hard winter. With the depletion of their natural game and the failed crops, Mdewakanton leaders knew their people were facing starvation in the approaching winter months.

Government Agents at the Redwood River (Lower Sioux) and Yellow Medicine River (Upper Sioux) agencies continued to deny the Dakota access to their treaty rations under the guise of pending authorization from Washington.

They were partial to the "cut hairs" - those who had taken up farming - while denying assistance to the "blanket Indians".

The Dakota, now utterly exasperated, stormed a government warehouse and took their food supplies.

The military were promptly notified and a confrontation ensued. Taoyate Duta (His Red Nation) also known as Little Crow, attempted to mediate the extremely explosive situation. A bitter insult by one of the White traders ended the negotiations.

An interpreter translated the trader's words from English to Dakota, "If they're hungry, let them eat grass." The so-called Minnesota Uprising had begun.

After the deadly melee, the trader who infuriated the Dakota with his antagonizing retort lay among the dead with grass stuffed into his mouth.

Many of the Dakota, refusing to fight, chose to help hundreds of settlers to escape; hundreds of settlers fled the area fearing for their lives.

Many other Dakota, seeing the futility of the war, left the state for their own safety.

When it was over, thousands were imprisoned. The entire Dakota nation was in exile.

A large group, after surviving interment at Ft. Snelling, was transported via riverboat to Davenport, Iowa and then to the present-day Crow Creek Indian Reserva-tion in May 1863.

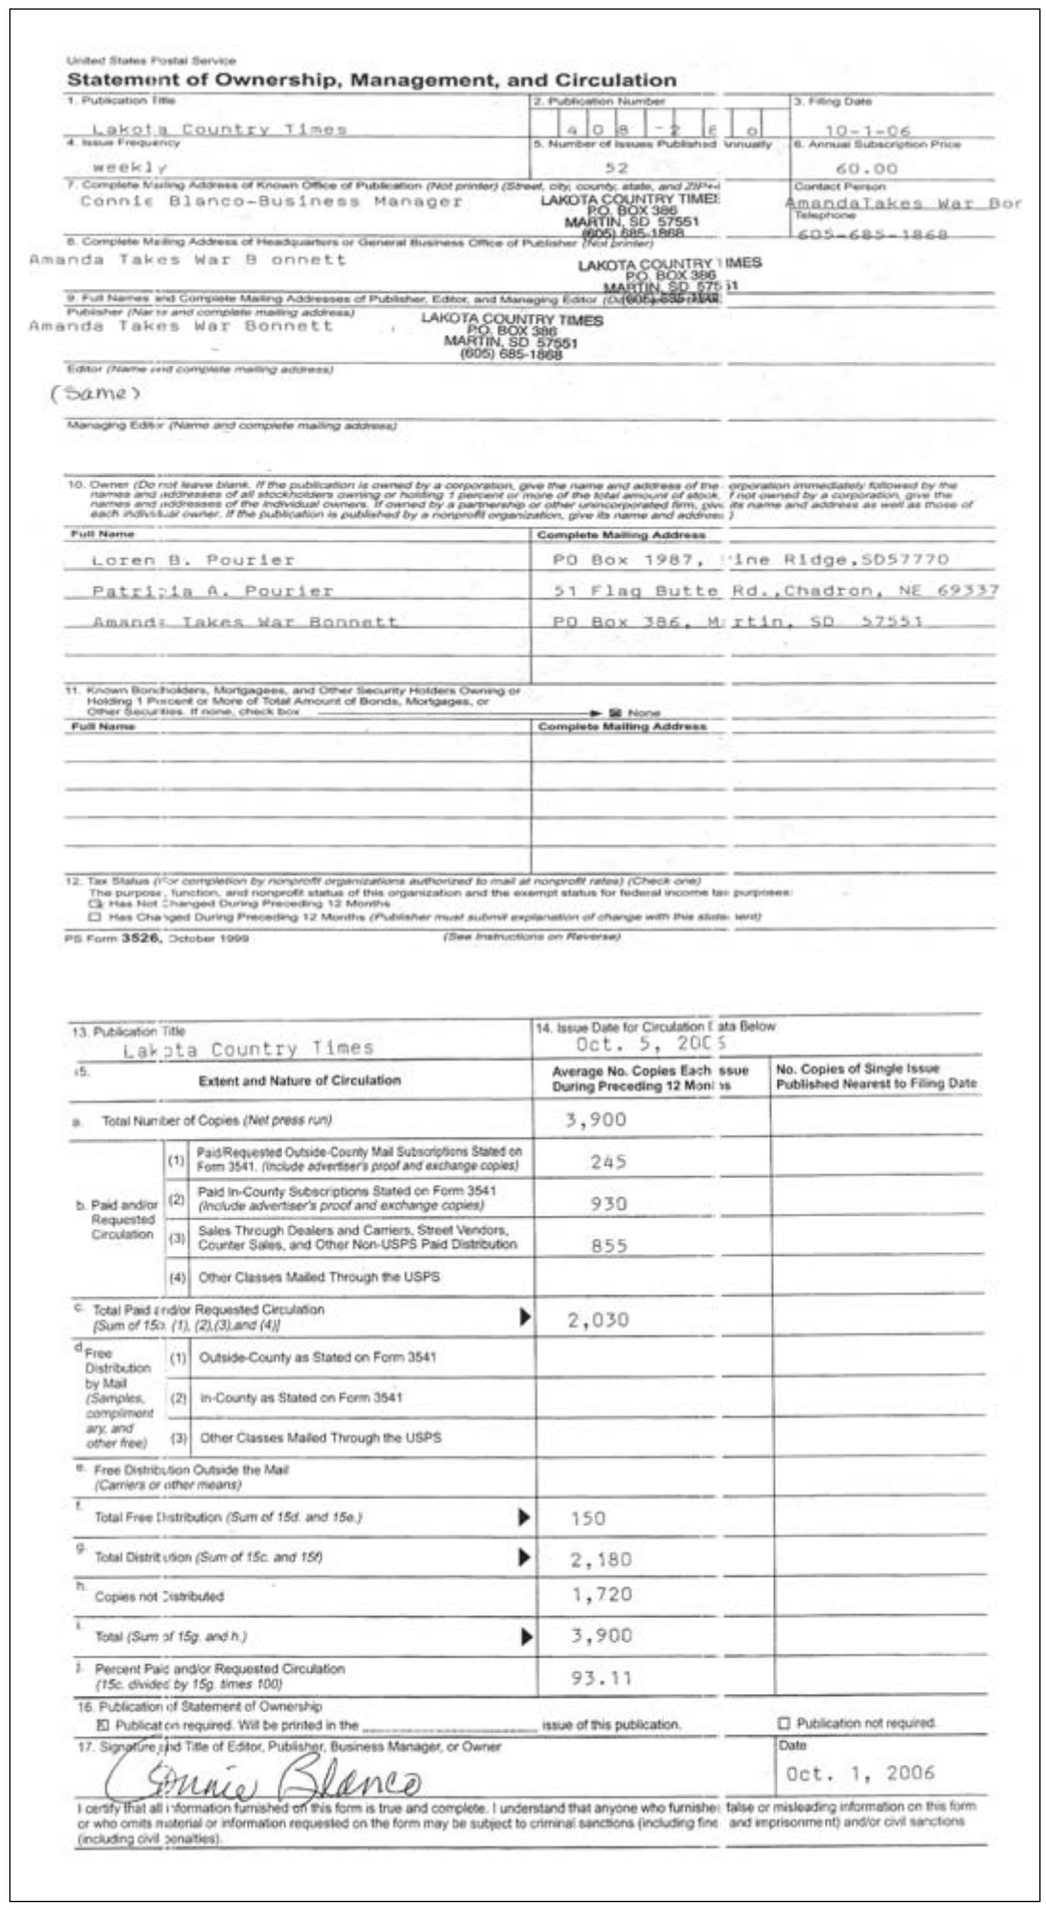
Many died on the way and many more died after arriving at their destination.

Missionaries devoted themselves to the welfare of the imprisoned Dakota. However, the continued vindictiveness of the White populace hindered them. The hate directed indiscriminately at the Dakota also fell on them; they did not share the majority view. An angry group attacked one such sympathizer and beat him nearly to death.

These priests, like Rev. Steven R. Riggs, were denounced as "avaricious priests," "contemptible fools," and "cold-hearted scoundrels" when it was rumored that they convinced the president to stay the execution of some of the condemned Dakota prisoners.

A large population of Minnesotans outright condemned even Bishop Henry Whipple, a highly respected clergyman, for his frequent public calls for moderation and clemency.

Now, one may be wondering why I am writing about an ugly piece of American history, which has done fine right where it was, on an obscure closet shelf collecting dust.



My effort here is to help counter the established practice of concealing certain historical events from the public, especially those dealing with Native America.

By exposing these truths of our history, our youth will acquire the opportunity to become more productive in modern society.

Our youth have to confront and acknowledge their people's history because it is the truth, then, and only then, can they move on… in freedom.

MARTIN/PINE RIDGE - Down 20-6 at halftime Friday night in Martin against Bennett County, Little Wound came storming back to score 28 unanswered second half points to beat the Warriors 34-20 in a key West River Conference game.

"Our players seemed to be putting more energy into complaining about the refs," said Darrel Hunter, head coach, "but when we opened up the second half by stopping their kick-off runback deep in their territory and then stopping them in their end zone for a safety, it seemed to fire everyone up and we started playing the way I know they can."

Austin Haynes, Bennett County's 5'10", 135 pound freshman quarterback, completed three touchdown passes in the first half, two to Andrew Olson of six and 40 yards and an 18 yarder to DJ Toczek to give the Warriors a 20-6 halftime lead.

In a foreshadowing of things to come, Johnny Cloud hit Brice Hornbeck on a slant for a 16 yard TD pass for the Mustangs only first half points.

TJ McCauley, a senior transfer from Pierre, became eligible to play for Little Wound on Thursday and made an immediate impact at flanker grabbing five Johnny Cloud passes for 140 yards including an 11 yard catch for a touchdown on the Mustangs first possession in the second half following the safety.

"Teams used to be able to double or triple team Hornbeck but now we have another target for Cloud's passes and along with Devon LeBeau it sets up a triple threat for our opponents to have deal with," said Hunter.

Cloud unleashed his powerful arm as he went 14 for 21 for 320 yards and two touchdowns and added a one yard plunge for a TD on the ground. Shilo Pierce carried the ball 15 times for 77 yards and had a three yard run for a TD while Hornbeck finished with five catches for 110 yards an a TD.

Late in the fourth quarter, after the Mustangs went up 28-20, Bennett County mounted a drive getting deep in Little Wound territory until LeBeau tipped a Haynes pass that was grabbed by freshman Orin Three Stars who ran it back for an 84 yard interception return for touchdown to shut down a possible game tying drive.

"All year, I've been telling anyone who will listen that we have a balanced team on both offense and defense," said Hunter, "the defense did a great job holding Bennett County scoreless in the second half and stopping their last drive."

This is homecoming week for Little Wound as they put their 4-1 record on the line at 1 p.m. on Friday against Pine Ridge.

Bennett County hosts Hill City Friday night at 7 p.m.

Red Cloud win over Eagle Butte 34-16

Trying to avoid a letdown after their hard fought win over Little Wound the previous week, Red Cloud rode the strong legs of Billy Scott, a 175 pound junior running back, as he piled up 217 yards on 21 carries, scoring three TD's on the ground and grabbing a nine yard TD pass from AB Morgan to lead the Crusaders to a 34-16 win over Cheyenne Eagle Butte on Friday.

"Our offensive line worked hard to open up some holes for Billy to run through last Friday," said head coach, Nick Dressel, "and when there wasn't an opening through the line, Scott had the ability to get outside and turn a short gain into a long one."

Scott opened the scoring with a 67 yard TD run with a slant off the left tackle that found wide open daylight all the way to the goal line. Sang Jun Park added an extra point, the first of six in the game.

On the next Red Cloud possession, Kael Whirlwind Horse knocked the ball loose from the Red Cloud quarterback, AB Morgan, and returned the fumble recovery down to the Red Cloud six yard line. Michael Potter punched it over for a four yard TD run two plays later, Spencer Peterson's two point conversion on the ground gave Eagle Butte their first and only lead.

The Crusaders came right back on the first play from scrimmage with a 65 yard scoring strike from AB Morgan to Marlon Kelly to put Red Cloud right back in the lead, a lead they would not give up again. Morgan added a nine yard TD pass to Scott in the second quarter to give Red Cloud a 21-8 lead. Morgan finished with four completions on six passes for 114 yards and two touchdowns.

After an Art Vitalis interception, Scott scored on a long 30 yard run only to have it called back on a holding penalty.

Eagle Butte held their ground on their own 12 yard line to turn the ball over on downs only to fumble the ball on their own 28 yard line. Given a second chance, Red Cloud made good as Scott rumbled over the goal line on a 28 yard drive right up the middle to give Red Cloud a 28-8 halftime lead.

Scott scored his third TD on the ground late in the third with a 34 yard sweep around the right end.

After back to back fumbles midway through the fourth, Peterson drove up the middle on a quarterback keeper for a five yard TD run and Potter added a two point conversion on the ground.

Rich Charging Cloud shut down Eagle Butte's final drive with an interception with 2:41 left in the fourth. Andrew Twiss led the Red Cloud defense with 13 tackles and an interception. Vitalis made it two games in a row with a pick.

Red Cloud moves their record to 4-1 and travels to Crow Creek on Friday while Cheyenne Eagle Butte is 0-5 and hosts Stanley County on Friday.

Thorpes take out Falcons 36-28

"It takes us a few weeks into the season to get up to speed," said Dave Michaud, Pine Ridge coach, "but when we get several weeks under our belt, we develop an ability to wear teams down in the second half with our endurance and strength; Friday's game with Todd County was an example of that as we went through the game down at the half and down at the end of three but we were able to outscore the Falcons 14-0 in the fourth for a 36-28 win."

Senior fullback, Dave "Bulldawg" Michaud put together his best game of the year pounding through the Falcon defense for 269 yards and three touchdowns.

Todd County's Gunner Krogman carried the baqll 19 times for 191 yards and two touchdowns while Mike Neiss grabbed a 24 yard TD pass from CJ Spotted Tail and ran a kick-off back 85 yards for a TD.

Krogman opened the scoring in the first quarter with a 62 yard TD run and Michaud came right back and reeled off a 64 yard run for a touchdown to even up the game at he end of one.

Spotted Tail hit Neiss on a 25 yard pass play for the Falcon lead; Harley Cortier hit DJ Big Crow on a 24 yard pass play to match until Krogman added a 32 yard run and Todd County trapped Pine Ridge in the end zone for a safety aqnd seemingly cruised into the second half up 22-14 over the Thorpes.

The two teams traded scores in the third as Michaud scrambled.for a 65 yard TD run and Neiss answered right back with his kick-off return. In the fourth Pine Ridge closed the deal with a Wayne Trueblood one yard TD run and Michaud's third TD on a 12 yard run.

Pine Ridge takes their 3-2 record into Kyle on Friday for a crucial game against Little Wound, both teams need the win. Todd County travels to Chamberlain.

Teams keep eye on power points as they look to the playoffs

Last year, both Little Wound and Pine Ridge not only went to the 11A football play-offs but each had the opportunity to host a first round game.

Both Pine Ridge Reservation teams are in the hunt once again for the play-offs and a home game in the first round; at 4-1, Little Wound is currently in second place in 11A Region 3 right behind Winner, both are 4-1. Todd County is in third behind those two teams. Pine Ridge is in 11A Region 4 and is in second place right behind Custer.

Red Cloud, at 4-1, there best record after five games in over a decade is in third place in 11B Region 4 behind St.Thomas More and Stanley County. Crow Creek is 2-3 and is fifth in 11B Region 3.

Lower Brule is currently fourth in 9B Region 4, the Sioux have gone into the play-offs the last two years; Dupree is in third. Tiospa Zina is 2-3 and is in fifth in 9A Region 1.

The top three in each region get automatic bids to the play-offs, those teams in fourth are left up in the air and the top four in points will go on regardless of their place in their region.

White Buffalo Calf Woman Society holds annual awareness march

Rate of violence against Indian women is 23.4 per 1,000, while the rate for other women is 8.1 per 1,000

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Some 40 marchers or more participated in the 20th annual "domestic violence awareness" walk sponsored by the White Buffalo Calf Woman Society. The walk which originated at the Rosebud I.H.S. hospital coincided with the month of October being designated as "Domestic Violence Awareness" month nationwide and on the Rosebud. The Charging Horse singers sang a traditional encouragement song, while other songs were also sung along the way.

A couple of banners were carried by the lead walkers as the first stop was at the Rosebud Law Enforcement Services building or the Rosebud Police Department. Judge Sherman Marshall was presented with a plant representing life, while WBCWS Executive Director, Tillie Black Bear, explained that the police department and other first responders were vital links for those who are subjected to domestic violence. Furthermore, she explained that the WBCWS has been in existence for thirty years and several RST tribal resolutions have reaffirmed their right to apply for domestic violence grant funding.

Nicole Witt of the WBCWS staff explained that the shelter has four different grants which fund its domestic violence activities. The grants are; Stop Violence against Indian Women, an Encourage Arrests Grant, the Tribal Coalition grant, and the Safety for Indian Women from Sex Offenders grant.

Edwin Young spoke on behalf of the Rosebud police department and briefly explained their role. Lino Spotted Elk of the RST courthouse spoke about his responsibility for ensuring that offenders who engage in domestic violence fulfill their court imposed sentences and obligations.

The walkers then marched on while Charging Horse sang an 'akicita' song. The next stop was at the cemetery east of the old hospital where Sicangu leader, Chief Spotted Tail is buried. As the walkers arrived at the RST tribal council chambers, the event was concluded with bottles of water, sandwiches and a brown bag with Doritos, a drink, cereal bar and an orange.

Wakanyeja Pawicayapi awarded $274,906

PORCUPINE -Wakanyeja Pawicayapi, Inc. has been awarded a grant for $274,906 by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

Wakanyeja Pawicayapi is a program that works with the emotional and mental healing of Lakota youth.

"This important funding will assist Wakanyeja Pawicayapi, Inc. in social and economic development efforts that can improve the quality of life for all the members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe," Sen. John Thune said of the grant.

Oceti Wakan gets $75,000 grant to study Lakota language

PINE RIDGE — Sen. John Thune announced the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services has awarded Oceti Wakan (Sacred Fireplace) a $75,000 grant as part of the Native Language Preservation and Maintenance Assessment Grant Program.

"I applaud the efforts of many who are working diligently to preserve the culture and language on our Reservations," Thune said.

Cordier awarded Hagen scholarship

PINE RIDGE - Christina Cordier, a 2006 graduate of Red Cloud High School is one of the eight Native American students chosen to receive the Richard Hagen-Minerva Harvey Memorial Scholarships awarded for the first time in 2006-07. The eight students join eleven others whose scholarships were continued under the program. Together, the 19 students will receive a total of $23,000 this year. The students use their scholarships to pursue their educations at an institute of higher education located in South Dakota.

"The 2010 Education Initiative includes a focus on improving the graduation rate of our Native American students," said Gov. Mike Rounds. "This scholarship provides a powerful incentive for students to finish their high school experience and to purse higher education. These students should be extremely proud.

According to South Dakota's 2006 Report Card, the graduation rate of Native American students from the state's public schools is 66 percent, compared to 89 percent for all students. At Red Cloud the graduation rate was 92 percent. Last year, 100 percent of the members of the class of 2006 came to graduation with their plans in place.

Christina Cordier

Hagen-Harvey scholarships were awarded to recent high school graduates who are enrolled members of one of South Dakota's nine tribes. Recipients must attend an institute of higher education located in South Dakota. Recipients are chosen based on qualities such as leadership potential, demonstration of exceptional talent, ACT test scores, high school grade point average, and other indicators of persistence and drive for success. Students can apply to receive a total of $6,000 over four years.

The scholarship program was established in 2003, after Minerva Harvey left the proceeds of her estate to the South Dakota Department of Education to develop a scholarship program for American Indian students. Richard Hagen was a legislator from Pine Ridge who served in the State House and Senate.

Gary Richards Jr. receives scholarship to attend Creighton

ALLEN - Gary Richards Jr. is one of ten American Indian students from across the nation who will continue their education with the help of scholarship funding from Accenture's American Indian Scholarship Fund. The students were honored last week at a celebration event held at the Smithsonian's National Museum of the American Indian in Washington DC.

More than 140 students applied for this year's Accenture scholarship program, which sought out the highest-achieving American Indian and Alaska Native students seeking degrees and careers in technology, professional and business fields.

"Accenture is honored to contribute to the higher education of these exceptional women and men," said Randy Willis, senior executive sponsor of Accenture's American Indian interest group. "While there were many deserving candidates, these students stood out as future leaders in the American Indian community."

Six Accenture Scholars will receive undergraduate scholarships toward completing four-year baccalaureate degrees:

Gary L. Richards Jr., (Oglala Lakota Sioux) of Pine Ridgewill attend Creighton University; Laura J. Graveley, (Muscogee) of Okmulgee, Okla., will attend Stanford University; Nolan Smith-Kaprosey, (Bay Mills Chippewa) of Fort Snelling, MN, will attend Yale University; Brittnea S. Meredith Kills In Water, who is employed at the Allstop convenience store in Rosebud, said that she has been on every walk since they first started. She said, "It is good for the heart. Even if one is in good health, it is good to do it for those cannot walk. I support men and women to have a better life. We can take a walk and see the wildlife and then, we can go home and be in a better mood."

RST council representative Russell Eagle Bear addressed the assembled group in the absence of the RST administration and leadership who were on travel to Sacramento, CA to attend the National Congress of American Indians conference.

Eagle Bear was quite articulate as he began in Lakota and then, moved to English. In Lakota he began, "Le anpetu ki yakahnige. Le woableza unciciukte." "You understand what this day is about. We will get some insight" he said, and continued, "We have violence and it is sad to see that our leaders in history had a hand in guiding us. Today, we kind of lost something. We're walking for guidance….we pray for our relatives and those having difficulty. Everyday someone is in need of prayer. Women took care of us. They nourished us. We learned many things through our grandmothers and mothers….you are creating awareness and it is our responsibility as older people."

Black Bear acknowledged the presence of Lakota elder Betty Red Owl who was celebrating her 77th birthday as Charging Horse sang a birthday song. Audrey Cordry of Mission was present as was Oglala elder Elaine Quiver.

The Charging Horse drum was comprised of Lester Kills The Enemy, Joe Flying, Gaylord Two Eagle and Elton Black Spotted Horse. Kills The Enemy explained that five songs they sang were, an encouragement song, a 'wacink sapa' song, 'akicita' song, a memorial song for Nida Eagle Elk, birthday song and then, the encouragement song again.

Eagle Bear presented an RST Executive Proclamation in observance of Domestic Violence Month. The theme was, "Together we can end violence in our homes, society and in the community…" It noted that the rate of violence against Indian women is 23.4 per 1,000, while the rate for white women is 8.1 per 1,000.

St. Francis Mission expands Ici Mani Ya Waste recovery center

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - For a number of years St. Francis Mission appeared to be on the decline given its shrinking number of buildings, some of which had burned down and one which was scheduled for demolition.

That appears to have been reversed with the expansion of the 'old' Ici Mani Ya Waste building, formerly Drexel Hall, and the creation of new office space for the Rosebud Educational Society and the religious education program.

The buildings are very contemporary in style and once they are completed along with the parking lot plans are to hold some type of open house for the public.

Michael Valandra has been with the Ici Mani Ya Waste recovery program since 2003 and he has a multifaceted role in leading the center.

He said, "I really believe once we open people will be here. There will be library space, books, and room for homework. Our main focus is activities such as pool tournaments and card games.

To say to the youth they can have fun without drugs and alcohol."

Valandra credits Father John Hatcher for making the commitment to increasing the presence of SFM. He says that the youth will have an opportunity to pray also if they so choose.

He said, "The youth are important to us. We have to bring back their faith in culture and prayer." The center is connected to a spiritual room in the old Drexel Hall which, itself, has been renovated totally inside and the outside is being worked on.

More information and publicity about the center's specific offerings and schedule will be forthcoming once it is complete.

Valandra says that an outdoor basketball court will be constructed so the youth can hold tournaments outside. At present, the Digmann Hall is used for indoor games.

Valandra says that the center feels totally comfortable with combining facets of Lakota spirituality with that of the Catholic faith. Once a month, Mike Cross, from Kyle, holds a sweat and Father Hatcher holds mass. Then, a healing ceremony is held.

The center has also held retreats for men and women and plans to hold one in March 2007. He said, "Last week we had 43 people here for a ceremony. It was unique as we had a spiritual leader, a counselor and a Jesuit priest." He also utilizes the "Talking Circle" as a tool to have clients and the youth talk about their issues. He has been using the approach at the BIA dormitory in Mission and plans to expand it use at St. Francis Indian School.

Valandra is well suited for his role in raising the public's awareness of alcohol and drug recovery as he has hosted guests from Alkali Lake in Canada and often goes on KINI FM radio with host Richard Iyotte, Mike Cross and Father Hatcher in providing updates on the center's work.

Valandra further illustrated his past struggles with alcohol and drugs. He said, "I spent a number of years as a drug dealer and an alcoholic. I got busted in 1998 and served five years in a federal prison. I served it in Waseca, Minn. and also got four years supervised release. My sobriety date is June 25, 1998."

He went through the Little Hoop lodge treatment center and has been sober ever since. He now practices a traditional and Catholic way of life. A sun dancer in his fourth year, Valandra attends weekly Alcohol Anonymous meetings.

He said, "I do everything for the people. I pray for the elderly and the youth. I'm true to the Red Road."

Janklow, the lawyer, argues case before South Dakota justices

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - Bill Janklow started his career as an attorney working on cases involving American Indian law, which also was the subject of a case that marked his public return to the profession.

A year ago, the former governor and congressman asked justices for the early return of his law license, which he had lost after his 2003 conviction of second-degree manslaughter for causing a fatal traffic crash.

He got his license back last winter and returned to the high court Monday as a practicing lawyer during its October session in Sioux Falls.

Janklow, 67, of Brandon, is one of the attorneys representing Daniel Carlson of Sisseton, a father whose 14-month-old daughter died of overheating after he left her unattended in his parked car with the windows rolled up.

The girl, Tehya Carlson, died Aug. 17, 2005. Carlson had dropped off his then-6-year-old daughter, Jacinda Carlson, at his mother's home in Sisseton but forgot to drop Tehya off at her day care in Browns Valley, Minn., where he works as a vice president of a telemarketing company.

The girl was left in the car from about 9 a.m. until shortly after 5 p.m., when Carlson found her.

Carlson was not charged criminally because he was not intentionally negligent, the local prosecutor concluded.

The girl's mother, Barbara Baldwin, is an American Indian and an enrolled member of the Sisseton Wahpeton tribe, as were the couple's two daughters. She filed an abuse and neglect petition in tribal court in Sisseton, and the court removed Jacinda from Carlson's custody. He now is trying to regain custody.

Baldwin moved to Biloxi, Miss., when the couple divorced in 2005 and now is in the Air Force in Grand Forks, N.D.

Carlson, a non-Indian, had custody of the girls during the school year and Baldwin had them during the summer.

In its ruling, the tribal court concluded that though Jacinda did not live on the reservation, she was a ward of the court.

The tribe then filed a motion to enforce the order in state court and a judge agreed that tribal court had jurisdiction because of the Indian Child Welfare Act.

"That's nonsense," Janklow told the justices, arguing that the federal act does not apply because the father had custody and none of the family members lived on reservation or trust land.

Because of that, the Supreme Court should reverse the lower court judge's order enforcing the tribal court's ruling that removed the father from custody, he said.

"We can't all be part of this fraud that's being perpetrated," Janklow said.

Attorneys for the tribe and Baldwin argued that the ICWA does apply and the state judge was right to agree with the tribal court order.

"The tribe has jurisdiction over its members," said Andrew Small of Minneapolis, who represents the Sisseton Wahpeton tribe.

Dani Daugherty of Aberdeen, the mother's lawyer, agreed.

"This is a tribe. This is a sovereign nation. And the state went into an agreement with it," she said.

Justices will issue their written opinion later.

Janklow, a longtime leader in the state Republican party, was the nation's longest-serving governor when he was elected to the U.S. House in November 2002. Janklow's law license was suspended after a jury in December 2003 found him guilty of second-degree manslaughter, for which he served 100 days in jail and resigned from Congress.

In October 2005, Janklow asked the state Supreme Court for the right to practice law again.

Addiction recovery requires balancing good and bad

Editor's Note LLJ tells her story of recovery and has requested that her name not be used. She hopes her story will make an impact on those seeking recovery.

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The road to successful addiction recovery for LLJ was paved with both the negative and positive. She called it the 'black road' and the good was labeled 'the red road' approach to achieving harmony. She is someone who has journeyed for some 20 years, maintaining sobriety and at the same time using that tremendous pain she felt in order to be a healer to others.

LLJ has engaged in a great deal of study, self reflection, and counseling of others addicted and is able to apply contemporary western philosophy and thought into her work. She also credits her Sicangu colleagues with guiding her in integrating the Lakota spiritual way in order for her to be a more effective counselor and clinical supervisor.

The journey in Sicangu country is coming to end after 11 years and it feels right that she move on to another challenge elsewhere.

She said, "My alcohol use represented a betrayal of trust of everyone I know. It is part of the spiritual malaise or in Lakota it might be called 'ta ta.' When one is on the black road, their thinking is impaired."

LLJ's 'story' of addiction and recovery was a spellbinding account that went all too quickly in two hours time. She could recall a time when her mother would make chokecherry wine and the first time she sampled it at age 11 it seemed like the best thing that ever happened to her. At age 19-20 she experimented with marijuana and it continued to be a part of her adult life.

"I was a full blown alcoholic after I took my first drink" she said as she described the pattern of drinking at her mom's house where all the drinks were consumed in one sitting. She added, "I am not blaming anybody. I think I was primed. We choose our path when we are born in the world. Did I choose a life of disharmony? Yes, I chose it because there was always redemption."

The crossroad came for LLJ when one of her son's got into trouble and her home was investigated. She was referred to inpatient care and she proceeded to lie on her assessment. Her husband was sick and tired of her drinking and lies. She said the moment she reached for the door handle to the treatment center it was a defining moment for her. She said, "Everything told me to turn back and something said open it and go in. Something other than me was in control. It was a spiritual moment. They kept me safe on that black road. I believe I was chosen to walk on that and the 'red road. I believe that I was chosen before I was born."

Addiction is a part of the spiritual walk and the first step in treatment is pain, according to LLJ and she was deceptive and knew it. It is important to be honest and not under report issues that plague one.

She described moving through step three of her treatment phase. It was a time of spiritual awakening. In ceremony she saw herself. She called it "woableza." She saw herself as an empty shell and again at a crossroad where she could turn back to a life of drinking or walk on the 'red road.'

She continued, "I wanted to be alone, sitting there. I never felt so alone and asked my counselor. I told her what happened and she said I did step three." In step four and five, LLJ illustrated her initiation into the sweat lodge, the way of the pipe and joining Alcohol Anonymous. She almost relapsed after three years, but her son had written a lady's name from A.A. and she called her once when she was ready to go out on the town. She said, "My impaired thinking, the insane thinking was going on. But something else was in control. I pray to my relations. I lost my mother a year ago and she is guiding me."

LLJ described her involvement in the sun dance for seven years at Dicky Moves Camp's in Wanblee. One of her son's also danced there and all three have been to treatment. She said, "I learned from the Sicangu that it is a spiritual balance. I learned to be a human being here, so now I am ready to leave." She described the 'cangleska' as a beautiful part of Lakota culture. It has no end and no beginning and it is a paradox.

LLJ summed up the manner in which good and bad are both an important part of harmony and balance. She said, "I can't forget the drinking because it is a part of me. Pain helps me and others. Without that pain I can't put myself in their shoes…my worst hell is my heaven. When I walk through my hell, it is the only way to know my heaven. It is the only way to know the 'red road.'

Finally, she brought the idea of 'pain' closer to home when she said, "My kids watch me. I lost their trust to this day. My young son is working on getting back that trust. I may not get it back. That's what I mean by the 'pain.'"

Mendoza, Wohlleber slam dunk competition at LNI cross country

Cheyenne Eagle Butte, McLaughlin win team titles

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

RAPID CITY - The expected dual between Pine Ridge's Alex Wilson-Pine and Kiko Mendoza of Takini, both defending State cross country champs didn't materialize as Wilson-Pine scratched and Mendoza cruised to a 22 second win over Marc Whirlwind Soldier of Todd County for the 2006 Lakota Nation cross country championship at Memorial Park in Rapid City on Saturday.

Jordan Wohlleber, a freshman at Cheyenne Eagle Butte, has placed high in state A cross country as a 7th and 8th grader and has won several races this year; Saturday, the closest anyone finished to the slender young Eagle Butte runner was her teammate, Jordyn Cook, 59 seconds behind her.

With Wohlleber and Cook finishing one-two, the Eagle Butte girls defeated Todd County 23-27 to win the 2006 Lakota Nation Invitational. McLaughlin won the boys competition easily knocking off Todd County 27-45 with Takini in third with 65.

The top twenty finishers in the boys included: 1. Mendoza/Tak 17:13, 2. Whirlwind Soldier/TC 17:35, 3. Ian Wiest.McL 17:36, 4. Sean Red Elk/LW 18:15, 5. Wes Running/TC 18:24, 6. ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

How are you? I was just reading your column on-line, I didn't know you had that, that's nice.

I was wondering about my nephew, how is he doing on the other side, I keep thinking about him and I hope he is no longer suffering and is happy. I pray for him alot. He was so young.

Also I was talking to my ex-husband on the internet every now and then and all of a sudden he disappeared, I know you told me to move forward but he was willing to help me with my homework from college and I was glad, is he just totally out of my life now? Am I gonna meet someone soon who will take care of me or be here with me? I am taking college classes again and I enjoy them.

What do you see in my near future, can you give me some good news?

Where is your flower shop in Rapid City? I think about you when I'm in Rapid City but don't know where to find you at?

How is my job, am I gonna have this job? Some of us had to outprocess and process back in till our jobs are advertised and we can put in for them, and they do not want to pay us out for our annual leave that we had, is that gonna change, will we be paid? We earned that annual leave.

This place is still upside down and inside out, things change every day.

A little stressed here

Dear A Little Stressed Out:

Good to hear from you. Your ex is your ex. You could invite him back into your life in the future, but it is not a fulfilling relationship for you. He is fine, just involved with other aspects (and a new girl-friend) of his life. Let go, in your heart you don't really want to spend the rest of your life with this man, he is too mixed up, so let go and move on.

Your nephew is, as they say, in a better place. It is true: life is everlasting. I tend to refer to those that are in Spirit as having gone home. A place where love IS... where the very resonance of the love of the Creator is felt and is part and never separate from you.

Your nephew is with his family. The ones who love him.

There is even more than that going on in the Spirit World. There is learning about the true nature of reality; the awareness that you are never separate from the Creator; there is planning and reviewing of earth life and relationships; there are those in Spirit who chose or are chosen to help those still on the earth - who work with us here.

There is the graduation of experience to encompass the true understanding of the Creator or God - and further, whatever is possible within the Creatorship of God is created. Whatever you can imagine would be a limitation of what God and you together can experience on the next level after physical life has ended. And then, there is the planning of the next life experience, otherwise known as reincarnation.

We, as people, each one of us, is much more than we understand. We (human-beings on earth) are a big investment by the Creator in an earthly body, enriching and of free-will to create ourselves in a reflection of our Creator or in a way that is much less than we have inherited from our Creator. Each life is an experience of Spirit in physical form, a journey to enrich the soul to become all that we can be: love incarnated. Each life has an impact upon all other lives that it touches, it has the potential in the extreme magnification to change the world.

After all of this, what I am telling you is that your nephew is fine, he is with his relatives, he is in a state of love or grace, and that he does not ever suffer.

My office is in Rapid City in the Buell Building, 522 7th Street, my business is called: "2 Crazy Women With An Office."

My business partner and I spend a lot of time on the rez - in Kyle and in Pine Ridge, sometimes Martin, sometimes in Rosebud.

Work, right now, for you is tough. The entire organization is in an uproar with a new leader.

He is trying to establish lines of loyalty and does not wish to include in his team people that are not in alignment with his personal vision.

It would take a fight to receive your leave, you are correct - it is, as least morally, something you are entitled to.

Let it go for now, until after you are hired, and then pursue it. I don't like it when people that have worked in positions for an extended period of time are released and someone without experience is hired. That is not good business practice.

The organization loses continuity, and it is very expensive to train people. It is not done too often in the business world, but it is done a lot in the tribal political world. It is one of the reasons that tribally funded, BIA funded and grant funded programs suffer so little progress.

Economically it wastes hundreds of thousands of dollars each year. When people are below par in the review process, when their work is not adequate, then they should lose their jobs and a person that wants to work should be hired in their place. T hat should be an exception, not the rule. Quite honestly, start looking for another position. Check with I.H.S. Your workplace will go through this again and again and again, about every time there is a political change.

There will be a new man in your life - but not for almost a year. Hang in there, get yourself in balance and go into the next relationship without a sense of neediness. Go into the next relationship as an equal.

My thoughts and prayers are with you. Give me a call. You know the people that have my phone number.

Dear Anna,

I have a question about if I should do something or not. I know this woman who lives on the next reservation. She has a husband and a child over there. He is older than her and takes care of her.

She comes back home and goes out with guys. I heard of her and what she does but didn't think it would have anything to do with me until now I heard she is doing that with someone important to me and he will probably just be hurt and it is all said and done.

It's like I want to tell her husband so she will quit doing that with guys over here. Should I?

Big Question

Dear Big Question:

NO. MYOB. If you start it, you will be responsible for destroying other people's lives. Why would you want to hurt her husband?

Don't worry about protecting your friends. They are adults, and they can handle what they create.

Dear Anna,

I was wondering, like I read your column like almost every Friday.

I was going ask if you see any future love for me because most of my friends tell me to go around with them but I ain't got no time for that at all so I 'm asking if you see any future boyfriend or any boys at my school who do like me or wanna ask me out thank you again.

Wondering

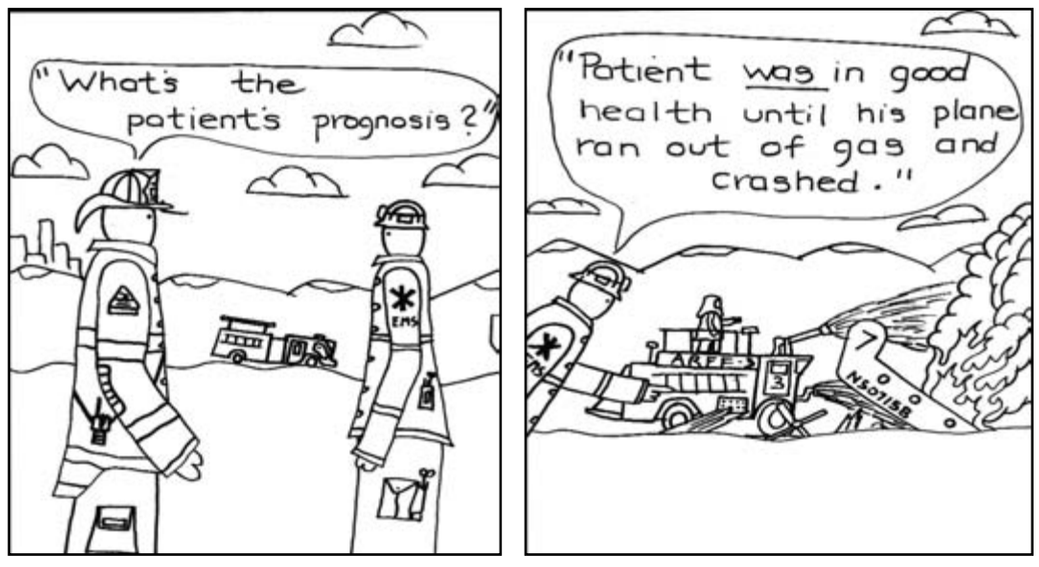
Dear Wondering:

Read the first letter - it applies to you too. There is a boy at school that likes you.

He is kind of tall, he has beautiful coffee-cream color skin, he has short hair (it may have a little curl to it), he wears a baseball cap backwards, he wears a lot of shirts that are sports-type of shirts with numbers and teams on them, he plays basketball (at least in his spare time) he usually gets a ride to school, because he doesn't live right in town.

You will know he likes you soon, because he will talk to you and give you a piece of candy or a cookie or something small to eat.

He doesn't have any money, so asking you out is kind of hard, but hanging out at a game or something and walking around is cheaper and will happen. Good Luck!



You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868 @gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551. All requests may be subject to publication.

Effective Friday, December 1, 2006 the Rosebud Comprehensive Health Facility will be implementing and enforcing a Tobacco-Free Policy in an effort to protect the health and safety of all I.H.S. employees, contractors and visitors.

Research indicates that smoking is the major preventable cause of illness and premature death in the United States. Over 400,000 people die annually as a result of tobacco use. Exposure to second-hand smoke is linked to a variety of negative health consequences and is responsible for approximately 3,000 lung cancer deaths annually among non-smokers in the United States.

The use of tobacco will be prohibited on all I.H.S. - operated properties. This policy applies to all I.H.S. employees, clients, contractors and visitors.

EXCEPTIONS:

1.Traditional Beliefs and Ceremonial Practices: The I.H.S. continues to recognize the value and efficacy of patient's traditional beliefs and ceremonial practices. The use of tobacco for ceremonial purposes is allowed in the designated traditional healing room, including any space designated for a ceremony, or in a patient's private hospital room.

2. Space Not Operated by the I.H.S.: Any spaces outside the leased areas of multi-tenant facilities not solely operated by the I.H.S.

3. Residential Property: Any I.H.S. residential property such as Government housing quarters.

ENFORCEMENT:

Managers and supervisors at all levels will be responsible for the enforcement of this policy and for documenting verbal warnings.

A. Employee Violations: Employees who fail to comply with this policy may be subjected to appropriate disciplinary action.
B. Visitors and Patient Violations: Visitor and patient violations Shall be handled accordingly.

1)The visitor or patient is to be informed politely of the I.H.S. Tobacco-Free Policy.

2)Security personnel shall ask patients or visitors who refuse to comply with the policy to leave the property and shall document the incident

The implementation of the Tobacco-Free Policy is a component of a larger initiative to improve the health and wellness of our employees, patients, and visitors.

All "No-Smoking" signs will be removed and replaced with new signs stating that "No Tobacco Products" may be used in the tobacco-free environment.

Steele joins White Plume for OST general election

Two Eagle moves past Weston in VP's race

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - When the dust settled Tuesday on the OST primary election and all the rumors of a new election board and talk of re-doing the primary had dissipated in the daily grind of life on Pine Ridge Reservation, Alex White Plume remained the top vote getter for OST president in the primary election with 610 votes in a field of 12 presidential candidates. A past tribal council representative from Wounded Knee District, White Plume was elected in November of 2004 as vice president and in late June of 2006 moved into the presidency after the impeachment of Cecelia Fire Thunder.

On Tuesday night with the unofficial results, four time past tribal president, John Steele finished with a two vote margin over Fire Thunder with over 400 challenge votes yet to be considered. Steele finished the primary with 521 votes increasing his margin over Fire Thunder to 17 votes when she ended up with 504.

Alex White Plume

John Steele

Steele brings a great deal of experience to the presidential race, in addition to serving four terms as president between 1992 and 2004, John served two terms as tribal council representative from Wounded Knee District and two terms as vice president as well as serving on OLC's board of trustees.

In the race for vice president, William Shorty Brewer finished with 1,000 votes, easily out distancing Melanie Two Eagle's 676. On Tuesday night, Wayne Weston held second place over Two Eagle with a five vote 614-609 margin but officially finished third with 650 votes.

In another change, Joe American Horse kept his lead in the chief judge race with 1,326 votes but Steve Hawk jumped from third to second finishing with 1,040 leaving Lisa Adams in third with 931. Originally, the OST Election Board did not certify either American Horse or Hawk as candidates for chief judge citing a lack of qualifications. The OST Election Court of Appeals overruled the Election Board and added both candidates to the ballot.

Completing the president's race, current vice president Eileen Janis was fourth with

RST Liquor Commission holds liquor license hearing for 'Wild Bill's'

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The application for the issuance of a liquor license on the Rosebud reservation for the business "Wild Bill" owned by Paula Whiting of Antelope community was aired live over KINI FM radio on Oct. 10 from the RST tribal council chambers. A previous liquor issuance hearing for Syd Colombe was aired so it was appropriate to do the same for this applicant reasoned acting Chair of the RST Liquor Commission, John Charles Arcoren. He stated that the establishment would be located 12 miles of south of Mission at Olsonville.

A decision by the RST Liquor Commission to issue a liquor license will be announced at the commission's next regularly scheduled meeting during the first Wednesday in November. A decision will be made by the commission on a previous application by Syd Colombe to sell off sale beer on Oct. 26.

The members of the RST liquor commission include, Pete Reynolds, Anthony Bordeaux, Jr., Theresa Stead, John Charles Arcoren and Bernadette Howard.

The purpose of the hearing was to simply take testimony and not put the commission at odds with those providing testimony for or against the issuance of a liquor license, according to Arcoren.

Tillie Black Bear, a longtime community activist and Executive Director of the White Buffalo Woman Society presented testimony against the issuance of a license and cited some of the negative statistics that result from the abuse of alcohol.

The council chambers appeared to be somewhat subdued as there were moments of silence as the commission waited for others to testify. Buzz Arcoren hosted the event on behalf of KINI FM as a live remote broadcast and noted the purpose of the hearing. At one point he said, "I would like everyone to come down and state their opposition to the license or if they are in favor of the license." He also stated the other side of the issue which is that alcohol will always be available and the tribe should sell liquor and use the money.

Genoa boarding school friends meet after 75 years

KYLE - In 1930, two young Lakota girls met in Genoa, Neb. at a boarding school for native children and became friends. Almost 75 years later, they met again at a memorial dinner for Barton Merrival in Kyle in the summer of 2006.

The two young girls were Sophia Romero (Quiver) and Cecelia Montgomery. Sophia now lives in Wanblee and had a family of six children. Cecelia has lived in Rapid City and now lives in Kyle. They are both 95 years old.

According to a online encyclopedia, the Indian Industrial School at Genoa, Neb., "was the fourth non-reservation boarding institution established by the Office of Indian Affairs. The facility opened on Feb. 20, 1884, and, like other such schools, its mission was to educate and teach Christianity to Native American children. The village of Genoa was selected because the federal govern-

Deaths mar holiday weekend on reservation

PINE RIDGE RESERVATION - The weekend turned dark as three young adults lost their lives on Pine Ridge Reservation.

Saturday, Jon Red Hawk, 15, was stabbed to death in Pine Ridge. On Sunday, Clint Lays Hard, 21, died in an auto accident outside of Kyle as he tried to elude the police. On Tuesday, Jonni Brewer, 16, died as a result of a drug overdose in Porcupine.

All three deaths are being investigated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs criminal investigation division in Pine Ridge..

Liquor license

The quiet was soon broken by several speakers who mostly spoke against the issuance of a license.

Tyrone Big Crow of St. Francis provided testimony and began in Lakota, "Mitakuyepi nape' ciyuspape nahan cante ni waste'. Le mni sici wowapi." All my relatives. There is someone here that put in an application. At the same time I want to challenge all the chiefs and spiritual leaders who have run sun dances and to come and speak against this liquor license. I was very proud that Chief Crow Dog put a bonnet on me. I am a leader for my tribe. I came to speak. We always say our kids our sacred. We can't be a tradition or can't claim that, because when we want something to happen we always use our kids."

He continued, "We have a lot of suicides due to alcohol and if we can't stop it, I want the tribe to give an application to every bootlegger, so we can find a way to make a living.

"Mitakuyepi, yanahu huwo? Mni sica le uncinpsni. Hena hece tusni" he continued in Lakota.

"All my relatives are you listening? We don't want this alcohol. That isn't right."

Adam Little Elk also addressed the commission and said "I hear a lot of people are complaining about alcohol. No matter what we do, alcohol will still be here. It comes from four directions. Last time I was here I talked about it. Why doesn't the tribe get a license themselves and take the revenue and help the people. I used to drink many years ago. I sobered up and realized what I was doing to myself. We want to help these people. We should talk to them instead of putting them down. …All you do is complain instead of helping them. We don't complain about the wine in the church. They are taking all our ceremonial stuff into the church without helping us. What about all the drugs around here, nothing is being done. Nothing. For us who walked that road many years ago, I learned from that. I drank to forget about a war that I went to. We veterans earned the right to speak, to protect this country. You all need to look forward to the future of our children. Look at ourselves. You have to treat them with respect. They are humans just like us. It is their choice to drink."

Lakota elder, Chief Homer Whirlwind Soldier, Chairman of Grass Mountain said "I am going to speak out again. I am a former alcoholic. I read this was going to be a LLC. The year 2003-04…There were 680 accidents, that is not counting the legitimate reasons. Each one caused five days of intensive care unit to Sioux Falls. They are $20,000 plus a day." Whirlwind Soldier is also the President of Owl Bonnet council of elders in St. Francis.

Harold James Fuller of Antelope community testified "I like to drink and raise heck. But, I don't like to see drunks on the road. I also don't want to be a hypocrite. The tribe sits here with the liquor commission. Tribal government has a right to shut everything down. When government says they are alcohol free. They are selling it at the casino."

Frederick Little Bald Eagle said, "We have some chiefs that need to come forward and have to make their say….I am sick and tired of sharing this over and over. There are places like Winner or Valentine if someone wants to make some money for themselves."

Sandra Black Bear said "We are hypocrites. We have a resolution passed that said we were going to be alcohol free by 2000. They need to protect us as Lakota people. As a tribal council. I don't have dumb Indian written on my forehead. Not afraid to stand up for takojas and women who get beat up."

Finally, she said, "Lets get rid of that dumb Indian look…Valentine can have all the liquor they want. White River and Kilgore. Look at all the things that happened to them. Look at our real leaders. Sometimes we are labeled wrong."

"Eleanor Larvie also provided testimony and said "My mother passed away at age 57. She drank herself to death. No child should unhook their life mother's support and watch their mother pass away. No one should have to go through what I do. What is the difference between Bear Butte and us? Aren't we a sacred site too?

Sioux San hospital's future questioned

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) _ The future of the Sioux San Indian Hospital in Rapid City could be in doubt, according to a member of the hospital's board.

Theresa Spry said the hospital suffers from a lack of federal funding and may have to be torn down and be replaced with a clinic because few American Indians take advantage of its services.

But Spry also said the lack of money for doctors is the main reason that the hospital has few patients. She said the board will keep fighting to keep the hospital open.

Sioux San Indian Hospital, a public health service facility, was built in 1938. It offers a 19-bed acute-care unit, a four-bed pediatric unit and a nine-bed mental health unit. But the hospital has only two full-time doctors and one half-time physician.

ment already owned the former Pawnee Reservation property there; however, existing buildings at the site were unsuitable and in poor repair. Like many buildings designed for Indian school campuses, this was a simple three-story structure with a hipped roof and a small triangular pediment above the center entrance. The pairs of tall windows and the strong horizontal lines across the front created a balanced composition." The school was designed to teach Indian students not only academics but industrial skills that they could use in mainstream such farming, blacksmithing, carpentry, nursing, laundering, sewing, and cooking so that they would graduate with marketable skills and presumably be more easily assimilated into white society. The school was open from 1884 to 1934.

Sophia said when the school closed they were transfered to Holy Rosary Mission School in Pine Ridge where they continued their education.

She said her and her siblings attended the school because they were orphans and it was where they were sent.

U. S. Supreme Court refuses to hear Means case

Court action reaffirms tribal jurisdiction over all Indians

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

WASHINGTON - In August of 2005 petitioner, Russell Means, a well known activist filed an appeal in the Ninth District Court of Appeals in which he sought to prevent the Navajo Nation from criminally prosecuting him in Navajo Nation court for an incident which occurred in December of 1997 because he is an enrolled Oglala Sioux.

The opinion of the court was written by Andrew J. Kleinfeld.

On Monday, October 9, the U. S. Supreme Court rejected Means' claim that he could not be prosecuted by the Navajo Nation since he is not Navajo and that the tribe does not have jurisdiction over non-Navajos.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals denied the claim and the U. S. Supreme Court declined to hear the case.

The action by the high court lets stand the inherent power of tribal jurisdiction over all Indians within their boundaries. Congress passed a piece of legislation in the 1990s known as the "Duro" fix and tribes were concerned that the Supreme Court might erode that one day. Means raised the constitutional issues of due process and the equal protection clause, but they were rejected and it clears the way for the Navajo Nation to prosecute Means.

Means apparently lived on the Navajo reservation from 1987-97 when he was married to a woman who was half Omaha and half Navajo. The alleged offense occurred after Means had moved back to South Dakota and while he was on a subsequent visit.

Means originally filed a motion to dismiss the case claiming the fact that the Navajo Nation had no jurisdiction over him.

The Navajo tribal court denied the motion and it was appealed to the Navajo Supreme Court which denied the motion also.

After he exhausted his claims in Navajo Nation court, Means then filed an appeal to the United States District Court asking them to enjoin the tribe from taking his case any further. The court denied his request and then he appealed to the Ninth District Court of Appeals.

The Ninth District Court of Appeals decided that it had jurisdiction over the appeal and that, while Means had exhausted his remedies in tribal court, he still has not been tried for the alleged offenses. The Navajo Nation court notes that the charges are still pending and they intend to prosecute him for the offenses.

In 1990, Congress amended the Indian Civil Rights Act to say that Indian tribes had criminal jurisdiction over all Indians and it meant all Indians who are not members of a tribe.

In the original motion Kleinfeld wrote, "The United States has not demanded that the Navajo turn Means over for federal prosecution, and the Navajo have chosen to prosecute Means themselves in tribal court, which the 1990 Amendments to the Indian Civil Rights Act recognize they have the power to do."

Means could not be reached for comment.

Tribal land near I-90 can be taken into trust

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - The U.S. Supreme Court declined to hear a 16-year-old case, meaning 91 acres of Lower Brule Sioux Tribe land along Interstate 90 near Oacoma may be taken into trust for the tribe by the federal Interior Department.

Tribes nationwide had feared that the case could limit tribal sovereignty if it got to the high court.

But the decision not to hear it means an 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling stands. Tribal-sovereignty backers had called the state's original lawsuit the equivalent of firing a nuclear weapon at a mosquito.

The case arose from South Dakota's effort to block the land from going into trust. The land is about eight miles from the Lower Brule reservation.

The tribe will create a development plan and seek financing for the land, Michael Jandreau, Lower Brule chairman, said. Likely uses include a truck stop and tourist amenities promoting the Native American Scenic Byway, he said.

"We need dollars to do that," he said. Tax incentives because the land is in trust help the tribe garner such funding, Jandreau said.

If tribes can establish trust land outside reservations, the state loses an important ability to regulate land use, Larry Long, South Dakota's attorney general, said.

In the 1980s, a private developer tried to give land to the Oglala Sioux Tribe and get it enrolled in trust to operate a landfill and avoid state environmental regulations, Long said.

Also, a hog-farm partnership between a North Dakota company and the Rosebud Sioux Tribe evades the state anti-corporate farming provision, according to the attorney general.

In the Lower Brule case, the state questioned the federal government's authority to take land into trust outside the contiguous borders of reservations.

Being able to acquire trust land off reservations can be a powerful economic development tool, said Jandreau, who said that the state has shown it still considers Indian tribes as adversaries.

"I say this bluntly," Jandreau said about the lawsuit. "To me, it is nothing but the social bigotry underlying all treatment of Indian tribes by state government that is fostered and promoted by the attorney general's office. In this case, it appears to be supported by the governor of our state."

Slate for Little Wound School Board election set

KYLE - The Little Wound school board election committee certified the candidate list last week for the upcoming school board election to be held in conjunction with the general election of the Oglala Sioux Tribe on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Two of the three incumbents are on the list including Everett Janis and Taylor Little White Man. Cecelia Fire Thunder did not submit a petition.

Candidates certified included Audrey Kills Straight, Sally Broken Rope-O'Rourke, Janice Richards, Melvin Young, Fern Mousseau, Arthur Hopkins and Amanda Christensen.

The top three candidates will earn four year terms and join Archie Hopkins and Linda May on the school board.

Little Wound is a K-12 contract grant school located in Kyle with an enrollment of over 900 students that come from the districts of Medicine Root, Eagle Nest, Porcupine, Wounded Knee, Pass Creek, Wakpamni and LaCreek.

Tunska passes into the spirit world

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

My nephew Harvey, Jr. of Antelope community passed into the spirit world this past weekend and followed in his father's footsteps within a year of his passing. They say that children should never be buried before their parents and I believe that my brother, Harvey, Sr. sincerely believed that that should not be the case.

It is unimaginable the kind of pain parents who lose a child must go experience. I never want to feel that pain as the life of a child is so very precious. Sometimes I wonder about the senseless nature of young people dying before they have had a chance to make an impact on the world. It is something we experience all the time, but it still doesn't make any sense.

A friend, Pat LeBeau, said that I should write something on the generous nature of Lakota people as they gather for funerals, name givings and other celebrations. Many families will give very generously even if it means giving up their last dollar. Apparently, there are cultures that cannot imagine putting a strain on the family budget by sharing so much. In Lakota life, as most of you know, there is the prevailing attitude that we share as a way to not only show our connection to family and friends, but one of our basic values is not to accumulate wealth at the neglect of other members within the circle.

Several years ago, I was on the St. Francis new year's powwow committee and I witnessed several families coming in and donating significant sums of money for the powwow in the name of their loved ones. I knew some of the families and I was astounded to know that they were willing to put themselves out and give so much when they could have easily used it for family. I learned something that day as it is a value I can talk about, practice and be a role model for others in that regard.

'Wacantognaka' or generosity is one of the great beliefs that continues to cement Lakota people together and it creates cohesion among individual tiospaye units. It hopefully will be one of those values that will endure inspite of a changing Lakota society. The term 'tacan waste' translates to being generous of heart or generous with one's possessions and it speaks to the act of reaching out and sharing also with one's emotions and feelings.

Notes From Indian Country

Termination is an ugly word in Indian country

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

To most Americans the word "termination" usually means getting a pink slip with your final paycheck telling you that your employment has been terminated. To the Indian people of America it means that their lands or nations have been removed from the rolls of protected lands and are now open to sale and settlement by anyone. In other words, their nation has been "terminated."

On August 1, 1953 the 83rd Congress of the United States passed House Concurrent Resolution 108 calling for the termination of all Indian tribes located within the States of California, Florida, New York, and Texas. They added to the list The Flathead Tribe of Montana, the Klamath Tribe of Oregon, the Menominee Tribe of Wisconsin, the Potowatamie Tribe of Kansas and Nebraska, the Chippewa Tribe of the Turtle Mountain Reservation in North Dakota.

The Resolution also called for all of the Bureau of Indian Affairs' offices serving these tribes or any other tribe "freed from Federal supervision" be abolished or closed. The passage of Resolution 108 was immediately followed by a number of termination bills drafted as a direct result of the Resolution. From 1954 to 1960, 61 tribes, groups or Indian communities were terminated.

In 1957, four bands of Paiutes (the Shivwits, the Koosharem, the Indian Peaks and the Kanosh) were terminated. When asked why they did not object to termination they said they did not understand what was happening. They didn't understand the legal language and they were much too poor to ask for legal advice. Their land was leased to cattlemen at low prices or put into trust in a bank in Salt Lake City until it could be sold or leased.

Termination for the Paiutes meant they were on their own without birth certificates, Social Security numbers, land deeds, etc. In essence, they were landless, homeless and left without the proper identification to move forward.

Some of the above facts can be found in a book called "Makoce" published by Vivian One Feather with cooperation by the Black Hills State College with Charles Underbaggage serving as the consultant through a grant from the U. S. Office of Education's, Department of Health, Education and Welfare. It is available at the Prairie Edge Bookstore in Rapid City, SD.

Most of the tribes terminated in those terrible days of the Eisenhower Administration, fought for and eventually regained their status as federally recognized Indian tribes. But not all.

The Court of Claims awarded the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Utah more than $31 million on July 31, 1950. A rivalry between the mixed bloods and full bloods, one that had been brewing for many years, caused the two groups to divide and set up their own individual programs. In 1954 the federal government decided to "terminate" the mixed bloods. The termination of the full bloods was supposed to follow, but it never happened. As a result the mixed blood Utes soon found themselves on the worst end of poverty. They did not understand how this happened to them and like the terminated Paiutes, they never understood the legal language that led up to their termination and they were also too poor to contest it.

Dennis G. Chappabitty serves as the attorney for the "mixed-blood" Utes. In a letter to Senator Orin Hatch (R-UT) he wrote, "On November 4, 2002, the mixed blood Uinta Utes filed an action in the U. S. District Court, District of Columbia, alleging that the U. S. Department of the Interior failed to properly implement the "Ute Partition Act" thereby illegally stripping them of their Indian status. On January 27, 2006, their case was dismissed on the basis of their failure to file within the six-year statute of limitations. We will appeal the Court's dismissing the Felter case to the U. S. Court of Appeals."

Chappabitty said, "Our government criticizes other nations for their bad human rights records. The socially destructive, backward and abhorrent policies of Apartheid in South Africa, Jim Crow in the South and Communism in the Soviet Bloc are dead. Yet this Nation's fraudulent termination of the mixed-blood Uinta Utes remains alive as one of the civilized world's darkest stains where the rich and powerful dominated the weak and intimidated the poor and defenseless Indians."

Oranna B. Felter, a member of the terminated tribe, the lead plaintiff in the legal battle to get the rights of the Uinta restored, wrote recently, "I'm one of the original terminated 490 and I was there when termination started. I was 11 years old when we were terminated and I am now 61 years old. When I was younger I didn't understand what had happened to us. I was raised knowing who I was and living as an Indian. Then when termination hit the Mixed Blood Uintas like a bomb in the Nevada desert in the 1950s, it totally ripped the hearts and souls out of most of our people."

What happened to the Mixed Blood Uintas is an ongoing story. Tribal members like Oranna Felter have been fighting all of their adult lives to correct this grievous wrong. For more information on this case you can contact Dennis B. Chappabitty at P. O. Box 292122, Sacramento, CA 95829.

Termination is an ugly word especially when it involves the future hopes and dreams of a people. It is a word we no longer need to use in Indian country.

Chaos is relative

By Dr. Jim Wilson

I am back from a month-long vacation and am generally pleased to learn all is well. By saying all is well I mean all looks familiar and I know I am back where I was before, not necessarily where I belong. The world is still in chaos and probably will be tomorrow and the day after.

The Sunday paper tells me Molly Ivans thinks the Rs are all liars and crooks, George Will thinks the Ds can't be trusted with National Security, Bruce Whalen thinks Stephanie is too pretty to represent SD, the Oglalas are shuffling their political deck using the same old cards, Janklow and Daschle are trying to put a "clothesline" (it's a football term) hit on DME's Schieffer and the leaves are yellowed and falling.

Living alone gives me an occasional opportunity to shut out the cacophony (look it up) of my environment and briefly get in touch with my feelings before continuing the chaotic downstream rush amidst the fallen leaves and dreams of my fellow species. When an adult has time for contemplation it is likely that their earliest years will be recalled as a sheltered period yielding mostly pleasant memories, and so it has been with me. But for many this is not the case. My eleven years in Pine Ridge Boarding School are recalled with generally positive experiences.

I also recall that among my classmates there were some who had been orphaned, abandoned and abused and did not find in the boarding schools any better treatment. I soon learned that the safest place in that environment was near the middle of the line, giving my full attention and maintaining a clear-eyed, positive appearance. Not standing out in any way did not draw the ire of the person carrying out the orders of another person carrying out the orders of …. Well, I hope you get the picture.

Another important lesson learned was the best outcome for an occupying force is to get the inmates to run the concentration camp! And, of course, when the inmates begin naming the streets, numbering the cells, planting trees and mowing the lawns, you've won!

There has been much e-mail, many letters and numerous phone calls and personal conversations regarding my writing about the chain-link fence at OCS. Not a single tribal person endorsed "da fence" so for now I must conclude that it was a "miracle." But wait, I did not ask the students. Maybe they demanded "da fence" for protection. Will check.

My e-mail barrage is amazing with the endless offers to get rich without effort. Only problem is that they all want money and it takes effort to get the money to give them so they can show me how they suckered me. Especially grating is the promise to show me how to benefit from the mortgage foreclosure sufferings of my neighbors.

Next comes the many promises to show me how to get something for nothing from my government, for a fee.

While I was 'out-of-pocket,' so to speak, I recalled some earlier experiences as a beginning school teacher. I started my career as an 8th grade teacher at Eagle Butte in the fall of 1959. I spent two years there and learned more than I taught and I always thank those students when I hear from them.

My second teaching experience was teaching fifth grade at the Second Mesa Day School on the Hopi Indian Reservation for two years prior to my getting a Doctoral Fellowship to Arizona State University. The Hopi perception of education is unique; they truly see education as a tool to use in their lives, not an obligation forced on them, and therefore it does not interfere in any way with the maintenance of their cultural traditions.

Teaching is a noble occupation which demands great commitment and is rewarded with a combination of dollars and satisfaction. Public support and harassment of education runs in cycles. Recently the Rs have had control and have imposed the No Child Left Behind philosophy which is a one-size-fits-all madness designed to sell tests and canned teach-to-the-test materials. Totally absent from this philosophy are recognition of all forms of local control and individuality.

Any test which requires any reading is a reading test. Any reading test is a vocabulary (word) test and any vocabulary test is a cultural test. The distinguishing characteristics of a culture are the words assigned to objects used in a culture. Take, for instance, the tools used by the carpenter, the plumber and the surgeon. Or those used by the early Sioux, the early white western pioneer or the early southern slave owner. A simple test would be to inventory everything in the homes of a farmer, a city lawyer and a college professor and then alphabetize the names of the items and see what a difference there would be! Now, take their children and give them a written test using those words and see what you get. I dare say there would be some surprises.

The big thing for many ultra-conservatives today is to say that we do not give our kids enough homework. It seems that making kids hate school is immaterial. Like many things, there is a proper use of homework, but the quantity is not the issue. Purpose and quality are the issues. The primary purpose of homework is to reinforce lessons taught and in most cases that takes little demonstration. Assigning reading before discussion has very limited purposes because a major sequence of teaching is the proper introduction and connecting of the material to the previous foundations laid and that is usually done at the point closest to the discussion. A lesson of history, for example, may be very effectively taught by a three-way discussion (led by the teacher) involving teacher, student and classmates as a continuation of a set of circumstances well understood.

We often forget that things change and that is the primary cause of our continuing sense of chaos; we are always in the process of change at different times and at different rates in different places. A recent flood of changes in religious groups and thinking is an example of how the chaos almost seems organized and when taken as a whole these changes seem to represent a multi-generational updating of acceptable beliefs.

Are not the Muslims, Jews and Christians all cut from the same cloth? Will un-baptized Catholic babies get a new status? Will Islam spread with or without the sword? Will the Jews always believe that the Promised Land is a literal, physical place?

Chaos is relative. It depends largely on where one is and the perspective of each of us is colored by our experiences. Everything we believe is the result of a philosophy we have developed by many processes, most of which we are not overtly aware of or are the result of intentional deliberations.

My experience is that the greatest philosophers are the 3 and 4 years olds who endlessly ask Why? We should all ask why? And when we get an acceptable explanation from our own thinking, or from others then we should hang in there until a better explanation comes about.

In case you are interested, as a matter of fact, there is a science of studying the non-chaotic nature of chaos. Cool, huh? E-mail me : docjims@aol.com.

Little Wound wins defensive battle with Thorpes

Red Cloud cruises past Crow Creek

Chamberlain shuts out Falcons

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

KYLE/STEPHAN - Brice Hornbeck, a junior defensive back for Little Wound, intercepted a Pine Ridge pass late in the second quarter and returned it to the Thorpe's three yard line setting up Shilo Pierce's winning three yard touchdown run in Little Wound's 14-6 Homecoming win over Pine Ridge on Friday.

Both team's had a lot riding on the game as they looked ahead to the West River Conference championship and the playoffs, defense on both teams stepped up to make every yard a battle. Hornbeck opened the game with a 55 yard kick-off return but the Thorpes stiffened up on defense and the ball ended up being turned over on downs. The Mustang defense bent but did not break as they held Pine Ridge down on their first three drives.

Little Wound finally opened things up as Johnny Cloud hit Shilo Pierce on a 20 yard pass and after an incompletion came right back with a 22 yard pass to TJ McCauley; Pierce ran it in from the three for the first of two TD runs from three yards out. The point after kick was blocked and the Mustangs led it 6-0.

Shilo Pierce, Little Wound's senior running back, has his sweep around the end cut short by Pine Ridge's Dave Michaud during the Little Wound Homecoming game on Friday in Kyle which the Mustangs won 14-6.

"This was a big game for us," said Darrell Hunter, Mustang head coach, "we wanted to maintain our number two position in the power points in 11A, Region 3; our defense really stepped up and held the Thorpes every time they got close to scoring."

After an exchange of possessions, Pine Ridge marched down the field and had first and goal from the four and a half yard line. After four plays, Pine Ridge was still on the four yard line and Little Wound took over on downs following an outstanding goal line stand. On the first play from scrimmage, Cloud lined up in a shotgun formation at the back end of the end zone and hoped to gain some yards with a pass play only to have Dave "Bulldawg" Michaud intercept the ball at the 10 yard line and run it back for a touchdown. With 3:04 left in the first half, the game was tied up at 6-6.

Pine Ridge stopped Little Wound's next drive and with less than a minute on the clock in the first half decided to try and put some points on the board before the half ended. Harley Cortier tried to hit DJ Big Crow up the middle on a pass and after the ball was deflected, Hornbeck intercepted and ran it back to the Pine Ridge three yard line. Pierce ran it over from the three and added a successful run on the two point conversion to give Little Wound a 14-6 lead.

Defense dominated the second half as neither team found the end zone. Pine Ridge lost their main offensive threat when Michaud went down with an ankle injury mid-way through the third quarter. "Bulldawg" finished with 101 yards on 15 carries and scored Pine Ridge's only touchdown on an interception return.

"You could say all kinds of things like we weren't ready to play, the coaching staff didn't prepare the team, we didn't execute on offense or we made too many mistakes," said Dave Michaud, Pine Ridge head coach, "but more than anything else we just got out-played and now we have to play strong the next two games and hope we have enough power points to make the playoffs."

Pierce led the way for Little Wound with 10 carries for 34 yards and two touchdowns and a two point conversion and caught two passes for 28 yards. Pine Ridge kept the pressure on Johnny Cloud all day long, Cloud finished with five completions out of 12 attempts for 77 yards and two interceptions. In addition to Michaud, Wayne Trueblood had 11 carries for 42 yards and Louis Ramos had nine carries for 36 yards.

"Once again penalties hurt us," said Hunter, "Johnny Cloud had a nice 20 yard pass to a wide open TJ McCauley in the end zone that was called back for an illegal block in the back."

Hornbeck led the Mustangs on defense with 11 tackles and two interceptions and was helped by freshman Oren Three Stars who finished with nine tackles and forced two fumbles.

Little Wound moved their record to 5-1 and travel to Todd County on Friday night while Pine Ridge evens their record at 3-3 and will host Crow Creek on Friday night.

Red Cloud runs over the Chieftains

Five different players crossed the goal line for Red Cloud as the Crusaders opened up a 41-0 lead over Crow Creek Friday at Stephan with six touchdowns on the ground and one through the air in a 41-6 win for their fifth win of the season against one loss.

Wade O'Bryan, a sophomore fullback, opened the Red Cloud scoring with his first touchdown of his high school career on a four yard run. Billy Scott, the top runner in the state this season, added a two yard TD run before the end of the first quarter.

Carl Swallow, a freshman running back, opened the second quarter with a seven yard run for a TD and AB Morgan closed out the first half with a 35 yard strike to Christian McGhee for a TD.

Scott scored his second touchdown of the game on a nine yard slant off tackle in the third quarter and James Bush added a one yard TD run. Sang Jun Park kicked five out of six extra points.

Scott finished with 20 carries for 79 yards and two touchdowns, Carl Swallow carried the ball 10 times for 48 yards and a TD while AB Morgan completed four out of ten passes for 69 yards and a touchdown. On defense, Andrew Twiss led the way for the Crusaders with 10 tackles and Lenny Lone Hill finished with five tackles, one sack and a fumble recovery.

Red Cloud is now 5-1 and hosts Bennett County on Friday afternoon, Crow Creek is 2-4 and travels to Pine Ridge.

Corps of Engineers undergo cultural enhancement at Ghost Hawk Park

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

Dr. Wayne Evans (R) chats with Jim Waddell during a recent cultural enhancement seminar held at Ghost Hawk Park on the Rosebud.

ROSEBUD - A diverse group of U. S. Corp of Engineers and other members from the U. S. Army, Federal Aviation Administration and the Environmental Protection Agency underwent a three and half day course in cultural training at Ghost Hawk Park last week. The course was offered through Valcon Tech LLC which is headed by President Vern C. Vallie and which is located in Aberdeen.

The core group of 16 professionals arrived at Ghost Hawk Park at the height of the fall foliage peaking on the Rosebud while the park had just closed for the season. The curriculum for the three day 'hands-on' seminar was designed by Lisa Short Bull.

Vallie said that his company is a natural gas company and after September 11 he created a training group that would help to diversify his company's offerings. He said, "We had to diversify and we went back to what I knew. We designed a training group, Valcon Training Group. Lisa put it together. I hired Lisa in January. She did the data base and designed thirty five enhancement programs."

Vallie further explained that the cultural enhancement program was written up in proposal form and submitted as a bid in July to the federal government and his firm won the contract. He said, "We will do this three of four times a year. It was well received. We would like to offer it to banks, companies and anyone who works with Indian people." He said, "My idea is to get people out of the classroom environment and out in nature. There is more benefit that way."

The practical insights gained during the training session were designed to get the students out of their job environments and into the field in order to get some exposure to the Lakota culture which is very much alive and dynamic.

Kyle Wright, affectionately named "Canli" by one of the course instructors, Dr. Wayne Evans said, "It helps people to appreciate Native tribes. To open their eyes and to listen to the way that people want to be treated."

The cadre of Lakota instructors who lead the group included some rather accomplished educators, artists, and language teachers. Dr. Wayne Evans who retired after 38 years at the University of South Dakota gave instruction about the Lakota language, team building and protocol used in camp and in the sweat lodge.

Jerome Kills Small explained the significance of the sweat lodge while well known artist, Vic Runnels, spoke of the role of art, storytelling and music in Lakota life.

Dr. Mark Daniels also spoke of the values and beliefs of various tribes, while instructors from the Lakota Studies Department at Sinte Gleska University also presented. Victor Douville, Ione Quigly, Duane Hollow Horn Bear and Albert White Hat, Sr. spoke about Lakota values, language, use of Native plants and the responsibilities of the extended family.

The group was also intro-

KYLE - The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development has awarded the Lakota Funds. of Kyle. organization a $300,000 grant under the Rural Housing and Economic Development Program.

"This funding will assist the Lakota Funds organization in their community, business and economic development efforts on Pine Ridge," said Sen. John Thune in a press release. "Investing in these important efforts is critical to providing greater opportunities to the residents of Pine Ridge."

The Department of House also awarded the Oglala Sioux Tribe Partnership for Housing a $300,000 grant under the Rural Housing and Economic Development Program.

Pine Ridge drug ring members convicted

RAPID CITY (AP) - Five people who were accused of running a major cocaine ring on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation have been convicted in U.S. District Court in Rapid City.

Geraldine Blue Bird, Colin Spotted Elk, Marvella Richards, Flint Thomas Red Feather and Rusty Richards face a minimum of 10 years in prison when they are sentenced.

Blue Bird and Spotted Elk, who is Blue Bird's son, could get as much as life behind bars.

Seventeen people were indicted in the investigation. Most pleaded guilty, and several testified against the ringleaders.

Authorities said the drug ring made at least $1 million by selling more than 20 kilograms of cocaine since 2002.

The jury deliberated four hours.

Charges included conspiracy to distribute cocaine and marijuana, and possession of firearms in drug trafficking.

Members of the ring were arrested following a Dec. 21 drug bust at a Rapid City motel. Authorities were tipped after someone smelled marijuana smoke coming from a room. A search yielded 11/2 pounds of cocaine, guns, ammunition, $16,519 in cash and drug paraphernalia.

Vallie said, "Be aware of cultural differences and consider other options" is one of the ideals of the course and that he was pleased with the instructors. The concept for the course for the Corp of Engineers was envisioned by Jim Waddell from Atlanta, Ga.

He said he was in his seventh training seminar and that, "The course is meant to teach environmental and cultural resource ethics by coming and listening."

State reports increase intestinal illnesses, hand washing urged

PIERRE - An outbreak of cryptosporidiosis has health officials reminding South Dakotans to practice good personal hygiene. Eighty-six cases of the intestinal illness have been reported in 23 counties through the end of September, compared to 31 for all of 2005.

There have been no cases of E-coli linked to the consumption of spinach as in other areas; however, in addition to cryptosporidiosis there has also been a number of shigellosis, which is a diarrheal disease. The state saw 233 cases through September, compared to 131 cases last year.

The state did see a number of E-coli cases numbering 35 through September of this year compared to 29 cases in 2005.

"Good hand-washing is the single most important thing people can to do to prevent the spread of not only cryptosporidiosis, but other diarrheal illnesses as well," said Secretary of Health Doneen Hollingsworth.

Hand-washing is especially important after using the toilet, changing diapers, gardening, handling pets or other animals, caring for infected persons, and before handling or eating food.

Cryptosporidiosis is caused by a microscopic parasite called Cryptosporidium. People become infected by drinking water or eating food containing the cysts, or eggs of the parasite. Infection is also transmitted through direct contact with the stools of infected animals or humans and by hand-to-mouth transfer of cysts from contaminated surfaces. The major symptoms are abdominal cramps and watery diarrhea.

Individuals who think they may have cryptosporidiosis should see their doctor about whether treatment is needed. Most people with healthy immune systems will recover without treatment.

Thirty-four percent of this year's cryptosporidiosis cases occurred in Yankton County that saw an increase of 219 percent.

Hollingsworth said the department is also reporting significant numbers of cases of other diarrheal illnesses.

There were also 172 cases of campylobacteriosis compared to 244 cases in 2005 and 61 giardiasis cases through September compared to 118 cases in 2005. And, there were 111 cases of salomonella compared to 160 last year.

For more information about these illnesses, their spread and prevention look for the click the disease fact sheets "quick link" at the Department of Health web site, http://www.state.sd.-us/doh/.

Golden West gives $12,500 to OLC and KILI Radio

KYLE - Oglala Lakota College received $10,000 from Golden West Telecommunications as the first payment of a three year pledge of $30,000. This grant will assist the college in meeting the match agreed upon by the Johnson Scholarship Foundation and OLC.

"The three year commitment by Golden West to the Johnson Scholarship Foundation is a natural expansion of the scholarship program that we already have in place for graduating high school seniors," said Golden West General Manager and CEO George Strandell pointing to the $1,000 scholarships the company annually makes at 44 high schools throughout its service area.

"We recognize the importance that education plays within our own business and hope that the additional scholarships will help the College expand the role it plays in providing a skilled workforce for the Pine Ridge Reservation," concluded Strandell.

OLC will receive $200,000 annually from the Johnson Scholarship Foundation if OLC can match this amount with $300,000 resulting in $800,000 funding from JSF over a period of four years starting in 2005. OLC was able to meet the matching amount in the first year by raising the required $300,000 by December 2005.

The endowment set up as the Johnson Scholarship Foundation Endowment at OLC will provide scholarship assistance to OLC business and/or entrepreneurship students with financial need.

"We are extremely pleased that Golden West recognizes the importance of scholarships to our students." Stated OLC President Thomas Shortbull. "The graduating students who will receive their degree with the help of this scholarship will provide the Oglala Nation with business managers and entrepreneurs in all areas." President Shortbull went on to say.

In 2005, OLC embarked on Phase IV of the Rebuilding the Lakota Nation through Education campaign by announcing that a goal has been set to raise $6 million for Faculty Endowments and $5 million for student scholarships.

OLC's goal is to raise these funds by 2011. The Johnson Scholarship Foundation's matching grant gives OLC a big boost in reaching the goal of $5 million in student scholarships by 2011.

Northwest South Dakota uranium study to expand

By Carson Walker
Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - The federal government plans to pay for additional studies around Custer National Forest to determine how far contamination has spread from old uranium mines near Ludlow in northwest South Dakota.

Tests show levels of arsenic, uranium and other contaminants in concentrations higher than what occurs naturally on 13 bluffs. But only now are studies being done to log how much of that pollution made its way onto surrounding land and water.

Samples taken around the North Cave Hills found that high levels of uranium and arsenic in surface water and sediment ponds are mostly limited to the land around the property owned by the U.S. Forest Service, according to a report on the findings.

The contaminants are escaping the 1960s mine sites but dissipate as they flow downstream and diminish to natural levels roughly 4 to 6 miles away, said Jim Stone, assistant professor in the Department of Civil and Environmental Engineering at the School of Mines & Technology in Rapid City.

``It's limited to this area. That's good news,'' he said.

But Stone said he and other researchers from the School of Mines and Oglala Lakota College have been unable to test how far contaminants have been carried by the wind.

That can't be done until it stops raining long enough for the particles to be carried and won't be done next year, he said.

Stone plans to go over the report on the findings so far next Wednesday at a public meeting in Ludlow.

Researchers will now come up with a cleanup plan for the contamination on the land around the mines, said Laurie Walters-Clark with the U.S. Forest Service in Camp Crook.

``We have found that the sediment ponds _ although they were working for what they were built for, which is to catch sediments _ they're not stopping the constituents of concern. It puts a red light saying that we need to continue to work on this and stop the sediments from moving,'' she said.

Estimates put the total bill at more than $20 million to clean up the Cold War-era mining operations.

The government is working on an agreement to cover the cost with the company that mined in the North Cave Hills, Tronox, formerly Kerr-McGee Chemical, Walters-Clark said.

Cleanup can start when that agreement is reached, she said.

``It is now progressing. It's taken a long time,'' Walters-Clark said.

Meantime, the federal government has approved new studies to determine the extent of contamination in the nearby South Cave Hills and Slim Buttes areas, she said.

Some Harding County and Standing Rock Indian Reservation residents have said they suspect dust and water from the mines is causing cancer and other illnesses.

Charmaine White Face of Rapid City, coordinator of Defenders of the Black Hills, said the report that contamination is limited to the mining area is premature. The drought prevents researchers from seeing how far uranium is carried when the waters are running high, she said.

Her group hopes to do an independent study by finding a willing university or raising enough money to hire someone.

``If it comes out the same as the state, then we'll believe them. But if it doesn't, then it raises questions,'' White Face said.

Johnson asks FEMA to move trailers to Indian Country

WASHINGTON - Senator Tim Johnson (D-SD) recently sent a letter to the Federal Emergency Management Agency's Director, David Paulison, asking him to begin moving the unused trailers that are currently being stored in Hope, Arkansas. FEMA was empowered through the Homeland Security Appropriations bill to start relocating the trailers to areas of Indian Country where some are homeless or under housed.

Johnson said, "My colleagues and I sent them a clear message in the Homeland Security bill, to house people with these trailers. It's time for FEMA to act on that directive. While these trailers are not ideal housing, they fill a housing need that is only getting worse."

The law requires that the houses be directed to tribes through coordination with the Department of the Interior.

Originally, the dire need for housing in Indian Country did not meet the criteria of an emergency as defined by FEMA, but when the President signed the Homeland Security Appropriations bill it cleared the way for distribution of the homes.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I hope that all is going well for you. I read your column in the paper all the time and I really think that you give good advice and you help people to think about their own situations. I respect your opinion and give what you write a lot of thought.

I have situations that kind of have me stuck in the a rut and I really need your advice. First of all, I am at a point in my life where I need some direction and maybe it is right in front of me but I just don't see it. My main goal in life is to finally go to college and be successful.

I feel like I deserve it. I look towards the future and I want to be able to help those who are in need with my education what ever that may be.

Second of all, Anna, I am involved with a man who is incarcerated and I have been corresponding with him for many months now, he is getting out soon and wants me to just pack up and move to where he will eventually be released. I care about this man with all my heart and he is always on my mind.

I believe in my heart that he wants to change and that he truly wants to live better then what he was used to. Although all those feelings are true for him, I feel as though I am putting myself out there and I am kind of scared. I have never met this man in person and I am also scared that I will not be up to his expectations, we almost come from the same cut out meaning in our lives, our families and our spiritual beliefs. I just don't want to lose him but I feel like we are moving too fast and that maybe we should get to know each other more. I know for him, coming to face reality is not going to be easy, but I want to be there to help him.

So Anna what I am asking is this, what will become of us? Will we finally be able to be together and face this world or do you see us going our separate ways and maybe someday our paths will meet? Do you see me leaving the place where I am now at or staying here? What is my direction? I would really appreciate it if you could give me your much needed advice. It is greatly appreciated.

Shoud I go or should I stay?

Dear Should I go:

The future is really open for you, with two major choices determining the quality of experience you wish to have. One choice - the choice to go where this man is creates a fairly rough experience. Please change that intended direction if you wish to have an easier and better life. Allow him to demonstrate his ability to live in a better way, to create a good career life for himself, and demonstrate his ability to stay straight, sober, kind, and loving. You don't need to rescue him. Allow him the time to show you that he is as good as his word.

There is, unfortunately, a trend among inmates to create a fantasy pledge to better living and say exactly what any woman would love to hear in their correspondance. They are so isolated from the good balance of affection and approval that we all need to live happier lives that they create a "mental" life in letters - one, unfortunately, that most of them cannot live up to once they are released. The temptations that got them into trouble in the first place (usually drugs and alcohol) still exist outside those prison walls. The strength of character not to return to those old enticements in the face of being jobless, depressed, broke and independent is very difficult.

The prison system (crime and punishment) falls very short on achieving good outcomes with its punitive philosophy. There is not a good network to create viable work and social system support for ex prisoners.

Finding reasonable employment is the biggest obstacle for anyone with a prison record. This stress pushes people in a direction of "hanging out," which creates the circle that leads right back to prison doors. The lack of therapy or healing programs for healing of the emotional, spiritual, mental and self-image issues of prisoners and newly released prisoners attracts back to the prisoner the same cycles of behavior responses that got him into trouble in the first place. Ex prisoners usually carry a great deal of anger within them.

This anger is subjective, by that I mean that it is a personal experience position ignited by feeling injustices and prejudices in their lives. This anger fired by frustration leads to personally destructive and societally destructive behaviors. I see this man as wanting a normal life. I see him wanting the perfect and fantasy life of "the little woman" to stand beside him, cook his meals, do his laundry, pay his rent, and have spontaneous wanton and crazy sex at his beckon call. In return, he will protect her (jealously control her life), be a good father to her children (an unwanted and unasked for authoritarian disciplinarian), provide well for her (make sure she gets to work on time and comes straight home to take care of him and the kids), show the world he is proud to be with her (mark her as his territory with a few broken teeth and hickies), tell her how beautiful she is (well, with the broken teeth she ain't as pretty as she used to be, but he will joke that his foot won't even make an imprint in her fat a---), and they will both feel successful (he has a home to brag about to his buddies; where drug deals can go down and where he can come home drunk, beat his wife, eat his supper, allow his child-molester buddies in to visit, and create the chaos externally that he resides within emotionally).

He'll also be proud of "their" new car, which he will wreck (its only a matter of when). Oh yeah, and best of all, his drug-buddie girlfriends will start calling you when they need to find him. These lovely women really "understand" him, and they don't "judge" him.

They are WILD in the sack (while transmitting various STD's) and hey - eventually - they are so close that they can share needles.

Please don't join this cycle of abuse. A man newly released from prison really needs a long adjustment time to recapture his spirit; develop independence, learn to trust his world, his God, and himself. He doesn't need any sense (false or not) of extra financial burdens or other people's insecurities.

Give him the time he needs to find his life. Otherwise, the scernarios above that I have depicted are the ones you will participate in. Please have more respect for yourself and don't join him because you don't quite believe me - let time happen and wait and see. It's a lot more difficult to get out of the mess I see than it is to prevent it altogether.

If you don't run off with him you will go to school. That is the best decision. The other way you will go to school too - but you won't begin until you have lived through about 10 years of cyclical hell. The focus of your education seems to be to help abused children. Don't let them be yours. make the right decision - change your life now.

Dear Anna,

I have a few questions that I need to ask. How do you get over someone betraying you? I feel like I can't forgive the person that I thought I knew. I still feel angry and I often fantasize about ways to get back at them. Also, I have a beautiful child and I was wondering what do you see for her father and I? I miss him, or at least I think I do. Thank you for your time. I love your column.

Feeling betrayed

Dear Feeling betrayed:

We, as human beings, on our paths to becoming the best self we can be, all have to learn forgiveness. I have had to face forgiveness thousands of times in my life. Anger and revenge are the stuff cancer is made of. We have enough problems in our life not to call this personal anger monster into our bodies by not healing our emotional injuries.Here is the way I have found that works for me and for any that wish to apply it into their lives, I call it A New Perspective:

Belive in God (the Creator)

Know that everything is in Divine (God's) Order

Therefore, what you have just experienced is for the "highest good."

Knowing that, understand that the ending of this relationship is as it should be - the relationship just wasn't meant to be.

Why? Because, ultimately, he is not the best mate for you, nor you for him.

Most relationships that end are symptomized with betrayal. It is one way to end a relationship that isn't working or meant to work.

He ended it. Thank him for that and release yourself from obsessive-compulsive, co-dependent behaviors. Look at who he really is, take your rose-colored glasses off. He did not treat you with respect nor honor your heart. Why would you want him in your life. Accept that he is who he is.

Release him to his life, and thank him for releasing you to yours. You just want to ensure that he is hurt like you were hurt. You want to inflict pain, because you really believe that he injured you.

Release the concept of personal injury. He may have hurt your feelings and caused you to examine who he is, who you are, and the dream you projected into your future. He also gives you the opportunity, right now, to create a new, better-balanced dream.

Accept responsibility for your part in the relationship. Look honestly at your own behavior, the things you said, the fights and arguments you provoked, the disrespect you showed him for his choices - where did you expect it to go?

Accept what is - IS. This is the way things are, right now, period. Therefore, they must be in Divine Order, and therefore for my highest good. Take charge of your emotional house by releasing the control you want to take of him. You matter, right here and right now. He does not matter, because he is irrelevant to your right now - he is GONE. Accept he is gone and that is good.

Outrage with somebody elses' behavior is self-indulgent pity. "Oh, woe is me, I am sooooo injured. He is such a bastard. He HURT me...boo, hooo, hooo. Hooey: He did you a favor by releasing himself from your life. Thank him. You were not meant in the long run to be together and it is for everybody's highest good that he got gone.

Release your control issues. The future is not about control, it is about flow. Today's actions, thoughts and prayers are manifest now by attitude and tomorrow by activity.

You create your own future, and unless you want to self-indulge yourself into constant chaos be grateful for whatever is on your plate today. It all is as it should be - line up with God, try and imagine why it is for your highest good, get there in your heart, accept today as good - and poof, the anger and revenge are G - O - N - E.

You are released from the task of forgiveness by acceptance that all is well. Therefore, the sense of personal injury is gone and there is nothing to forgive anybody for- everything is okay, just the way it is.

Dear Anna,

I need your advice. You see there is this girl that I have a big crush on.

But she don`t know that I like her. And I need to know if she likes me.

So please tell me what should I do.

Indian love

Dear Indian Love:

She knows you like her. Your gentle smile tells her that everytime you see her.

She is very shy, and even the thought of holding hands makes her blush. Talk to her as much as you can. Listen to what she has to say (once she begins to talk).

Become good friends.

Take your time. Wait and see.

It will be good.

Good Luck.

She was very proud of her Irish heritage along with being made an honorary member of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe.

She attended rural schools in Dewey County. She married Sylvester Garreau on July 24, 1937, in Dupree. Babe and Sylvester spent three years working for the Civilian Conservation Corps building dams and roads on Cheyenne River Indian Reservation. After work with the Corps, Babe and Sylvester began their ranching operation thirteen miles south of Timber Lake.

They ranched together for 44 years. During this time they brought two daughters into the world, Donna Mae and Monica Lynn.

After Sylvester's death in 1982, Babe continued to ranch until shortly before her death, with the help of her family and wonderful neighbors.

Babe was incredibly proud of her ranch, her cattle and her fortitude to persevere after her husband's death. She enjoyed nothing more that taking her grandchildren and great-grandchildren out in her pickup to the pasture to check her cows and to educate them about ranching.

She loved to visit with friends over coffee at her kitchen talk and was always known as a wonderful cook. Anyone who visited Babe in her home never left hungry. In addition to ranching, Babe was employed as a Green Thumb Area Supervisor for 13 years.

She is survived by two daughters, Danna Mae (Larry) Anderson of Eagle Butte, Monica (DeWayne) Schmidt of Rapid City, eight grandchildren, 13 great-grandchildren, four great-great-grandchildren; two sisters, Elda Whalen of Rainier, WA, and Zeta Raisl of Billings, Mont.

Effective Friday, December 1, 2006 the Rosebud Comprehensive Health Facility will be implementing and enforcing a Tobacco-Free Policy in an effort to protect the health and safety of all I.H.S. employees, contractors and visitors.

Research indicates that smoking is the major preventable cause of illness and premature death in the United States. Over 400,000 people die annually as a result of tobacco use. Exposure to second-hand smoke is linked to a variety of negative health consequences and is responsible for approximately 3,000 lung cancer deaths annually among non-smokers in the United States.

The use of tobacco will be prohibited on all I.H.S. - operated properties. This policy applies to all I.H.S. employees, clients, contractors and visitors.

EXCEPTIONS:

1.Traditional Beliefs and Ceremonial Practices: The I.H.S. continues to recognize the value and efficacy of patient's traditional beliefs and ceremonial practices. The use of tobacco for ceremonial purposes is allowed in the designated traditional healing room, including any space designated for a ceremony, or in a patient's private hospital room.

2. Space Not Operated by the I.H.S.: Any spaces outside the leased areas of multi-tenant facilities not solely operated by the I.H.S.

3. Residential Property: Any I.H.S. residential property such as Government housing quarters.

ENFORCEMENT:

Managers and supervisors at all levels will be responsible for the enforcement of this policy and for documenting verbal warnings.

A. Employee Violations: Employees who fail to comply with this policy may be subjected to appropriate disciplinary action.
B. Visitors and Patient Violations: Visitor and patient violations Shall be handled accordingly.

1)The visitor or patient is to be informed politely of the I.H.S. Tobacco-Free Policy.

2)Security personnel shall ask patients or visitors who refuse to comply with the policy to leave the property and shall document the incident

The implementation of the Tobacco-Free Policy is a component of a larger initiative to improve the health and wellness of our employees, patients, and visitors.

All "No-Smoking" signs will be removed and replaced with new signs stating that "No Tobacco Products" may be used in the tobacco-free environment.

Information provided to you by the I.H.S. Rosebud comprehensive Health Care Facility because we care about You and Your Loved Ones.

OSL Housing moves ahead on two new projects

79 homes between two projects to be completed within a year

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - "You know we could use 1,000 new homes, our population continues to grow at a high rate," said Ken Lone Elk, executive director of Oglala Sioux Lakota Housing, "we are finishing up 27 home ownership homes in what we are calling the log house project and we are finalizing arrangements for the 52 Ellsworth units; it is just nowhere enough to meet the need on Pine Ridge Reservation."

For the last several weeks, travelers across the reservation have witnessed the construction of the log house project homes; according to Lone Elk, each district has three homes. The houses are about 1,200 square feet with three bedrooms and a foundation/crawl space.

"We have had to deal with a number of problems, more rain than usual, vendors that were slow to deliver," said Lone Elk, "we are hoping to get the first one done soon and have all 27 done by the end of December."

The original project was funded by a bond and included 45 low rent scattered and 45 home ownership. The 45 low rent scattered were built under a force account process and by the time they were completed there was enough money left for 27 home ownership.

"We would still like to plan on all 45 of the home ownership but the additional 18 will be built based on the availability of funding," said Lone Elk.

Lone Elk presented four plans to the board of directors on how to proceed with the 52 Ellsworth units that have been sitting at the old housing yard in Kyle. The plan accepted by the board included interested

Victoria Chipps celebrates 90 years

WANBLEE - Surrounded by many of her family and friends, Victoria Chipps of Wanblee, celebrated her 90th birthday at the Wanblee Community Building on Oct. 12..

Originally from the Lodgeskin family near White River in Mission, Victoria married Ellis Chipps (deceased), the composer of the Sioux National Anthem, in 1942. Together they had three sons, Charles, Phillip (deceased), and Benjamin Godfrey. She has 35 grandchildren and 48 great-grandchildren and has lived in Wanblee for 64 years.

Victoria is also the author of Pray from Your Heart, a book about her life and experiences with Lakota spirituality, which sells locally at the Prairie Edge Bookstore in Rapid City.

The food was delicious and plentiful and included fried chicken, beef soup, fry bread, corn, potato salad, blueberry wojapi, and two birthday cakes. Before blowing out the birthday candles, Victoria thanked everyone for coming and said, "I hope you had enough to eat." She then asked everybody, "Are you having a good time?" to which they all answered loudly, "Yes!"

Rosebud Casino revenue up from last year

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Chris Bussey, General Manager of the Rosebud Casino provided a regular update on the casino budget and operations to the RST council on Tuesday morning. The update was broadcast to the Sicangu Nation over KINI FM radio in St. Francis.

He began by noting that the format of his report had changed somewhat. Slot machine revenue was 'up' compared to last. September gross slot income amounted to $961, 162.00 compared to $930,208 dollars during September of last year. The total gross revenue was $1,171,265 dollars, while that figure was $1,131,867 dollars last year. The check to RST amounted to $161,000 dollars.

There were some operating costs that had increased, while the check to RST was up 8 percent. The wages represented 25.8 percent of the budget and Bussey noted that that fact meant that the casino was headed in the right direction.

He then, cited some computer IT issues that needed to be corrected, and some upgrades that amounted to a considerable amount of money. The servers for the new kiosks that will be used by Players Club members were included in that expense. He also pointed out that there were a group of consultants from Minnesota who examined the cage operations and marketing at no cost, however, mileage and rooms had to be provided to them. The consultants hope that the casino will utilize them in the future to fix the problems that they identified.

The casino budget apparently is being prepared for approval and will be taken to RST early next week. Bussey explained that a couple of thefts had occurred at the casino from within; the surveillance camera had recorded the incidents. The individuals had been dealt with, while one had been reported to the state gaming commission and both will be barred from the premises. One had been turned over to Rosebud Law Enforcement Services.

Apparently, some individuals have been eating at the Rosebud Room buffet and leaving the area without paying. Bussey said they will now have customers pay before eating and the new policy was evident during the evening dinner hours Tuesday night.

Antelope council representative, Cyril "Whitey" Scott asked that some form of transportation in the form of a cart be afforded to the handicap that may be unable to walk from the parking lot into the establishment. A community member asked that handicapped space be set aside in the bingo hall.

RST council representative,

Weston sworn in as new FST chairman

FLANDREAU - Newly elected Flandreau Santee Sioux tribal Chairman, Josh Weston, has been sworn in after having his candidacy challenged in tribal court and in Appellate Court. He won both challenges. Weston won over Mark Allen in the Aug. 1 election by a count of 122 votes to Allen's 109 votes.

Weston was sworn in to office via teleconference by Rosebud Sioux tribal judge, Sherman Marshall from Rosebud at 9 a.m. on Wednesday morning at the FSST council chambers. He was given a star quilt by his mother Belva Weston and his grandmother, Anne Whipple during a reception with food sponsored by the casino and the tribe.

Several employees from tribal programs, community members, the city and tribal police were present to congratulate Weston. A formal reception will be held by the Royal River Casino for Weston on Oct. 19, Thursday at 5 p.m. He was employed at the casino since 1991 as the Director of Security Training in the Security Department.

Ross Swimmer visits Rosebud and Pine Ridge during first snowfall

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Ross Swimmer, Director of the Office of Special Trustee in Washington, DC toured Kyle with Bat Pourier of Muddy Creek Oil of Pine Ridge and then traveled to the Rosebud and checked into the Rosebud Casino Quality Inn on Tuesday night. His itinerary was delayed by the early snow storm which dumped up to 3-4 inches of new snow on the Rosebud. He was accompanied by Jim James, Regional Director of the OST fiduciary office of Albuquerque, N.M.

He was scheduled to drive to Rapid City to attend a meeting sponsored by Office of Special Trustee's Rapid City office and the Dakota Plains Legal Services at the Journey Museum on Wednesday evening.

Ross Swimmer

Swimmer addressed the Rosebud Sioux tribal council on Wednesday morning during an informal meeting with council members present. No quorum had been assembled and it was most likely due to the poor road conditions. He was accompanied to RST council chambers by Jim James, Jim Cordry, Rosebud's OST fiduciary trust officer, BIA superintendent, Cleve Her Many Horse, and Ed Holland, a member of the OST board of advisors.

Swimmer explained the services as offered by the Office of Special Trustee to tribes, the BIA and individual account holders. He said, "Indians never had a trust officer. All banks have a trust officer. In the past, you went to the BIA. That's not the way to run a trust in a business that has 277,000 account holders, and $3 billion in assets….The trust office is here to find heirs, to work with the BIA, and to make sure accounts are correct. He is the go-to guy. We have a call center. Ninety percent of the time we can answer your questions."

He went on to explain that OST now has the technology and software that is available to tribes and the BIA. They can easily pull up records that contain the heirs, probate information and ownership and anything else that affect an account.

RST council representatives Robert Moore, Marian Young-One Star, and Fern Bordeaux-Boltz asked

Mike Boltz from St. Francis asked Bussey to describe his typical day at the casino. Bussey responded by saying he usually has papers to sign the first thing and then he will collect reports from the night before. He then moves through the gaming floor and will stop at the marketing department as well as the motel and the slot machine area.

RST council representative, Marion Young-One Star, from Grass Mountain community inquired as to the cost of uniforms. Bussey said, "We buy them two shirts and a pair of pants. Security needs more. Employees buy their own beyond a certain point."

Next, a discussion ensued as to whether or not wages were paid on an hourly basis or on a salaried basis to employees. Bussey said, "We are trying to figure out the best way to do that." Representative Young-One Star then inquired as to whether or not the casino hired tribal employees who did not have a G.E.D. Bussey noted that the casino did hire prospective employees who did not have a G.E.D.

Bussey then spoke of the cost to utilize certain professional services at the Quality Inn motel that amounted to $35 thousand dollars for September. Apparently, the septic system required some extensive pumping, including a costly excavation and pipe job.

Council Representative, Russell Eagle Bear, of Norris inquired as to whether or not the casino would be serving a free meal to veterans on Veteran's Day, November 11. Bussey said it was something they would like to do and would get the advertisement out with that announcement.

The regular report included the Quality Inn and the Fuel Plaza. The Quality Inn is apparently paying down its franchise fee and reported that there has been a problem with young people writing graffiti on the bathroom walls. The hotel has a year left on its franchise fee.

Fern Bordeaux-Boltz inquired as to where the fee goes for rental of the meeting room downstairs and Glen Yellow Eagle said that it goes into the management budget. Bordeaux-Boltz said that it should to the Quality Inn.

Emma Mihalcek, Fuel Plaza manager, said that the plaza experienced a very successful one year anniversary celebration and that she was pleased that some of the council representatives had stopped by. She was also working on purchasing an LED sign for the gas prices and was planning some form of outer enclosure for the fuel plaza doors to keep out the wind and rain. Council representative Scott also asked about any kind of promotion for truckers and Mihalcek said she was looking into an incentive for truckers.

Mike Boltz asked for a report on the actual gallons of fuel, while there was some discussion as to the modest increase in the sales of alcohol products. Mihelcek asked if it should be sold until 2 a.m. or discontinued at 12 midnight and would refer that question to the RST liquor commission.

Finally, Fern Bordeaux-Boltz said that she was opposed to tribal members setting aside large blocks of rooms at tribal rates at the Quality Inn. The current tribal rate is $46.80. Eagle Bear noted that a large block of rooms were set aside for the SGU Founder's Day activities and asked for a clarification on the tribal rate.

Swimmer

Swimmer questions about the Tribal Land Enterprise program, land appraisals and about Bear Butte. Former RST President, Webster Two Hawk, also had a question about dividends and he had submitted the question in writing to Swimmer.

Swimmer said, "We are waiting for a list of the 'needs' so we can provide money and technical assistance. We are happy to support TLE. It needs a new director….TLE is a good program. The Senate Affairs Committee on Indian Affairs staffers are looking at TLE as a model program."

Antelope council representative, Robert Moore, spoke to Swimmer and asked a favor. He noted that the sacred Bear Butte is protected by a bill from the state of South Dakota, but that the Governor allowed the bill to be gutted in favor of a micro-brewery. Moore noted that the new Secretary of the Interior was there riding a Harley in Sturgis and asked that Swimmer take a message back to Washington, DC that Bear Butte is sacred to Lakota people. Swimmer replied, "I read about Bear Butte. I assume the tribe memorialized it with a resolution. I would be happy to take that back to Washington. In deference to the Secretary, he was there. It was his first outreach. Can make it compatible, the encroachment."

families making a $2,500 down payment and paying $160 a month for 10 years. With the pool of money from the down payments as leverage, housing would be able to negotiate with house movers and a contractor to build a foundation that would include a half basement. Housing would be responsible for closing up the open end of the house.

New homeowners would be responsible for homesites, roads or driveways, water and sewer, electricity and propane tanks.

In August of 2005, during an OST council meeting at Billy Mills Hall in Pine Ridge, questions about lead based paint and asbestos in the glue used to tile the homes were brought up causing concern among both tribal officials and potential homeowners.

"When I first came in I had a company out of Pierre inspect all 52 homes," said Lone Elk, "each home has a number and an inspection certificate, these are good solid homes."

Lone Elk hopes to have the first Ellsworth home moved to a homesite by the end of October with the remaining homes moved throughout this year and into the spring of 2007.

"There has been concern from HUD about any HUD or NAHASDA money being used for this project," said Lone Elk, "I have assured everyone that this is a joint project between Housing and the 52 families, it is a family project, a joint venture with no HUD or NAHASDA money involved."

"There have been so many rumors about this project," added Lone Elk, "we need this one to be completed and we need many others in the future to have any hope of meeting all of the housing needs of Pine Ridge Reservation."

Correction

In last week's Lakota Country Times edition in the article titled, 'Deaths mar holiday weekend on reservation," Clint Lays Hard, 21, was listed as dying as the result of an accident while eluding the police.

This information was not correct, he was not eluding the police.

We sincerely apologize to the family of Clint Lays Hard for the publishing the incorrect information regarding his death.

LWS Board election committee seeks judges, tellers

KYLE - The Little Wound school board election committee is looking for judges and tellers to serve during the election scheduled to take place in conjunction with the 2006 OST Election and state and national election on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Training for election judges and tellers will be held on Monday, Nov. 6. For additional information contact the Little Wound School business office at 455-6171. The school is holding an election to fill three board vacancies.

Child shot in Wanblee, update on reservation deaths

WANBLEE/PINE RIDGE/KYLE/PORCUPINE - Officers of the Oglala Sioux Tribe's Department of Public Safety responded to a call from the Marilyn Charging Crow residence in Wanblee on a report that a child had been shot with a firearm. Preliminary investigation by the officers found that a 10 year old child was handling a firearm when it discharged striking the child in the abdomen.

The child was initially treated at the Wanblee Clinic then was air lifted to Rapid City Regional Hospital for treatment.

The BIA Criminal Investigation division, the FBI and the tribe's department of Public Safety continue to investigate.

The BIA and DPS continue the investigation of the death of Jonni Brewer on Oct. 10 in Porcupine. Reported as a drug overdose last week, the death is now being investigated as a suicide by hanging.

According to the DPS law enforcement, a one vehicle accident was called in at 7:07 a.m. on Sunday, Oct. 8. Officers found Clint Lays Hard dead at the scene about seven miles east of Sharps. According to family members, Lays Hard lay at the accident scene for two hours before anyone noticed the accident and called DPS. Information reported last week about the accident happening while eluding a police officer was incorrect.

Todd County rides Mustangs to 28-20 win

Red Cloud, Pine Ridge pick up losses

Lower Brule downs White River, heads for playoffs

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

PINE RIDGE/MISSION /WHITE RIVER - Todd County shut down Little Wound's running game and rode the talents of junior all around Gunner Krogman to a hard fought 28-20 win Friday night in Mission. Krogman carried the ball 32 times for 127 yards and two touchdowns and added a 47 yard TD pass to Michael Neiss.

"Gunner proved to be too much for us that night," said Darrell Hunter, Little Wound coach, "we were tied at the half 6-6 and were up 14-6 until late in the third quarter Krogman threw that halfback pass for a TD, then he scored two TDs on the ground and it was tough to stay with them."

Michael Neiss, Todd County's junior halfback, opened the scoring with a 19 yard scamper for a touchdown. Little Wound tied up the game late in the first half when Shilo Pierce grabbed a pass from Johnny Cloud that had been tipped by Neiss and raced 90 yards for a touchdown.

Turnovers by both teams kept stalling the offense and the half ended in a 6-6 tie.

Cloud connected with Devon LeBeau on a 25 yard pass for a TD early in the third quarter and Shilo Pierce ran the conversion in for two points and the Mustangs had a 14-6 lead. Krogman came back in the next series and connected on a halfback pass to Neiss and CJ Spotted Tail hit Byron Gabriel for a two point conversion pass to tie the score at 14 all.

In the fourth quarter, Krogman ran for two touchdowns, a one yarder and one from the five giving Todd County a 28-14 lead. Cloud hit TJ McCauley on a 56 yard pass play for a TD but that was as close as Little Wound got losing it 28-20.

"We struggled to get our running game going all night long," said Hunter, "we ended up with negative yards on the night on the ground and all the pressure was on Johnny to work the passing game."

Krogman led the way for the Falcons as he turned 32 carries into 127 yards and two touchdowns and added the 47 yard pass for a TD, Gunner led the defense with 16 tackles, Canku One Star, a Todd County freshman helped with a fumble recovery and an interception, Chris Rahn had 10 tackles, Jaden Allen one interception and Clay Wilson recovered two fumbles and caused another. Johnny Cloud led Little Wound completing 12 of 30 passes for 298 yards, three touchdowns and two interceptions, TJ McCauley caught five passes for 123 yards and a TD and helped with three interceptions on defense, Brice Hornbeck, caught five passes for 60 yards blocked a punt and led the team in tackles, Oren Three Stars was the second leading tackler and recovered two fumbles and Alvin Tyon recovered two fumbles and Michael Pretty Voice Crane recovered a fumble and had nine tackles.

Little Wound is now 5-2 and hosts Cheyenne Eagle Butte on Thursday afternoon at 1 p.m. while Todd County is 4-3 and hosts Red Cloud Thursday night.

Bennett County gets crucial win over Crusaders

Red Cloud was up 7-0 at the half and going into the fourth they were still up 7-6 but the Warriors pulled it out with a strong fourth winning a close, hard fought battle 14-7 and jumping over Red Cloud in the power points and position for the upcoming playoffs.

"We matched up well with Bennett County especially on the ground," said Nick Dressel, Red Cloud coach, "but their passing game was a little sharper and we struggled to slow down Corbin Kratovil, he is a big target and he got some crucial catches."

Billy Scott opened the scoring for the Crusaders with a one yard touchdown run halfway through the second quarter, Sang Jun Park added the point after that gave Red Cloud the lead that held up until halfway through the fourth period.

There were six turnovers in the first half that plagued each team as they tried to build momentum on offense. Andrew Twiss recovered two fumbles, Corey Mills another and Christian McGhee grabbed an Austin Haynes pass for an interception. John Slattery covered a Red Cloud fumble and Andrew Olson intercepted an AB Morgan pass.

Carson Smith finally got Bennett County on the scoreboard late in the third quarter with a five yard plunge for a touchdown. Art Vitalis intercepted the two point conversion pass. On Red Cloud's next possession, Carson Smith intercepted a pass on the Crusader 25 yard line and early in the fourth Clint Sasse ran it over for a three yard TD run. Haynes hit Kratrovil on a pass for the two point conversion to give

Todd County qualifies boy's and girl's team for state cross country, Takini boys, Eagle Butte girls win regions

Mendoza, Wilson-Pine, Wohlleber, Marshall win region titles

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

PHILIP/CHAMBERLAIN/LEAD - Kyla Marshall, a freshman at Todd County, won the Region 5A cross country individual title on Friday in Lead with a 16:34, beating out Custer's Karley Konkel by two seconds and leading her Lady Falcons to a second place finish in the team competition; Marshall gave a hint of things to come this past summer earning three gold medals in the 2006 North American Indigenous Games in Denver.

Alex Wilson-Pine showed that he was ready to defend his 2005 State A cross country title with a strong run Friday winning the Region 5A title in a time of 16:12.44, beating Eamin Entwisle of Hot Springs by 28 seconds. Freshman Marc Whirlwind Soldier, Todd County was fifth in 16:46.97 leading four Falcon runners in the top 20 positions and winning the team title for Region 5A.

Kiko Mendoza led the Takini Skyhawks to the Region 5B cross country title on Wednesday, winning the individual award with a 17:09, easily outdistancing William White Buffalo of Jones County who finished with an 18:11.Mendoza, a sophomore, is the defending State B cross country champ.

Chamberlain hosted Region 4A on Thursday, Cheyenne Eagle Butte's one two punch of Jordan Wohlleber and Jordyn Cook led the Lady Braves to the team title.

Wohlleber finished with a 15:04, the best time of any region while Cook finished with a 15:44. McLaughlin took five of the top seven places in the boy's race to win the Region 4A team title as freshman Ian Wiest took second with a 16:59 to Parkston's Alex Muntefering with a 16:38.

The 2006 South Dakota State cross country championships are set for Huron's Broadland Creek golf course on Saturday, Oct. 21st. Wilson-Pine and Mendoza are both defending champs, both are working hard to defend their title. Wohlleber took fourth in State as a seventh grader, last year she was third and this year has set her sights on a championship. As an 8th grader last year, Marshall took 15th and her team was 6th. Takini boys were 14th two years ago and 6th last year.

Joining Whirlwind Soldier in the top 20 for the team win was Wes Running in 8th, Steve Antoine in 11th and 8th grader Trevor Covey in 16th; Todd County's final two runners included Labradford Bordeaux in 31st and 7th grader Max Grimshaw in 44th.

"We beat Hill City by just one point, 39-40," said Todd County cross country coach, Larry Lucas, "Wes Running did an outstanding job and Steve Antoine really stepped it up along with Trevor Covey, it was a great team effort to win the region."

The top twenty individual finishers qualify for state, additional Region 5A qualifiers included 10th Dallas Two Lance/Pine Ridge, 12th Sean Red Elk/Little Wound, 19th James Pine/Pine Ridge and 20th Jerad Weston/Red Cloud. Additional participants included: Pine Ridge 23rd Albert Cottier, Wilbur Red Elk 30th, Shawn Keith 37th, Red Cloud Henry Crow 24th, Mathew Running Eagle 33rd, Bryer Iron Cloud 35th, Ezra Zephier 45th; Little Wound Julien Siers 25th, Vern Marshall 26th, Todd Phelps 34th.

The Lady Falcons also had four finish in the top 20, in addition to Marshall, finishers included: Julie Bernie 13th, Kylie Wilson 14th, Morgana Running 16th, Arna Two Hawk 23rd and Emmy Her Many Horses 24th. State qualifiers in Region 5A included: Red Cloud Desirae Blacksmith 12th, Saige Pourier 18th and Kayla Weston 19th; Pine Ridge Jessica tall 7th and Christian Janis 11th. Additional participants included: Red Cloud CaSarah Pine 28th, Laree Pourier 32nd, Lariah High Hawk 37th; Pine Ridge Mary Two Lance 22nd, Allie Janis 25th,, Shawna Good Crow 42nd, Aimee Pond 47th; Little Wound Mikayla Mitzel 43rd, Jessica Spotted eagle 45th, Sheila Montileaux 48th, Miriam Lays Bad 49th; St. Francis Earlene Peneaux 38th.

In Region 4A, Eagle Butte's team champs included Ashley Iron Moccasin 5th, Allie Moran 9th, Erica High Bear 15th and Marissa Laundreaux in 20th. Additional participants included: McLaughlin Amy Talks 32nd, Kelli Yellow Earrings 34th, Gina Morrison 35th and Erica Schneider 41st.

For the Region 4A boy's champs, McLaughlin included Anthony Iron Thunder 4th, Cory Yellow Earrings 5th, Brian Taken Alive 6th, Gerald Running Hawk 7th, Sam Iron Thunder 14th. Additional participants included 8th Lucas Comes Flying/Chamberlain, 16th Cordray White Dog/CEB, 28th Matt Uses the Knife/CEB, 31st Canton Egna/CEB, 34th Dyson Lends His Horse/CEB, 42nd Merril Mitchell/CEB, 46th Keith White Bull/CEB.

This year Takini improved their region finish from second last year to first this year. In addition to Mendoza, the Skyhawks included:

Calvin Flying By 5th, Dugan Franco 9th, Keiko Iron Hawk 10th and Sam Mendoza 15th. White River qualified their whole team by taking second and included: Frank Waln 3rd, Bradley Roan Eagle 6th, Brett Iyotte 13th, Jason Lehman 14th, and Fernando Rios 18th.

VOTE - NOVEMBER 7

Vote yes on Initiated Measure 7

The video lottery referendum in November will put the lottery's future in the hands of the people of South Dakota, who have supported it three times since its inception in 1989.

The issue is known as Initiative 7 on the ballot. It was apparently on the ballot in 2000 and the difference between supporters and opponents have narrowed.

Video lottery has been an important source of income for the state's budget and has represented a significant tax relief for school districts.

Not everyone, however, is happy with the financial impact of video lottery casinos across the state.

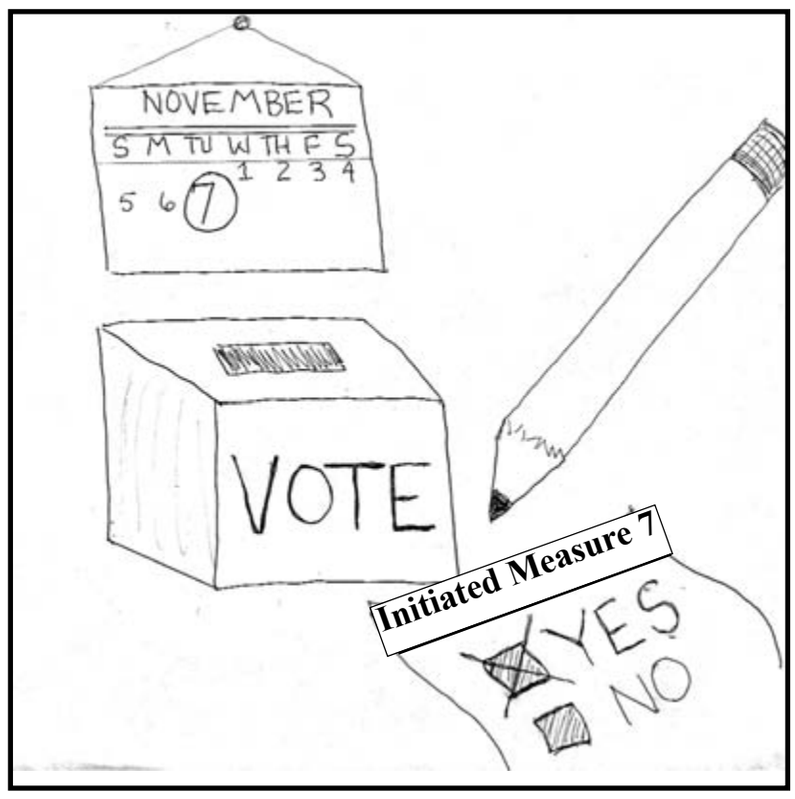
Lawyer, Dan Brendtro, of Sioux Falls is behind the effort to oppose video lottery as it is not good for the state's image and social environment.

There are apparently many individual stories of people hooked on video lottery and the resulting problems that it has created for them and it will be interesting to see if those issues overshadow the future of video lottery.

Last year, video lottery brought in $112 million dollars to the state and its loss would cause the state to increase property taxes for landowners.

If voters do turn down video lottery in November, the logical place to turn for those who enjoy gaming would be the tribal casinos and Deadwood. That would create considerable additional slot income for tribal casinos and begin to make a difference in the level of income generated for respective tribes.

As it stands now, many of the smaller tribal casinos are limited to 250 machines and the income from that has most likely leveled off, as is the case at the Rosebud Casino.



On Thursday, the nine Sioux tribes in South Dakota will form the South Dakota Indian Gaming Association which is concerned that new gaming compacts and additional machines are not being negotiated with Governor Rounds in good faith.

They may support the repeal of video lottery in the state if Rounds is unwilling to negotiate.

Despite the reported issues of problem gamblers, the reality is that a repeal of video lottery will mean increased income for tribal casinos and that is something that Lakota voters need to discuss and decide.

OST council representative, Walt Big Crow was quoted in the Rapid City Journal as saying that Lakota voters represent a voting bloc of 10 percent and that if the governor is not willing to negotiate in good faith, then Lakota voters may be asked to vote to repeal video lottery.

When you go out to vote on Nov. 7, vote YES on Initiated Measure 7.

Ghost Canyon near Wanblee is a sacred site, we need to protect our sites

Dear Editor:

With this next election coming up, it is time the Lakota people start concentrating on preservation.

It becomes a vital issue, especially when our moral obligations to Mother Earth become violated. The sorry concern is that our treaty with the United States have been desecrated, and moral accountability have been shoved aside.

Now all entities with ties to our nation are feeling the effects of something gone sour.

It is with humility, how as Lakota we seen our land base diminish through the elected bureaucracy dictating without the voice of the people. Tribal enrollment with its illiterate indoctrination, has brought disruption in all levels of efficiency. Land management is obviously taking bribes, so that our sacred strongholds are impassable to get to, or let alone to pray and worship.

Where is this money invested to? Only those that purchase seem to get the best of the deal. Many thought the objective was to lease so the tribes economy would thrive, and become sovereign.

No, it's others that are prospering, getting illegally enrolled, and regulating our sovereignty and dictating. And they are starting to out-number us, so they can keep those elected in office. Communities under this sort of representation are profiteering illegal products, furthering a form of genocide. There are Lakota's helpless to this fact! Some leave home to quicken death.

This brings to attention a project that will be proposed on all levels of organization.

There is a gentleman in Wanblee, who heads a non-profit organization called Quiver Hill Wildlife and Historic Preservation Society, Ferdinand Romero, says his main mission is to restore, protect and preserve our sacred badlands, wildlife and burial sites within the badlands.

When the Lakota's were put on reservations, they were designated by the United States to live by these so-called barren useless terrain.

Today, these areas possess rich resources, but under natural law are protected by the Lakota for sacred purposes. Because of the powerful aura given in these areas, the Lakota have held the badlands as a sacred region.

In times past, the Lakota buried their dead in secret caverns created by natural erosion. Crazy Horse is said to be buried in such an area.

Ferdinand, has expressed his concern for these areas, because of outside realtors purchasing land and fencing off passage ways to gain access to these sacred sites.

Those that have knowledge of burial sites and place of prayer have passed away.

Ferdinand knows few of the sites and would like to restore passage, so the people will be able to gain knowledge and pray for the dead. A sacred Lakota concept that is all but gone.

A banker from Kadoka, 28 miles north of Wanblee, bought three quarters of patent fee land (illegal ordinance in treaty territory) in the Quiver Hill area. The banker is fencing off access to a sacred site known as Ghost Canyon.

A home has already been built and the banker will not allow anyone into this area.

Ferdinand has inherited land in this area, in which he also has trouble gaining access to.

Veterans and family of deceased veterans from the pine Ridge Agency have been traveling for many years to Sturgis. The National Cemetery holds their Native American program in the early part of the morning.

Sturgis, being over a hundred and some odd miles away, has caused a lot of hardship towards families of deceased veterans. Some never getting there, let alone not making it on time, has really declined in attendance.

Well, in behalf of the people, Ferdinand Romero proposed that he will donate a portion of his land to establish a Badlands National Cemetery. This will be in the heart of our sacred Badlands in the Quiver Hill area.

This will meet the availability of the Lakota Oyate to visit their loved one. Ancient history foretells that the Lakota have covenants to seal for the dead.

This being in the heart and soul of the people, we are obligated to restore and bring life to Mother Earth.

Instead of selling her for purchase. She will retaliate through natural law. O.S.T. Ordinance No. 77-04, Resolution No. 04-05XB.

Appalled at Mustang's theme on t-shirts

To the Editor:

I am an avid reader of the Lakota Country Times, and feel its time to step up and respond. When I opened up the second half of the newspaper and saw a picture of a girl with a t-shirt on that said "Jim's boys are Mustang's toys." I was appalled to think someone could be so ignorant to slander the late, legendary Jim Thorpe's name and use it in such a context.

Why not Dave Michaud's boys? These t-shirts show alack of respect for the "world's greatest athlete", you don't know him personally!

Which brings me to another subject I find quite disturbing at Little Wound, SPORTSMANSHIP. Something that's been on a decline ever since Bill Ricketts coached at Little Wound. You can see it in the coaches, players, staff and community.

My son was "set-up" to look like the "bad guy" in an incident during a basketball game last year, when in fact the referees were looking the other way when he was struck by one of Little Wound's players, all the while their crowd was yelling "get him" "get him."

Words cannot describe the "hurt" we felt when we were asked to leave, and he was ejected from the game. I for one, will never go to Little Wound for another sporting event, because you can "feel" the hatred!

I also think Pine Ridge School should not schedule any activities out there.

I am sorry I feel this way, but until someone does something different out there, these feelings will continue! I am Robin Tapio, Ryan Pourier's mother.

Understanding the four colors

Dear Editor:

Editor's Note Francis Apple usually publishes his translations in the Lakota language first and then the next week follows with the English translation. This publication, he requested to publish the English first and then will follow next week with the Lakota translation.

1. When we as Lakota Oyate say Mitakuye Oyasin in our prayers, we mean the whole creation, including animals and birds, even rodents.

2. We start our prayers facing the west. We address the wakinya oyate (the thunder spirits) and pray for all of mankind.

3. The color towards the west was originally blue, through time, it changed to black.

4. In Lakota culture, we're all related even the animals. We address each other in the way we're related that's why we had so much, honor and respect.

5. Children were taught early on the importance of relationships. Today we just Hey Man, this I believe is why we have so much dysfunctionalism.

6. Then we turn to the north, the color is usually red. We address the wahutopa (the four legged) we call upon the tatanka oyate to hear us.

7. Next we turn to the east, the color is yellow, we address the wanble and the sinte sapela oyate, the eagle and the black tail deer nations.

8. Then we turn to the south, the color is white, we address the hinhan and wanagi oyate (the owl and the spirit nations).

9. Then we turn to the west again to complete the circle.

10. Next we pray towards the heavens, we call upon Tunkasila (the Creator) to ehar our prayers and help us accordingly.

11. Lastly we call upon Unci Maka (Grandmother Earth) to help us.

12. First we address the spirits, then we add our petitions. The color towards Heaven is blue, the color towards the ground is green, sometimes you will see blue and green prayer flags attached to the can waken, the sacred center pole.

The wasicu prays mostly in the horizontal way, the Lakota prays in a sacred circle. I am only sharing this very important information for the ones who don't know our Lakota lifeways and of course our youth.

I have been on Bear Butte and am a veteran sun dancer. I am also one of the last links to the past.

A reflection of Referred Law 6

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The abortion issue that Lakota voters will be asked to make a choice about in November is one of those things that takes a bit of reading and study. Not to mention, a bit of soul searching so that we can feel and know how we stand on the issue personally. The ban will be listed as Referred Law 6 on the voting ballot.

It's feels like one of those complicated issues that one just doesn't feel like facing, like trying to understand the IRS tax code, or something like it. I find myself shying away from issues that seem too long and difficult to understand. Things like commercial codes or zoning laws are meant to be read and sorted out by lawyers, the people who draft such things.

I have not looked at the actual legislation that is going forward for a vote by the people, but I owe it to myself to do that. Since the actual resolution was drafted by legislators, it is likely somewhat complicated also.

I guess I should get on with the purpose of this writing, as I am contributing to the complicated nature of the debate the longer I take to get to the heart of the matter.

South Dakota has entered the national debate on whether or not to totally ban abortions in the state. Currently, there is a clinic in Sioux Falls that performs them and doctors fly in from Minnesota. As you already know, the state is overwhelmingly conservative on most political issues and abortion is one of them.

Most Lakota people are registered Democrats and in a state that is continually at odds with most of the Sioux tribes, it will be interesting to see if we go along with the total ban on abortions. They say "politics makes strange bed fellows" and in this case my sense is that Lakota people will resist the ban.

The total ban means that there will be no exceptions made for those women who are raped or who are victims of incest. If the ban did allow for these exceptions, it might have a chance of being approved by voters.

As it is, even conservative voters in the state often do not like government intrusion in their lives and this is viewed as one of those issues. Added to that is the fact that voters in most others states do not agree with the 'total ban' as it infringes upon the rights of women to choose when it involves personal choice over their own bodies.

There is an exception in the bill that allows emergency contraception within 72 hours; however, it is a Catch 22 because there apparently is legislation that allows pharmacists in South Dakota to refuse to fill such a request.

If the total ban were approved by South Dakota voters, it would still face a costly challenge from national pro-abortion advocates who have the money to take it all the way to the Supreme Court. The law of the land is still the landmark case 'Roe V. Wade' and it is unlikely any challenge to it would be successful.

Lakota voters will privately wrestle with the total ban, as we have a saying 'wakanyeja ki wakanpi' which says that children are sacred. It is one of the foundations of Lakota spirituality, as we also pray for the generations of children who have not arrived. Often in Lakota we pray about those who are coming behind us and who are the unborn. 'Cinsa' or 'teca unkihaka upelo' is the way it is expressed when speaking of the unborn.

The Lakota word 'wakanyeja' is one interesting word as it contains the word 'sacred' right in it and it should prompt every one of us to treat the youth with respect, reverence and proper nurturing. How many other languages contain such a direct reference to children as 'wakan?'

Even conservatives will use such a slogan to reach voters and for Lakota people it is not a slogan. Lakota people will have to acquaint themselves with the issue as to the political reality of daily life so they can make up their own minds. My sense is that we Lakota voters will reject the ban because it is too strict and does not allow women to exercise their own freedoms which are constitutionally guaranteed.

In a state that is conservative, yet produces Democrats such at Sen. Tim Johnson and Rep. Stephanie Herseth, I believe that the people are going to examine the total ban on abortions and decide that it simply goes too far. I would urge Lakota people to study the issue also and make up their minds before the November elections.

Johnson and Herseth have represented the interests of Lakota people well and it will be interesting to see how their positions reconcile with the final vote tally on Referred Law 6 with the way Lakota people vote.

Personally, I am torn just a bit as I have a wonderful child that really is 'wakan' to me as raising him is the one thing I have done correctly in my life. When I pass on one day, I want to be known as a Daddy who made a difference in the life of a child.

Despite my personal dilemma, I will be voting against the total ban in November as it feels too restrictive for women. As a political issue, it should remain in the realm of medicine and a decision made between a woman and her doctor.

It's too bad that it has become a political issue as we sometimes forget what each political party stands for. Republicans stand for small government with less intrusion, no racial quotas, pulling oneself up by their 'own bootstraps', reduced social programs and they represent the middle to upper class populations. The Democratic philosophy represents the lower end of the economic spectrum from the truly needy to the middle class and increased spending programs which target the social needs of the people. They believe in affirmative action, food stamps, low income heating programs, financial aid for colleges, veterans benefit, other funding for the under privileged and for abortion rights.

Notes From Indian Country

Indian contributions to Native American Day irrelevant to white media in South Dakota

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

For more than 100 years the white editors of the largely white owned media in the State of South Dakota, have had the freedom and the opportunity to push the state governor and legislators to create a Native American Day as an official state holiday.

For more than 100 years they have had the freedom and the opportunity to push the governor and the legislators to make an effort to heal the terrible race relations between Indians and whites in South Dakota by proclaiming a year when Indians and whites could visit each other and talk about their problems, their differences and their commonalities, in essence a Year of Reconciliation.

Those 100 years passed without constructive action by any of the white media because they did not have a vested interest in what happens on the nine Indian reservations in the state. It may not have been because of racial prejudice on their part, but more than likely it was because they just didn't give a damn. Indians were out of sight and out of mind.

Last week South Dakota was the only state in the Union to celebrate Native American Day as an official state holiday. The day became a holiday because the editor and staff of a small, weekly newspaper called The Lakota Times, based on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, pushed Governor George Mickelson and the state legislators with countless editorials into making it happen.

It took a man named Lynn Hart, a man of mixed racial heritage, half black and half Indian, to stand before the body of legislators in Pierre, S. D., and read one of the many editorials written by me to that body of lawmakers urging them to create a Native American Day to honor all Native Americans in the state.

It has been 16 years since this happened and it has been 16 years since Gov. Mickelson wrote a letter to the Lakota Times telling our readers that he would accept my challenge to create a Native American Day and to proclaim a Year of Reconciliation between Indians and whites. Both actions set precedents and both actions happened because the editor and staff of the Lakota Times fought tooth and nail to make it happen. We had a vested interest in our future.

Gov. Mickelson was killed in a tragic plane crash before he could really put the state efforts behind reconciliation or the holiday in motion, but he was big enough to say that neither event would have happened without the consistent urging of the editor and staff of the Lakota Times. Gov. Mickelson was my friend and he visited with me two weeks before his death and we talked about how we could make reconciliation work. Since his death not one single state governor or legislator has had the guts to pick up the flag of reconciliation and run with it.

If one was a visitor to South Dakota last week one would never know the history of Native American Day by watching local television or reading the editorials in the largest newspapers in the state.

That's because the South Dakota media executives apparently believe that the Lakota people do not have the intelligence to make anything positive happen in this state. In their minds, the only reason these good things occurred is because a white man was there to get it done. These white media has usurped the success of Native American Day, a holiday initiated by Indians, by rewriting history to make it an event initiated by whites.

At this stage in my life I really do not care who gets credit for these events, but I totally resent and reject the arrogance of the white media in this state because they would push the Indian people that instigated Native American Day and the Year of Reconciliation totally out of the picture and give 100 percent of the credit to a white governor who would not have enacted either policy if he had not been pushed to do so by Native Americans.

Neither Gov. Mickelson nor the media in this State had reason to consider Columbus Day a bad holiday.

They loved Columbus Day because they believed that they would not be here enjoying the fruits of America if not for him. As Indians, we saw it differently. Columbus was not one of our heroes because he was largely responsible for bringing the hordes of settlers to this continent that resulted in the near annihilation of all Native Americans. We had a clear and definite reason to ask the governor to cancel Columbus Day and replace it with Native American Day.

As Indian citizens of this State we are sick and tired of being considered irrelevant when great events are created that advance the positive aspects of South Dakota that eventually lead to improving race relations. As the states largest minority we have been discriminated against in those 100 years while the state media sat on their hands and said nothing. We are proud that a small, Indian owned weekly newspaper accomplished in one year what the white owned media behemoths failed to do in 100 years.

As Lakota people we had a vested interest in improving our lot in this state that was once known as the Mississippi of the North. Our small efforts helped to turn the tide of racial discrimination and opened the doors of dialogue between Indians and whites and we accept this major achievement with pride.

The former Lakota Times did in one year what the rest of the media in South Dakota failed to do in 100 years.

And now we ask this same white media not to push us to the sidelines as if our contributions to Native American Day and the Year of Reconciliation were irrelevant. We stood tall and fought for the changes you now celebrate, changes that would not have happened even to this day if it had not been for the staff and editor of the Lakota Times.

Guest Column

It's up to our educators to teach correct history

By Ivan Star

Guest Columnist

The federally recognized Oglala Sioux Tribe is gearing up for another election. As we all know, voting is a democratic principle. In our case, though, it has served only to deceive us into thinking we are participating in a free and equitable government. Regardless of who gets into office, some of us know we will continue to struggle for the next two years.

The politicians, with their high paying salaries and paid mini-vacations, will go on with whatever it is they do. The rest of us will return to coping with our ever-present poverty. Our schoolchildren will continue status quo with their high dropout rates and low academic achievement levels.

I, for one, was fortunate enough to have been a first hand witness to how the public school system took action to address this particular problem in their schools. I understand it and want to help here on the homeland; however, my credibility falls short of public acceptance. In other words, I am a bit too rough and consequently no one listens to me.

Thus, I must make an effort to improve my integrity. I quote the words of Sally R. Wagner, a research affiliate for Women's Resources and Research Center at the University of California-Davis during her visit to Mount Rushmore in 1992; "If I did learn anything about democracy from those stone faces staring down at me, it is that democracy required an educated citizenry."

Wagner continued in her letter to the editor of the Rapid City Journal, that while standing under the Shrine of Democracy, the four-face sculpture was imposing and biased, "it was very big and very white." Then she discussed each of the four faces in detail.

Washington, besides being the father of the country, also was a slave owner. In addition, the Iroquois called him "Village Destroyer" from his policy of burning their villages, caches of food, even their fruit trees, during the Revolutionary War… while taking their land to pay his soldiers.

Jefferson was also a slave owner and as history has it, he may have used a black female for sexual pleasure. Historical documents indicate his plan of turning the "Indians," who were living in the way of progress, into little ponytailed replicas of himself through education. This man actually thought India lay to the West, through the Pacific coast.

Teddy Roosevelt is renowned for perfecting the Manifest Destiny scheme. This means he firmly believed that white people are God's chosen people; the "Indian" can be righteously obliterated; they are perpetual pagans and savages. In other words, it is God's will to kill "Indians" and in fact, they need to be removed from the face of the earth.

Abraham Lincoln is allegedly the one good apple. His treatment of racial issues tells another story though. Abolitionists like Harriet Tubman called him the "Pontius Pilate of the slaves". Tubman, an underground railroad conductor, helped hundreds of slaves escape to freedom.

Lincoln ran on a slavery platform and won, however, he turned his back on the slaves under the guise of preserving the Union during the Civil War. His own party eventually forced him into issuing a new version of the Emancipation Proclamation. He had rescinding a proposed proclamation by General Fremont in Missouri earlier in the year.

Along with freeing the slaves, Lincoln authorized what turned out to be the largest mass murder this country is to ever experience. Missionaries were largely responsible for reducing the 300 "tried and convicted" Dakota to 38. The only thing the Dakota were guilty of was defending their ancestral lands, their dignity, and their way of life.

Wagner made a very interesting point; no woman living today can say she helped put any of these four men into public office. Womankind, traditionally perceived the weaker gender, was so much property up until 1920 when they could vote. That specific ideology is not only outdated, it is imbued into Mount Rushmore as the "oligarchy of sex."

In addition, I believe their images in granite are an insult to democracy. Democracy stands for equal political, economic, and legal rights for all humans, inclusive of all races and sexes.

Lastly, Wagner conveyed the words of sculptor Gutzom Borglum, "We are on territory once belonging to the Sioux Indians… we are standing on their very land, for which we never paid a cent - just stole it from them and lied about it."

Now, the question is, what does a person gain from knowledge like this? First, I tend to believe such things, especially when it comes to Native American history. In that sense, the truth becomes obscured and elusive as American historians, scholars, and anthropologists engage heartily in disseminating American-type qualities for the benefit of white people only.

As long as this distortion and concealment of historic truths prevails, it will only serve to undermine the otherwise stately Shrine of Democracy, at least in my opinion. Having learned the hidden history of the men used for this sculpture renders it little more than so much graffiti. I wish I could say otherwise, but that would be hypocrisy.

I cannot participate in this self-aggrandizing ideology for a very simple reason. When a controlling group ignores, omits, or alters historical truths about a minority group for the benefit of the majority, the smaller group suffers extreme and sometimes irreparable harm.

I am guessing that it is entirely up to our own educated scholars. They have to take the initiative with these truths and somehow bring them into the classroom. I have been in that area too and met with resistance regarding my opinions and ideas. Consequently, I left the educational arena because I realized I do not belong there.

I can only toss ideas in that direction and hope somebody will catch one or two of them. Our future as a nation depends on our youth. It will behoove us to raise them to be honest and self-contained by teaching them the truth, especially about their people's history. They do not need to grow up repressed and live the rest of their lives in isolation.

Football action

Bennett County their 14-7 lead and eventually the game.

"There was just a combination of things that did us in," said Dressel, "some untimely penalties, a muffed punt and an interception, we just couldn't seem to recover."

Clint Sasse finished with 19 carries for 95 yards and a TD, Carson Smith ended up with 13 carries for 53 yards and a touchdown while Austin Haynes was 12 of 25 for 146 yards and two interceptions; Corbin Krativil ended up with seven catches for 86 yards and two points. Billy Scott finished with 23 carries for 86 yards and a TD, Wade O'Bryan had seven carries for 35 yards and AB Morgan was 6/16 for 87 yards and two interceptions.

Andrew Twiss ended up with 11 tackles and two fumble recoveries while Andrew Olson had an interception and a recovered onside kick.

Red Cloud is now 5-2 and travels to Todd County Thursday night while Bennett County is 5-2 and travels to Newell on Thursday.

Lower Brule wins two in three days and heads for playoffs

Following a 56-16 win over Highmore/Harrold on Friday, Lower Brule traveled to White River and wrapped up their regular season with a 52-20 victory over the Tigers.

Kyal Middletent ran for three touchdowns while his brother Kansas rushed for two TDs and threw for three touchdowns as the Sioux moved their record to 6-2 and looked forward to the playoffs. Jimmie Brouse caught two of the TD passes while Will Edwards caught the other.

As of the power points on Monday, Lower Brule was second in Region 4 of 9B behind Harding County and ahead of Faith. If things stay the same, the Sioux would host Faith on Tuesday.

Crow Creek upends Pine Ridge

Pine Ridge hosted Crow Creek Friday night; playing without eight of their starters, including five seniors, the Thorpes struggled all night and ended up losing to the Chieftains 28-18.

Crow Creek scored the first two touchdowns, the first on an Arlen Brother of All one yard plunge and a Terrence Gonzalez two point conversion and the second on a Larry Gayton 26 yard run giving the Chieftains a 14-0 lead. Before the first quarter wound down, Louis Ramos got the Thorpes on the board with a 34 yard punt return for a touchdown. Joe Bissonette brought Pine Ridge within two with a 30 yard run. Ryan Barker closed out the first half with a 20 yard run to give the Chieftains a 20-12 halftime lead.

Gayton opened the third quarter with his second touchdown on a 68 yard pass from Ryan Barker, Gonzalez added the two point conversion. Harley Cortier put up Pine Ridge's only second half score on a one yard run in the third. Neither team scored in the fourth and Crow Creek pulled out a rare 28-20 road win against Pine Ridge.

"We are trying to make a stronger commitment to academics and we are enforcing the weekly eligibility process," said Pine Ridge athletic director Bob Pourier, "if a student has a D or an F on any of their classes at the end of the week, they will be ineligible to play for a week."

Pine Ridge is 3-4 on the season and closes out the regular schedule on the road at St. Francis while Crow Creek is now 3-4 and finishes up Thursday at Mobridge.

With the loss Pine Ridge drops to fourth in 11A Region 4 behind Custer, Hot Springs and Belle Fourche.

TCHS king and queen selected

Christopher Rahn and Tia McCloskey were crowned homecoming king and queen of Tood County High School last week. Rahn is the son of Bernard Rahn of the Mission area. A senior, he plays offensive tackle and defensive nose guard for the TCHS Falcons. He is looking to attend college at one of several area colleges and may play college football. Later, he would like to be a coach. He enjoys the outdoors and said of TCHS, "It is fun. There are alot of interests. Alot of different people and it has been nice to meet everybody." Tia McCloskey is the daughter of Pete McCloskey and Lavera Brave. Also a senior, she plans on attending either BHSU or SDSU to study in the human service field. Tia also plays basketball, volleyball and runs track at TCHS. She said, "TCHS has been alot of fun. I didn't think high school would be so easy. It goes by fast." She wants to return to the Rosebud to help make a difference after college. Photo by Jerry Matthews of DoubleM Photogrpahy.

Pine Ridge High School JROTC host blood drive Oct. 26

PINE RIDGE - Pine Ridge High School JROTC Department is hosting their annual blood drive as their community service project.

The need for blood is constant, and volunteer blood donors contribute to nearly all the blood used for patient care in the United States.

Everyone depends on blood.

Every three seconds, someone needs blood. Patients across the country receive approximately 34,000 units of this lifesaving resource each day.

This year alone, as many as four million patients will require blood transfusions. They may be accident victims, people undergoing surgery, or patients receiving treatment for leukemia, cancer and other diseases.

People who are interested in becoming blood donors and who want to support the Pine Ridge High School JROTC Community Service Project can donate blood on Oct. 26 10 a.m. to noon and 1 to 4 p.m. at the Pine Ridge High School gym.

You can make an appointment to donate at this blood drive by calling the Pine Ridge High School JROTC Dept at (605) 867-6401.

Walt Hernandez of the Rosebud BIA Fire Department underwent three days of training along with his 14 fellow firefighters. The training was sponsored by Northtree Fire International of Marysville, CA. Northtree International trains Rosebud firefighters

'Everything about them is top notch'

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Northtree Fire International is a recognized leader in training firefighters. Located in Marysville, Calif., the company recently contracted with the Bureau of Indian Affairs to train firefighters on the Rosebud. The company is able to customize its training based upon the training needs of a particular fire department. The training can include live fire, rescue and confined spaces, disaster response, wildland fire and incident management.

The three areas of focus that the company specializes in include emergency response, education and training and logistical support.

The third day of their training on Tuesday, Oct. 17 saw the access road to the Rosebud Fire Department blocked off, while the Mobile Live Fire Trainer was backed into the north parking lot. Despite the cold and blustery day, there appeared to be a lot of activity occurring as firefighters could be seen entering and exiting the mobile semi-tractor trailer.

Mitch Ward, the lead instructor for the privately owned broad based company noted that the training was a modular certified program that will lead to certification as a Firefighter Level 1 as defined by OSHA and the National Fire Protection Association. The next time the company comes out to Rosebud, it will be to complete the level 1 training.

The Rosebud firefighters trained in the mobile unit which provides a live fire environment utilizing customized scenarios. The features of the unit include a kitchen, bedroom, basement, garage, and hazardous materials in which firefighters will face a different set of scenarios.

The unit also includes a hallway, a bedroom, a stairwell and also an area that can be simulated as a basement.

Ward said that during such scenarios, the unit is completely dark and two firefighters must enter as a team, while two other firefighters must remain outside in case they must be rescued.

The other two instructors who accompanied Ward were Roger Zanca and Mike Bounazian. The company is considered an actual 'fire brigade," Ward said, "We do contract training and go out on 'strike teams' for the state and federal government." It has several divisions and has some 70 employees.

The company has a very attractive website which is easy to navigate and which explains its equipment, capabilities, and specialized divisions.

When asked about the Rosebud firefighters, Ward said, "You guys have a great group. Everything about them is top notch. They are in great shape and have a great attitude. We are constantly sharing with them in order to improve their performance.

Ward continued, "These guys are very professional. The best trained in the BIA. They are a good example and are eager to learn. I wished I could clone them."

Looking Horse selected for peace award

GREEN GRASS - Arvol Looking Horse was honored this week at the United Nations headquarters in New York for his work in encouraging world peace.

"Chief Arvol Looking Horse was chosen because he's one of the great peacemakers of our time," said Alison Van Dyk, executive director of The Temple of Understanding, a non-governmental organization with UN status, which is presenting the award.

Looking Horse was selected as a recipient of the Juliet Hollister peace award. Past recipients of the peace award have included the Dalai Lama, Nelson Mandela and Queen Noor.

This year's Hollister honorees also include the late Daniel Pearl, a Wall Street Journal reporter, and the Venerable Yifa, a Buddhist nun who is chairwoman of the Department of Religious Studies at the University of the West in California.

The honorees were selected because they all overcame adversity in their lives.

Middle school volleyball team captures Big Foot B champ title

KYLE - The Little Wound Middle School Volleyball team captured the Championship Title at the 2006 "B" Team Big Foot Conference Volleyball tournament held at Wolf Creek School Oct. 2, 3, 5, and 6.

The Team began their season with ten 7th graders, six 6th graders and four fifth graders.

The girls are instructed that education comes first; if they do not keep up with their schoolwork they will be ineligible for the following week. So with keeping up with schoolwork and practice Monday - Thursday, some girls dropped off the team.

Practice began on Aug. 28. The first week of practice was focused on conditioning the girls along with some fundamental volleyball skills. The team was then drilled on their serving and setting techniques, which paid off at the end of the season.

The team finished the season with a 10-0 record. Each game is scheduled for the best out of three games; these girls had won the first two games of each game, not requiring going into a 3rd game.

The only exception was during the Championship Game against the Red Cloud Lady Crusaders, with Little Wound winning the first game, Red Cloud winning the second game and Little Wound winning the rubber back match with a score of 15-10 to take home the Championship Title.

These girls did an outstanding job all season. They received great compliments from various schools and spectators throughout the season and at the tournament. They really set an example of how to work as a team on and off the court.

Courtney LaMont and Briittny Has No Horse were All-Tourney recipients and Alaina Brown Bull won the MVP honors.

Standing: Brittny Has No Horse, Courtney LaMont, Alainna Brown Bull, Martina Old Horse, Marissa Around Him, Lexie Amiotte. Kneeling: Danielle Mesteth, Frances Around Him.

Little Wound Junior Mustangs winding down with 7-0 record

KYLE - The Little Wound Middle School Football team has had an outstanding season this year. They are winding down their undefeated season with a 7 - 0 record and will be participating in the play-offs this week.

Coach Grady Brunsch said, "The 2006 Jr. Mustang football team can be defined with one word: character."

"Last season they lost every game but one, but this year finished the regular season with a perfect 7-0 record. Along with character they have shown lots of heart, discipline and good sportsmanship as they progressed through the season. We take things one game at a time and take every team very seriously."

He added, "Chris Janis and Brian Hopkins have joined together with head coach Grady Brunsch to coordinate this group of tremendously talented young athletes. The kids are so tough, quick, and "football-minded" that coaching has been quite an easy job. It'll be interesting to see these young men in the next four years as they get into high school ball."

The following is the record for the LW Jr. Mustangs:

Little Wound, 48
Wounded Knee, 12
Mustangs 36, Wolf Creek 12
Mustangs 32, Red Cloud 12
Mustangs, 36, Crow Creek 6

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

What is your view on Amendment E?

Concerned Citizen

Dear Concerned Citizen:

The amendment alarms me. I had to research the amendment to seek the bottom line, and here is part of the wording: No immunity shall extend to any judge of this State for any deliberate violation of law, fraud or conspiracy, intentional violation of due process of law, deliberate disregard of material facts, judicial acts without jurisdiction, blocking of a lawful conclusion of a case, or any deliberate violation of the Constitutions of South Dakota or the United States, notwithstanding Common Law, or any other contrary statute.

It does not end with the prosecution and civil lawsuit doors for just judges. It also opens doors to school boards, city councils, county commissions, parole boards, prosecutors and judges or anyone who makes judicial decisions

The problem is very simple. We already have legislation in effect that holds judges and others involved in judicial processes responsible for violation of the public trust.

Judges are liable and can be arrested for illegal acts,including the impediment of justice. If a judge is taking bribes, there are already laws in effect to prosecute them.

The same is true for all other citizens involved in judicial decisions. This legislation is expensive and redundant. It probably will be challenged, and, if passed, it will be found to be unconstitutional at the expense of the tax payers of the State of South Dakota.

It also will be found to create a really big mess for liability insurance carriers.

It would become cost-prohibitive for personal liability insurance coverage for all people in the field of making legal decisions.

I have a very strong repugnance for "worst-case scenario" legislation. There is an assumption behind this legislation that judges, prosecutors, attorneys, parole boards, school boards, council members, etc. need to be policed with the threat of civil lawsuits, punitive damages and prosecution for their actions. There is an assumption that they are not holding the public trust. It would set up a grand jury that reviews and determines prosecution for legal decisions.

It would be VERY EXPENSIVE and isn't necessary. If a judge makes an illegal ruling there is an appeal procedure that disallows illegal verdicts. A judge that finds himself/herself constantly having their findings overthrown won't have a very long career. We also have similar opportunities to stop or reverse any unconstitutional laws or ordinances made by any legal body. Please also understand that if a judge or other judicial process person takes a bribe he or she will be prosecuted under existing laws.

Save the State of South Dakota money and time. Don't subject your good judges, councils and boards to unnecessary or unwarranted investigation. This would happen, as it places the courts into the political arena.

Unpopular decisions would be castrated and judges punished for decisions that they deem in alliance with the public trust. In 99.9 percent of the cases, no illegal activities would be found, but the cost would be great both in time and money.

For protection against criminal activity within our judicial system, use the legislation that already exists.

It's there for a reason and it is adequate and constitutional and doesn't cost the taxpayers a dime for implementation.

Dear Anna,

I met this guy and well he says he loves me and I just don't know what to do because he lied to me and to my face.

I love him I think because its only been me and him for like four months and plus I'm leaving school here in Utah and he is going back to Denver. If someone I gave my heart to hurt me this bad, do you think I should still talk to him? I told him I didn't want to talk to him after I went back home because he hurt me so bad you know.

Well, I want to know if I should still talk to him after I go home, I love him still but he hurt me you know. What seems the best, let me know. Hoka...pilamiya.

Wondering if I should talk to him or not

Dear Wondering:

What you are really asking me is: If I talk to this guy again, will I get hurt? Well, chickadee, it depends on what you expect.

Do you still expect him to be your "fantasy man?" I'm talking about the man you had a relationship that was all in your head. You know, the sweet gentle, loving caring, madly-in-love-with-you man.

The man that doesn't exist? First of all, accept responsibility for your part in creating a relationship that wasn't going to last forever.

Secondly, responsibility does not mean guilt. It is not because you aren't pretty enough, nice enough, smart enough, funny enough, or you have or don't have an opinion; it is because you are you and he is the real him and the two of you are not destiny. What do you expect from him? Most men, when they move on from one relationship to another will sooner or later contact their ex.

They do that when they face rough waters or termination of their current relationship and they are horny. It's not a trap...it's life. Generally, in my life, if I have been "through it" in a relationship, I chose to remember what it felt like and determine that I don't want to do that again - ever. The problem here, for you is simple. You always did care more for him and expect more from the two of you together than he ever did.

Mis-alignment of allegiance leads to victimization. You both have to be of the same mind to create a life together equally. Otherwise, the one not in that much love, will betray and hurts the lesser member of the relationship.

You can talk to him, that doesn't hurt...but don't expect happily ever after - because it ain't happening or it is...but not with him.

Pine Ridge Indian Reservations, Shannon County, South Dakota

the Aberdeen Area Indian health Service seeks to construct sanitation facilities in the Pine Ridge community on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, Shannon County, South Dakota. A Draft Environmental Assessment (EA covering these proposed facilities is now available for public inspection, review, and comment.

The Draft EA addresses the potential environmental effects of constructing a new wastewater treatment facility with continuous discharge to an unnamed drainage which empties into White Clay Creek approximately 1/2 mile downstream of White Clay Dam. Copies of the Draft EA are available for review and comment at the Oglala Sioux Tribe Environmental Protection Program Office in Pine Ridge, SD, the City of Martin Community Library, and the IHS Martin Field Office in Martin, South Dakota. The public is invited and encouraged to review the Draft EA and provide comment.

OST election court of appeals declares election null and void

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - On Oct. 22, the OST Election Court of Appeals issued a decree that declared null and void the OST 2006 primary election due to the gross negligence of the OST Election Board. Citing the fact that no federal background checks had been conducted on any of the candidates, that the election board had allowed the use of misprinted ballots and that election judges and tellers were allowed to mark the ballots and that LaCreek District had incorrect ballots, the election court of appeals ordered a new primary election to be conducted as soon as possible.

Calling any election in the United States a delicate matter, the election court of appeals stated that an election board is entrusted with the coordination of the process and is there to ensure that the trust of each voter and the process is credible and competent in order to protect the faith in the system by the candidates, the voters and the general public.

The court spent two days, Oct. 18 and 19 at the tribal courthouse in Pine Ridge listening to challenges, complaints and concerns of enrolled members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. In addition to the concern of a lack of federal background checks and misprinted ballots, there were concerns that the ballots were not sent out to the precincts sealed in the ballot boxes and that counting of the ballots was not open to the public as stated in 04-06.

In the conclusion, the Court of Election Appeals stated

PassNet air ambulance and Rosebud Tribe hold ribbon cutting

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - John Warnock, CEO of PassNet Inc. of Plymouth, Minn., Steve Dale of Dale Aviation, Inc., and Rosebud Sioux Tribal Chairman, Rodney M. Bordeaux met at the Howard Fuller, Sr. airport for a ribbon cutting ceremony on Monday morning to mark the beginning of air ambulance service on the Rosebud. RST Vice-President Wayne Boyd was present along with RST Chief of Staff Michael LaPointe.

PassNet is poised to position air ambulance service 'dedicated' to use by the Rosebud Comprehensive Health Facility as soon as a hangar can be built in Rosebud or Mission. The same also applies to the Oglala Sioux who have been well represented by Kathy Janis, Oglala Sioux council representative from Wounded Knee District who also present. Dale Aviation has 21 years of accident free medical evacuation experience and possesses a Veterans Administration vendor number. Their planes are all weather planes which can fly in conditions which helicopters are unable to and have evacuated many patients from both reservations.

A plane may also possibly located in Pierre, according to Warnock, as it has no air ambulance service.

The start up date for PassNet air ambulance service to the Rosebud is dependent upon a meeting on Wednesday, October 25 with representatives from the Indian Health Service in Aberdeen.

When fully operational PassNet will be able to fly in-state or to places such as Omaha, Denver, or even Minneapolis as veterans will now have that option. Warnock said, "Shelly Harris will make a choice in concert with an ER physician." PassNet has also secured its Medicare/Medicaid vendor number and is essentially ready to go.

Shares and stock in PassNet may also be purchased under the agreement with RST. A sign of PassNet's potential as a reservation partially-based enterprise is the fact that Empowerment Zone of the Lakota Funds program has invested $400,000 dollars in the venture, whereby they purchased fifty percent ownership of two planes with 20 percent down, gross revenues and they will be paid back by interest. according to Tally Plume of the Lakota Funds who also attended the ribbon cutting.

Thirty some people braved the chilly morning including RST council representatives Russell Eagle Bear and Stephanie Sully.

The Unquiet Grave, the struggle of AIM and the FBI, author to talk at OLC

KYLE - Steve Hendricks, author of The Unquiet Grave will be at OLC on Oct. 31 at the Woksape Tipi Library to talk about his new book at 1:30 p.m.

In 1976 the body of Anna Mae Aqaush, an American Indian activist, was found frozen in the Badlands of South Dakota or so the FBI said. After a suspicious autopsy and a rushed burial, friends had Aquash exhumed and found a .32-caliber bullet lodged in her skull.

Burrowing into this scandal, The Unquiet Grave opens a tunnel into the dark side of the FBI and exposes its secret war against American Indians. Digging up skeletons in the garden of the American Indian Movement, the FBI's nemesis, Hendricks unravels a sinuous tale of murder, conspiracy, and cover-ups that stretches from the plains of Wyoming to the polished corridors of Washington, D.C.

First-time author Steve Hendricks sued the FBI over several years to pry out thousands of unseen documents about the events. He also won a grant for his extensive interviewing and research from the prestigious Fund for Investigative Journalism.

One of those rare reporters whose investigative tenacity is accompanied by grace with the written word, Hendricks provides a gripping and long overdue reexamination of the FBI's struggle against American Indians.

Pulitzer Prize winning author, Studs Terkel said of the book, "It is a documented portrait of the FBI as an un-American agency in its shafting of Native Americans." Jim Hightower, the bestselling author of Let's Stop Beating Around the Bush said, "Our hearts have been buried at Wounded Knee long enough, Dig'em up and bury the FBI instead. Read this book." Peter several times in their decree that the decision was based on the gross negligence of the Election Board. Selected in July by the tribal council, the board was made up of Charlene Black Horse, chair, Maretta Champagne and Sandra Bettelyoun.

The appeals court was also selected by the council and included Jovan Tony Ten Fingers, chair, Francis Pumpkin Seed and Cornel Conroy.

The appeals court attempted to get on the tribal council floor on Friday but could not. The decree was issued on Sunday, Oct. 22 and on Monday, Alex White Plume, OST president decided that the council would meet on Monday, Oct. 30 to review the findings of the appeals court.

"The council really has no role to review or make a decision here." said Will Peters, council representative from Pine Ridge village, chair of the education committee and presidential candidate, "we established the election process with 04-06 and we set it in motion with the selection of the election board and election court of appeals and turned over the authority to conduct the election to the board and the appeals court - if we were to interfere in the process it would bring politics and potential candidate interference into the election process."

With the council meeting looming on Monday, there have been a variety of rumors circulating around Pine Ridge including letting the general election proceed on Nov. 7, holding a new primary on the 7th and the general the first week of December or even holding off for six months doing a new election.

Citing the controversy swirling around the primary election and the decree of the appeals court, the planned Red Cloud School election debate scheduled for Wednesday was postponed.

prayer and gave the airplane a Lakota name, "wanbli ta awanka" which translates to "eagles' place to watch over." President Bordeaux said, "We still have to go through details with the Indian Health Service. We will meet this Wednesday." He acknowledged the efforts of Kathy Janis, Paul Valandra, John Warnock, and Steve Dale.

Rosebud Hospital CEO, Shelly Harris, was also present with administrators Dr. Valerie Parker and Randy Johnson. Warnock said, "The I. H. S. is not sure where we fit in. We have our Medicare and Medicaid number and the F.A.A. was impressed…, the local I.H.S. has shown good support, including Shelly Harris and Bill Pourier. Aberdeen has a process to follow and rules."

Janis noted that the Indian Health Service has been slow to get on board with the air ambulance project because the issue has been one of "control" for the bureaucracy. She had hoped to have a similar ribbon cutting in Pine Ridge for the delivery of an air ambulance, but it did not occur. She said she would be unable to attend the meeting with I.H.S. in Aberdeen, but that Rodney Bordeaux, Paul Valandra and John Warnock would undertake the task.

A Beechcraft King Air 100 landed at the airport at approximately 11 a.m. piloted by Steve Dale of Dale Aviation based in Rapid City. The King 100 has a bullet proof engine, is a double bed craft, and it is radar equipped. Next of kin will be able to ride in the King Air 100 in the absence of a second patient. Furthermore, the plane is equipped with an advanced life support system. The King Air 100 flown by Dale Aviation is backed up by a King Air E-90 and two Cessna 414's which are single bed.

"Dale Aviation personnel are all trained in altitude physiology. Trauma nurses and paramedics will be trained" said Warnock. Local nurses and paramedics will be trained to fly with the team.

Finally, Warnock summed up the venture by noting, "The tribe gives us political support, 24 patients a month and we cut the trauma time in half."

Lakota Funds welcomes new staff and joins in certification program

KYLE - Lakota Funds will be sending seven staff members to Economic Development Finance Professional Certification Program in Sioux Falls beginning November 6, 2006.

This program is a comprehensive training series that will help staff learn economic development tools and techniques and build capacity to successfully create jobs and translate opportunities into results for the community.

Lakota Funds' Wawokiye Business Institute (LF/WBI) recently hired three new Success Coaches who will attend this training. Tonia Young has taken one of the Success Coach positions, in addition to being Individual Development Accounts (IDA) Coordinator. Her IDA skills and training enhance her as a Success Coach Team member.

Another new coach, David White Bull, has an Associates of Arts degree in Human Services and is continuing to pursue his Bachelor's degree. He also helped manage a food service business for two years in Portland, Oregon. The coaching team reports, "David is energetic, willing to learn and his enthusiasm is quite inspiring."

Jo White holds a Bachelor of Science degree in Business Administration. She is also a former Lakota Funds board member where she served for 17 years and brings a wealth of experience to the WBI team. "I have wanted to work in a position like this ever since I interned here eighteen years ago."

The Finance Professional Certification is provided through the South Dakota Governor's Office of Economic Development, citigroup, and the South Dakota Community Foundation. Lakota Funds is using this certification opportunity as an extension of Success Coach training and business analysis training Lakota Funds' teams received last month.

This training was provided by Rural Community Initiatives and by the National Opportunity Finance Corporation and funded by the Administration for Native Americans.

Lakota Funds is a community development organization actively promoting socio-economic sustainability of Oglala Lakota people on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

State drug and alcohol admissions jump 30 percent

By Carson Walker
Associated Press Writer

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - The number of people admitted to South Dakota drug and alcohol treatment programs jumped 30 percent from 2004 to 2005, according to an annual report.

There were 13,360 admissions in 2005, compared to 9,380 in 2004 and 9,116 in 2003, according to the Office of National Drug Control Policy.

Gib Sudbeck, director of the state Division of Alcohol and Drug Abuse in Pierre, said the number of people being identified as having a drug or alcohol problem has remained roughly the same.

But the increase in admissions in the latest national report corresponds with more treatment programs in the state running near or at capacity _ largely because of the growing methamphetamine problem, he said.

Someone addicted to meth will likely need to be admitted because of the drug's addictive nature, Sudbeck said.

``From what we're seeing is people have to go into some level of treatment to get detoxed,'' he said. ``The increase in meth means more people need to go into treatment. And we're doing a better job of getting people into treatment.''

According to the report, the amount of meth brought up from Mexico continues to increase.

Supplies to the eastern part of the state generally run through Sioux City, Iowa, and most meth available in western South Dakota comes through Denver, said Richard Mulholland of Sioux Falls, Drug Enforcement Administration resident agent in charge.

Some of it comes from the West Coast on Interstate 90, he said.

Those traditional drug trafficking routes are now used to run meth, Mulholland said.

``They've done all these other drugs for years cocaine, heroin and marijuana and now they're getting into methamphetamine,'' he said. ``They're the ones that are supplying Indian reservations and throughout South Dakota.''

Mexican meth is cheaper and easier to get than making it in homemade labs, Mulholland said. And new laws that limit the sale of medicines that contain a key ingredient have also caused the number of labs to dwindle, Mulholland said.

``Those laws have helped it,'' he said.

Meth and marijuana are the most heavily used drugs in the state, Mulholland said.

Other findings in the report:

* Higher-purity ``BC Bud'' marijuana is available in South Dakota.

* Heroin and powdered cocaine are obtainable statewide.

* More crack cocaine is showing up in the eastern part of the state but still limited in the west.

* So-called club drugs are limited but increasing in use.

* LSD has limited availability.

* OxyContin abuse is a growing problem in the state, though hydrocodone products, codeine and Darvocet-N are the most abused pharmaceutical drugs.

Todd County Middle School holds teleconference with NASA

By Dr. Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - On Thursday from 2:30 to 3:20 p.m., Oct. 19, 40 students at the Todd County Middle School held a video teleconference with members of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The teleconference originated at the Johnson Space Center in Houston with a select five schools in the nation. The TCMS was designated as NASA Explorer School last year. Peggy Diekhoff wrote the initial grant that led to the award for TCMS to become an Explorer School. The 50 minute lecture was entitled, "Reduced Gravity: Effects on the Human Body." Later, 20 other schools would be conducting the same teleconference.

The event was coordinated locally by TCMS assistant principal, Billy Beesley.

The TCMS students participating were selected from the Student Council and the National Junior Honor Society along with a number of teachers from different grades who were also invited to participate, including Mr. Rothenberger, Mr. Crichlow, Mr. Cruz, Mrs.

Baca, Liz Fayer, Maureen Wagner and Peggy Klein. Three TCMS parents were also in attendance.

The DDN room at TCMS features a large screen that appears to be state of the art equipment as the resolution and acoustics are excellent when students are interacting with the presenter. A pre-algebra class is just one of the classes that students can take during the fall semester with an instructor in Briton.

Chris Stein of NASA was the host of the teleconference and he did an excellent job of interacting with the students and providing a lecture on reduced gravity. He introduced his colleagues, Don, Doug and Matt who all work in a supportive role for NASA. One was a biomedical engineer who explained his role in teaching American astronauts and Russian cosmonauts on how to administer medical assistance in space.

The students listened to a definition of micro-gravity and its application to astronauts who are essentially free falling when traveling in space. It is important for astronauts who are in training to understand its effect on their body so that they make the necessary adaptations. Stein said, "The moon has one-sixth the pull of gravity on earth. We are going back to the moon. It takes 3-4 days to get there, Mars as well. It takes 8 months to get there and we would stay there a year."

Astronauts in training experience the pull of gravity and weightlessness through flying C-9 airplanes and free falling, through something 'neutral buoyancy' training in a large pool and by training on a 'drop tower' where one drops 132 meters in five seconds. Such training is very repetitious, but necessary in order to counteract the effects of microgravity on the body.

In space, there is a 'fluid shift' in the body that causes the legs to get skinny and the face to swell a bit. The heart is somewhat confused also and tends to expand so it can do its work. Astronauts often feel dizziness, which eventually goes away, but they can take Dramamine, close their eyes or simply sit still in order to counteract the effects.

When exercising, lifting weights is pointless because of weightlessness, so astronauts use rubber bands or tethers for 'resistance training.' They also work on tread mills; otherwise their muscles volume is lost at a rate of five percent a week.

Three TCMS teachers will take part in an experiment with NASA over the Gulf of Mexico. They will fly in a plane up to 35,000 feet and drop two miles in thirty-five seconds. The purpose will be to test an experiment which they will have with them. The experiment was designed by a group of students from TCMS and will test the effect of microgravity on density.

Finally, Stein explained that another NASA support career that is available in addition to biomedical engineer is an exercise physiologist. He said there are also 30-40 college teams which fly with NASA.

The teleconference was quite informative for TCMS students and is an excellent medium to supplement classroom instruction.

Oacoma hopes for cooperation from Lower Brule now that trust land case is finished

OACOMA, S.D. (AP) _ The Oacoma Town Board says it had hoped the courts would not rule as they did in a long-standing case involving 91 acres of Lower Brule Sioux Tribe land along Interstate 90 near the town.

But now that the U.S. Supreme Court has refused to hear the matter, the town board says it accepts the decision and hopes the tribe listens to the town's concerns as it relates to development plans for the land.

That's part of a statement the board issued Monday after a meeting.

In the 16-year-old legal case, the state of South Dakota had questioned the federal government's authority to take land into trust outside the borders of Indian reservations. The high court's recent decision not to hear the case means the land can be taken into trust. The tribe has said it will create a development plan possibly for a truck stop.

Mike Schreiber, the town board's president, said some stories indicated Oacoma was attacking tribal sovereignty, ``and that was not the case at all. We're simply looking at the impact (a development project) would have on the community. It had to do with economic development and viability. We were not out to do anything other than to provide the leadership to the people who elected us to serve.''

If the land is put in trust and developed, Indian-operated businesses there would have tax incentives that would put established businesses nearby at a serious competitive disadvantage, the Oacoma statement said. The property, visible from the highway, is west of the Holiday Inn Express, which is just off the Oacoma I-90 exit.

If a truck stop is built, sales tax revenues would not flow to Oacoma to support infrastructure and other necessary services, the town board's statement said, adding that real estate taxes of about $10,000 would not be payable to the town, county and local schools.

``The unfortunate reality is that when tribal sovereignty and state and local laws come to a head, they do not always mesh, with the possible result working a negative against the community impacted,'' Schreiber said.

Tribal Chairman Michael Jandreau has said his tribe is always willing to work with others on economic development, ``and we hope that holds true and we'll able to work something out,'' he said.

Schreiber added that the town board has no plans to pursue further litigation.

If Democrats in Washington, better balance in Pierre and new blood in Pine Ridge don't show a marked improvement, try again

By Dr. Jim Wilson

Opportunity is almost always obscured by what appear to be insurmountable obstacles. Diamonds are not found as shining objects clearly recognized for what they will be someday. I often remind myself that the removal of obstacles is the creation of opportunity. Too often we are too involved in a situation to realize its totality, when in reality we may be experiencing only a discouraging piece of the whole.

Recently I wrote about chaos, saying chaos is relative and depends largely on where one is and the perspective of each of us is colored by our experiences.

This past week has brought us closer to the tribal, state and national elections and the moment of truth when we individually pull a curtain around us and mark our ballots for whom we want as our representatives and how we want them to operate our government. To many of us this election is all about chaos!

But, we have a great opportunity behind all the dust and smoke blown in front of us. It is only necessary for us to quickly review our current situation and the opportunity will be clear.

So, let's ask ourselves a few questions.

Who represents us?

In most matters affecting us we select, or elect, someone else to represent us. We have lawyers for legal issues, accountants for tax and financial dealings, family physicians for medical needs, school board members for educational affairs, etc., and politicians for general government operations.

When I need a lawyer I want the best I can afford; one with a reputation of winning most of his court cases. The same goes for the other people I pay to represent me. I choose my representatives by what I know about them and by what others say about them.

I believe most people use the same general approach to selecting their lawyers, accountants and doctors. But, many of us do a flip-flop when it comes to selecting our government representatives! We seem to forget that those we select/elect to represent us are collective mirrors of their electors. Remember what Pogo said!

Many of us have stopped seeking representation by measured results, seeking representatives who reflect our thinking or asking successful people to give up personal time and activities to represent us. Instead, we listen to Magpies and Crows and see who can/will screech the best cover story of why they have accomplished nothing, but have a fool-proof plan to "get it done next time." Why?

We have grown accustomed to accepting inefficiencies of government at all levels, saying that we are willing to pay that price to have our representatives fully air the issues and let everyone express their opinions.

Classic antics of the professional tribal politician are to say, "I will take it back to my people" when issues are difficult, "Let's table it" and to just coincidentally schedule important meetings to coincide with popular far-away events (the Lakota Nation Invitational is coming, the LNI is coming!).

A new expression has arisen in the National Football League announcers' booths which I really like; "Running downhill" is used to describe something that is easy.

As voting citizens we should start "running downhill."

We should vote only for those who have "scored" in the past by accomplishing something or have not yet proven they have nothing to offer.

When there are no known scorers on the list we will vote for a "rookie" who may have demonstrated capabilities in some previous endeavor.

When you are young everything depends on your potential and when you are older everything depends on your record.

Let's ask "What have you accomplished?"

Tiger Woods is my individual sports hero. He recently said he tries to win every golf game he plays.

He tries to hit every green and make every putt. He does not worry about what the other golfers are doing or saying.

His only concern is his own game. Billy Mills did not worry what others said or thought; he ran his own race. When the 1987 Oglala Thorpes BB team was down by 14 points late in the 3rd quarter at State, Coach Jess Mendoza told them to play their game, the way that they had been taught, using their full-court press.

The 26-0 record and the towering Championship Trophy hardly tell the story of the individual effort and teamwork involved.

Leadership is a tough job no matter what level it is applied. One begins with a vision and then defines the steps to get there.

For an individual that may mean maximum self-reliance. In other cases it may mean team-building. In all cases it means maximizing the benefits of available resources.

When you reach the point of highest and best uses of all resources to address your goals and objectives you have a critical mass. Most of us operate at less than critical mass. When business tycoons like Ted Turner, Bill Gates and Warren Buffett (and many others) have reached financial critical mass they are earning more than they do or can spend, more than most people believe possible, they then have opportunities to apply that critical mass to the benefit of mankind.

Political bodies left to themselves will inevitably feed themselves to utter destruction so it is our responsibility to save them from themselves and save ourselves from their wanton self-indulgences.

This may sound 'down-in-the-mouth,' but we have centuries of proof. There is no known record of any political body effectively policing itself or reducing its diet of pork.

The rise of political parties has resulted in the arrival and acceptance of the professional politician. The Professional 'Pol' has changed the phrase You and Me to Me and You.

The 'Pol' nominates himself, sets his own work schedule, dishes out his own perks and rations government services to us as rewards for electing him (all with our money). The Pol has taught us to ask what the government can do for us, not what we can do for our government. Didn't JFK have some thoughts on this?

If we use the team analogy, we should want a winning team and measure each player either by their proven record or their potential. And, because they mirror us, our pride should, at the least, make us want a better image.

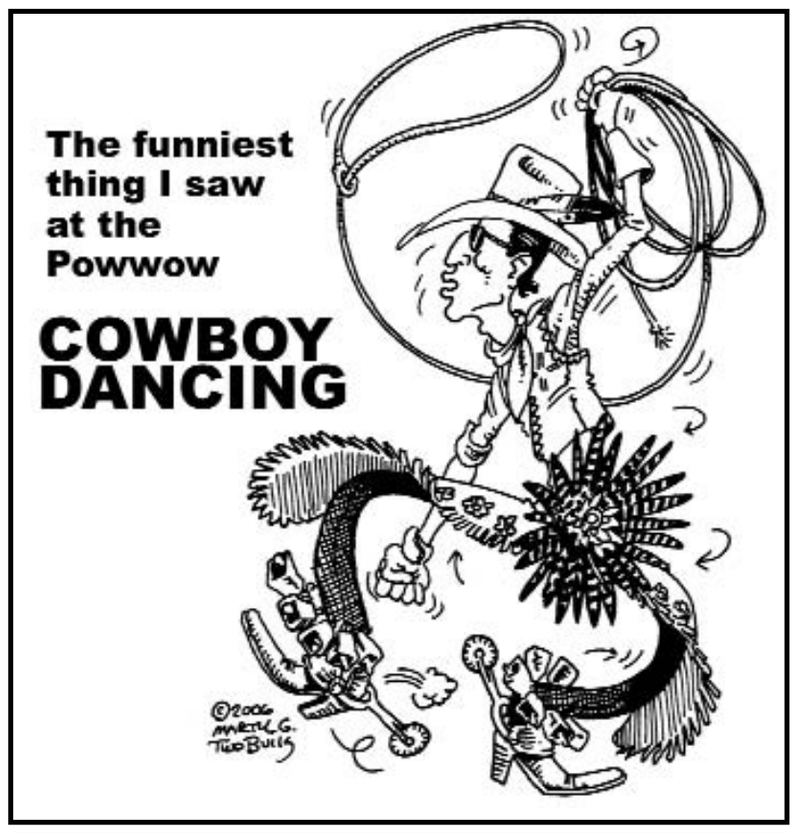
Once we field a team we should support them. If we can't support them, then we should begin replacing the poor performers. We may have to remind ourselves often that we own the team, we are paying the players and every 'team' is the mirror reflection of its owners!

No person should tell another how to vote, but any and all voters are entitled to express opinions about whom they think can best represent them. So, what is the opportunity at hand?

First, let's recognize that chaos is really a lot of individual elements doing their own predictable things at the same time. We can clarify things by narrowing our field of study to tribal, state and nation.

As voters we have the opportunity to

(1) restore some checks and balances by changing political parties at the national level,



(2) rebalancing the parties at the state level and opposing all proposed initiatives and amendments and

(3) electing some listeners and doers at the tribal level.

The effects could be to get American ideals of freedom and democracy back to our highest priorities as a nation, moving our state government away from policing individual behavior and refocusing on essential services, and re-starting a sputtering tribal government.

And, if Democrats in Washington, better balance in Pierre and new blood in Pine Ridge don't show a marked improvement we will have the opportunity to try again in two years.

Let us build the Rosebud Sioux a tribal economy

Dear Editor,

I want to talk to the Sicangu Tetunwan Lakota Oyate about some economic development that will be coming to our tribe very soon.

I have worked on many projects thus the reason for me writing at this time.

Our people need jobs and Housing for many of our relatives and revenues for our tribe as do many other tribes. We are the Sicangu Lakota with a proud heritage and history. Even before the settlers and soldiers came here to force us into the reservation lifestyle we exercised our true sovereignty by practicing our way of life, which included our own tribal economy. Ironically, our tribe and many others IRA tribes are operating under a Tribal Constitution and By-Laws that were modeled after the American Legion, everyone should know this.

A long time ago we traded with other tribes and when the wasicu traders came they traded with us too. The men of this tribe implemented this economy by being providers and protectors. The women became involved in this by using their expertise in manual manufacturing of clothing, food and shelter.

We survived in this way through a nomadic lifestyle following the buffalo and game around in an area in the great plains.

We are part of Seven Council Fires (Oceti Sakowin). But we have been known to occupy as far North to Canada, as far south as Texas and as far East as the Minnesota and Wisconsin Woodlands and to the South East to the Carolinas. This all has to do with having our own economy.

We are now moving towards self-sufficiency through business development.

We will create jobs, housing and revenue. But I am very disturbed and concerned on a few areas within our recent and good projects. I have tried to voice these concerns but have fallen on deaf ears. It is you the relatives of this great nation that can open some eyes and ears.

Our leaders must know that Rosebud is our Agency Headquarters where our forefathers came to deal and negotiate with government officials in the past.

Firstly, the tribe intends to build a grocery store along U.S. highway 18 near Mission, in the middle of nowhere.

It is my belief that this Grocery Store is designed specifically for our tribal membership.

Any business we create must first address the needs of our people, specifically our tribal membership and should be located and built at the heart of our people, which is Rosebud Agency Headquarters. The other area that we must think about is where should we build houses. There is such a thing called "Critical Mass", meaning that for our purposes, we must have the population to sustain the businesses necessary for self-sustainability.

Right now at this very moment we need at least 1000 homes whether it be homeownership or rental. At this time the tribe is moving forward with a housing manufacturing facility to put out 50 homes a year when we should be thinking about manufacturing at least 200 homes a year and even push this project to put up to 600 homes out a year selling 50 percent of these to the open market, generating revenue, while addressing the need for jobs and housing at the same time.

I can envision Rosebud as our own tribal business district, government headquarters with a new office complex and a build up of a well planned out residential area.

It will take planning dollars to do this for Master Planning, Zoning and Infrastructure. But we must also collaborate with local, regional and national organizations to even begin addressing all of our problems. And yes we are in a socio-economic crisis. Our largest and fastest growing population is between 18 and 35. So we must remember them or we will fall deeper into poverty.

We are also in the process of developing an Integrated Electronic Manufacturing Facility that will create 250 jobs within five years.

But any time you develop a tribally owned business you must include a separation of powers to keep politics and day-to-day operations separate in the business affairs of the tribe. This means not putting council representatives on any board of a tribally chartered enterprise, LLC or corporation.

As a result within a year the Rosebud people will have many good things to talk about around the campfires and we will be coming out impressively very soon and it's important to keep the support of the people by providing information at key periods in time. I also wouldn't mind hearing from other tribes on what they are doing or if they need help with a project they can e-mail me.

Judge Fuller understands tribal sovereignty

By Charlie Abourzek
Special the the Times

On Nov. 7, Lakotas who live in Shannon County may be the deciding factor in the one contested judicial race in the 7th Circuit, between the current Judge Peter Fuller, and his opponent, Fall River county prosecutor Lance Russell. It is going to be close election for Judge Fuller and he needs your help!

Judge Pete Fuller understands the principles of federal Indian law that protect tribes and tribal members. He seems to have a very good understanding of tribal sovereignty as it is laid out in federal law, and he has shown great respect for the rights of the Lakota people of Shannon County.

In one state court trial in Shannon County a few years ago, which are usually held in Hot Springs, making it difficult for Shannon County residents to travel there to serve on jury duty, Judge Fuller ruled that the trial should be moved from Hot Springs to the Pine Ridge Tribal Court House on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, and that he would sit as the judge in Pine Ridge.

This is the kind of respect and compassion he has often showed for citizens who live on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Judge Fuller, who is the most experienced judge in that judicial race, is running against prosecutor Lance Russell, the prosecutor who challenged the tribal jurisdiction of the Oglala Sioux Tribe in the South Dakota Supreme Court, where he lost, and later the United States Supreme Court, which refused to hear Lance Russell's challenge to tribal jurisdiction. As I stated earlier, this case was defended by our law firm, and particularly by our staff attorney Rena Atchison.

In the upcoming November 7th election, Judge Fuller needs your help. The election will be close, because the 7th Circuit is made up of not only Shannon County, but also Custer, Fall River, and Pennington County. Mr. Russell has a lot more votes in Custer and Fall River county, so the votes that come from Shannon County may make the difference!

Judge Pete Fuller is a wonderful father, grandfather, a great attorney, and a fair and compassionate judge. As a longtime advocate for the Lakota people, I hope you will support him in the upcoming election on November 7th.

Don't forget to vote and take a friend or family member with you to vote. The Lakota people in Shannon County have shown, in the recent elections, that their votes do make a difference! If Shannon County turns out for Judge Fuller, he can win!

Thank you for your support of Judge Peter Fuller - he is a good man and a great judge!

Things to empower yourself

Gate of corruption opens wide when people in power are users

By Patty Pourier

It is amazing to me that the Chairman of the Oglala Sioux Tribe can be impeached because of a statement she said, and yet the tribal politicians are willing to tolerate severe drug abuse by one another. You know who I am talking about.

But the truth is our politicians are a reflection of the people they represent. The acceptance and tolerance of the use of drugs is astounding.

More than 50 percent of the population of Shannon County is under the age of 21. So maybe that is it. The younger generation has a high tolerance level of dysfunctional and very dangerous behavior. The only thing wrong with blaming the young people is… they are not the politicians. Thirty, forty, fifty and sixty year olds are the users.

I am not talking about just a beer or other alcoholic beverage; I am talking about cocaine, the current drug of choice among the drug using populous of our reservation. When a person uses drugs, like cocaine, it affects every part of their lives, when they are using and when they are not high.

It screws up decisions, and the sound thought process non-users have.

How can we allow drug users to keep in positions of importance in our tribe? When will the drug testing on the books start to be enforced? How much longer can the people suffer because of the epidemic of drug abuse ravaging our country?

Who does the drug abuse by political figures hurt?

It hurts our children. It hurts our elders.

It hurts our school system.

It hurts our health care system. It hurts our law enforcement. It hurts our economic development. It hurts our environment. It hurts our ability to have respect from the outside world. It hurts the ability of people to respect themselves. It hurts the beautiful Lakota culture values.

The gate of corruption opens wide when people in power are users. Think about it - how good of a decision is someone going to make when they are preoccupied with using. And if you think you can use and still be effective, you are wrong! Being a user of drugs and alcohol screws up your thinking. Period.

Drug abuse hurts in ways we cannot list here because it is so far reaching. When a user has to make decisions based on protecting his supplier, it hurts everyone. Especially when the user is in a person of power, holding a political office.

So how important is it to vote for someone that is not a user in the upcoming election? It is very important, but may be impossible. The ballot has been narrowed since the primary to only a few. And some of the races do not have a straight person to elect. That is sad. That is devastating to the people the politicians represent.

Good leaders, straight leaders, that can make sound judgments with clean and clear minds, that are not affected by drugs are not to much to ask from a society. Especially a society that has so many needs as the Lakota Nation.

I do not intend to beat up the users. They are sick. They need help. They need to get straight to be all they can be to the people who need them. If you are one of these people, do yourself a huge favor and get help. You know who you are.

All the political promises you make will not be as important as the one of getting and keeping straight. It will do more for you, your family and the people you represent, than any other one decision you can make in the next two years.

It will help to create a healthier government, and community. Please, reflect for a moment on the positive things that this one decision will create.

Notes From Indian Country

State, tribal elections loom large in South Dakota on Nov. 7

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Politics can be different in South Dakota. It is a red state where the independent-minded voters often vote blue.

With only one member of the House of Representatives to its name, Stephanie Herseth (D-SD), the South Dakota went Democratic two years ago in support of Herseth. Of the two US senators, one - Tim Johnson - is a Democrat. This year Herseth is challenged by a member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, Bruce Whalen, for her Congressional seat. Whalen is a Republican, a real oddity in Indian country since most tribes usually vote the Democratic ticket.

But there are also important campaigns taking place on a couple of the Indian reservations. After Cecilia Fire Thunder, the impeached president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, narrowly lost her bid for re-election when she fell by three votes in the reservation's primary election this month, the incumbent and acting president Alex White Plume, will face former three-time-president, John Yellow Bird Steele.

Steele is a formidable opponent and has strong support in the reservation's two largest districts, Wounded Knee and Pine Ridge. White Plume took over the duties of president after the tribal council suspended and then impeached Fire Thunder for her feminist stand on abortion rights.

The irony of the council's action against Fire Thunder is that if any of the council members truly knew their own history and culture, they (especially the men) would never have taken her to task for her stand on women's rights because the traditional male of the Oglala Sioux Tribe never, not ever, interfered in the rights of a Lakota woman to decide her own fate when it came to child birth. A Lakota woman always had the traditional and spiritual right to make her own decision.

It has only been since the Christianization of so many members of the tribe that moral issues, usually guided by cultural and traditional values, have made the transition to the values and beliefs of the different Christian religious groups.

A physician, Jack Billion, of Sioux Falls, has challenged Governor Mike Rounds (R-SD). Billion has made the issue of banning all abortions, HB1215, passed by the South Dakota legislators this year and signed into law by Governor Rounds, the centerpiece of his campaign. Because the law also prevents an abortion by victims of rape or incest, Billion believes it is a law that is unfair and dangerous for women.

The law was challenged by the South Dakota voters and is on the ballot. And although Gov. Rounds, a Catholic, has allowed his religious beliefs to overshadow his political beliefs, he remains a popular governor.

However, his popularity has waned on the Indian reservations where a strong voter turnout has influenced several state and national elections of late. He made a solemn vow to work with the tribal leaders in the state by inviting them to his home and sitting down and talking about the issues impacting the reservations on a one-to-one basis. To my knowledge, this had not happened.

As a matter of fact, several tribes, including the Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe in Eastern South Dakota, have been campaigning relentlessly to get Gov. Rounds to amend their gaming compacts to allow for more gaming devices in their casinos. They see this as a way to increase jobs and revenues on the reservation and thus greatly improve their economic position. To date, Rounds has refused to comply. This stubbornness has prompted the Flandreau Tribe to take out television ads statewide addressing the issue.

Gov. Rounds and his attorney general, Larry Long, also fought tooth and nail to stop Mike Jandreau and his Lower Brule Sioux Tribe, from taking land into trust near the city of Chamberlain, SD to use as a recreational site for the tribe. The tribe won in the lower courts and watched apprehensively as the case wound its way all of the way to the US Supreme Court where the court refused to hear the case and let the lower court ruling stand. Clearly a sound defeat for Gov. Rounds and Larry Long.

Long is challenged this year by an attorney named Ron Volesky, an enrolled member of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe. Volesky, a Democrat, has been active in South Dakota politics for many years and is well respected by whites as well as Indians. However, Long has a strong Republican following and the job position of attorney general can have many implications to state politics and the Republican majority fears the politics of the more liberal candidate Volesky. Long has hidden behind this fear quite effectively over the years.

The Indian media in South Dakota will come out strongly in favor of Billion for governor and Volesky for attorney general, but the powerful Republican vote will more than likely countermand the Indian vote.

Stepanie Herseth is the odds on favorite to retain her seat in Congress against Whalen. She was leading 60 percent to 26 percent in the latest statewide poll. Whalen has identified himself much too strongly with the anti-abortionists to the point where he has almost become a Johnny-one-note on the subject. In a recent televised debate with Herseth he turned nearly every topic to include the abortion issue knowing full well that Herseth does not support the ban.

Yes, politics in South Dakota can be different and for such a small state, it drew some of the Republican Party's heaviest hitters and huge funds from the Republican National Committee two years ago when it pushed Senator Tom Daschle out of the national political arena.

November 7 should be very interesting when the polls open on that day throughout the state and on the Pine Ridge and Cheyenne River Reservations where Harold Frazier, the incumbent president, is expected to retain his seat.

Academic achievement among Oglala youth: could it be a facade?

By Ivan Star
Oglala, S.D.
Columnist

More than 15 years have lapsed since the nation's public school system first initiated proactive steps to deal with the problem of high dropout rates and low academic achievement levels among their "Indian" students.

For instance, two Minnesota school districts each opened new American Indian Magnet Schools in 1991 and 1992. These schools are the All Nations Magnet School in St. Paul and the Four Winds Magnet School in Minneapolis.

American Indian refers to the curricula base. The Minneapolis school (K-12) program of study is French and Indian; refers directly to the fact that the French arrived in the area first and are integral of local history. The St. Paul school program is American Indian (K-8) amd World Cultures and Languages (K-6).

In a basic sense, the "Indian" is included in the curriculum. In fact, Native America is at the core of these schools's curriculum. In other words, the "Indian" becomes integral of American history, at least in these schools. The magnet concept is simple: to attract certain students, mostly those who are partial to this particular set of courses.

All subjects are developed from a Native American perspective.

I will try to explain why this is so important. In 1990, a public school teacher developed and implemented an unprecedented method of teaching students about the Columbus Discovery syndrome. First, let us establish the fact that students have trouble with the idea that books, especially a school textbook, can lie.

They may not be interested in the Civil War as to when and why it happened; but they certainly know that a courageous explorer named Christopher Columbus discovered America. Seemingly, all students commonly share this particular piece of "knowledge", regardless of whether or not it is factual.

The teacher began by prearranging the demonstration with one of the students.

As the students settle in for the class, he takes a student's purse in plain view of everybody. Almost immediately, a din of protest arises from the students. All of them demand the return of the purse to the proper owner.

The teacher disputes their objections by trying to explain why the purse does not belong to the student. He argues that the purse is indeed his and proceeds to prove it. He opens the purse and takes out objects. "This is my lipstick. This is my brush. There, that proves the purse is mine. Ownership is 99 percent possession!"

The students are mildly irritated that their teacher would pry into the student's property without the slightest regard for her privacy.

Next, the teacher demands to know how they can say the purse belongs to one of his students, "Why you are so positive the purse is not mine?" Finally, he says, "What if I said I discovered the purse, then would it be mine?"

The students are somewhat unsure at this point but are certain that the purse still belongs to their fellow student. The teacher then asks, "So, why do we say that Columbus discovered America?" At that point, the students become aware of something they have not heard before.

Most students are aware of the fact that their textbooks do tell them that the new world began with Columbus.

Prior to that time, no humans were in existence in the new land. They know that Columbus was a hero-type character and it is very acceptable to honor this great man once a year with parades and other festivities.

What they do not know is that most, if not all, textbook portray only a biased version of this historic event. They do not know that on the island of Hispaniola, a mere 40 years of Spanish control was enough to obliterate an entire race of people. Ultimately, life began in the new world only after Columbus "discovered" it.

It is strange how no one hears about indigenous life prior to 1492.

Somehow, no one learned that the Taino and Arawak put their labor into making the land produce, similar to the labor that purchased the lipstick, brush, and other items in the student's purse thereby making it hers.

Popular textbooks do not tell us that Columbus returned to Spain with parrots, indigenous plants, some gold and a few of the people he called "Indian." Anyone can figure out the fact that his was the beginning of the trans-Atlantic slave trade.

The problem is that most people are so accustomed to this biasness that it is extremely difficult to deviate from it.

While such optimistic developments were occurring within the public school system, our own reservation school system was far from addressing this particular problem.

I know there are many restrictions and obstacles within the federal educational system. The bureaucracy itself may hinder teachers from doing the things they would really like to do.

However, there are things one can do. One easy thing to do is to analyze an elementary textbook, specifically its treatment of Columbus and the "Indians". How accurate is the book on this historic event. What was omitted that in your judgment would be important for a more comprehensive understanding of Columbus.

I should be encouraging teachers to enhance their levels of education, but my credibility remains questionable. In other words, I have no business telling our educators what to do.

Therefore, I can only hope that more of our educators keep abreast of educational trends abroad. There is plenty of research material on this particular subject.

We have been "educating" our Lakota youth for decades and we still hold the nation's highest dropout rates and the lowest academic achievement levels. Is anyone asking the proverbial question, "Why?" Instead, our educators seem to work hard at painting a pretty picture regarding academic achievement.

A 1993 Bureau of Indian Affairs study of Indian education on the Pine Ridge revealed some interesting facts.

The four high and nine elementary schools served about 5,577 students. This student body is predominantly indigenous. More than three-fourths traveled to and from school by bus.

The study also revealed some shortcomings: the reservation schools were in the bottom 10% for funding. The BIA Office of Indian Education Programs is their primary funding source.

Teacher turnover was eight times higher than the national average and a poll of 500 seventh and eighth graders indicated that 460 saw little or no opportunities on the Pine Ridge.

Should we be working on the "big picture" as opposed to taking the few success stories, which we do have, and blowing them up for everyone to see? Our educators may need to move the contents of this excuse bag over to the challenge box.

I see most of our students falling through the cracks; they are doomed as they venture forth into their future.

I am not one of our educated elite, but a college degree is not essential to perceive this long-standing condition.

Northern Perspectives

Reverence for the land has always been there

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I often wonder how much Lakota people sit around and think about the future of our tribal nations, now that a great mind like Vine DeLoria, Jr. is no longer amongst us. I suspect that we don't really take the time to think about the long term impact of such things as endangered species, poverty, and overcrowding and what these issues may mean to the indigenous people of this land and to our future generations.

It brings to mind some of the issues that Charmaine White Face so eloquently warns people of; the destruction in our sacred 'He Sapa' through years of desecration, neglect and failed resource policies.

There is a rather eloquent and controversial biologist at Harvard University, E.O. Wilson, whose life's work has been devoted to studying ecosystems and biodiversity. Ecosystems are simply those places which support species of animals and plants and life in this crazy old world is threatening the very foundation of their existence. Scientist can actually estimate how such places are shrinking and the number of species which are disappearing each year. In Sumatra and New Guinea for example, there are less than a thousand rhinos and a tsunami could come and wipe them out, but we hope not.

Charmaine speaks of an orchid that is native to the Black Hills and which is in being endangered.

Wilson says that no matter if we believe that the world was created by divine intervention or by Mother Nature, we have to be able to meet on common ground and agree that the problem is that we need to save the most precious thing that we have and that is what Charmaine calls, "Ina Macoce' or our earth mother.

The world is billions of years old, yet, it has taking mankind a very short time to damage Mother Earth and cause many species of plants and animals to disappear. Wilson said one of the great dangers now is that the Endangered Species Act could be tampered with and that would be a mistake.

According to the United Nations and Wilson's lecture, there are some one billion people in the world who are living in dire poverty.

Their environments are being stressed by the world's increasing population and it is not likely to improve unless we can intervene and slow down the destruction of places like the rain forest and other fertile countries in Africa and South America which contain a large part of the world's species.

Apparently, when the total worth of nations in the world is combined, there is more than enough money to be able to turn around the current course of things and save Mother Earth provided that we enact the correct environmental policies. I'm sure that it is more complicated than that, but Wilson says that we need to compete with logging companies, drilling companies and others and buy up land and protect them.

It isn't an expensive undertaking as land in many remote areas is not costly to purchase.

There apparently is this relationship between the environment that is not productive, as those most in need are not able to be sustained or supported because Mother Earth is being damaged. If poor people are unable to have access to land and to be able to support themselves, they continue in their present circumstance.

One positive note is that even though the world's population is growing, the birth rate for some nations has stabilized or slowed down to the point that the world can absorb more people and still continue to make a recovery if we protect our natural resources and enter into agreements that will reduce harmful emissions and leave pristine wilderness areas in the Black Hills, Canada and Alaska in tact. It is never too late.

Where Lakota people are concerned, our philosophy about the care and protection of Mother Earth has been correct all along. We have always had this reverence for land, because we always knew that it could sustain us if we respected its limitations and did not over burden it.

There is something to be said for a society which identifies as being one with nature and all things which are alive. Tribal nations were the original environmentalist and history simply did not sit up and take notice. It's still not too late to learn from Lakota people as we never produced toxins the flowed into our rivers and killed fish and wildlife and defaced Mother Earth by carving into our mountains.

Professor Wilson stated in another lecture that believing in science is necessarily incompatible with believing that the world was made by God or what they are now calling 'intelligent design.' Lakota people believe that we emerged onto Mother Earth in the sacred 'He Sapa' or thereabouts and, and thus, by that reasoning we do not necessarily believe in science.

It could be that indigenous people do not believe in capitalism either and that is what makes us shy away from material wealth and the accumulation of 'things.'

The tension that I see in being a capitalist and believing in the Lakota way of life is one of caring for Mother Earth much more than the almighty dollar.

We come from the earth and our connection is stronger to 'Unci Maka' to use a contemporary Lakota slogan, than it is to making money.

It doesn't matter if you are a scientist or a believer in the Lakota way of life, we all agree that Mother Earth is being endangered and it is not too late to be a conservationist.

Pine Ridge Indian Reservations, Shannon County, South Dakota

the Aberdeen Area Indian health Service seeks to construct sanitation facilities in the Pine Ridge community on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, Shannon County, South Dakota. A Draft Environmental Assessment (EA covering these proposed facilities is now available for public inspection, review, and comment.

The Draft EA addresses the potential environmental effects of constructing a new wastwater treatment facility with continuous discharge to an unnamed drainage which empties into White Clay Creek approximately 1/2 mile downstream of White Clay Dam. Copies of the Draft EA are available for review and comment at the Oglala Sioux Tribe Environmental Protection Program Office in Pine Ridge, SD, the City of Martin Community Library, and the IHS Martin Field Office in Martin, South Dakota. The public is invited and encouraged to review the Draft EA and provide comment.

Vote YES on Amendment E and take a stand for Native rights

Dear Editor:

Once again I take pen in hand to write about some concerns I have and share with others, primarily in regard to the upcoming state/national elections.

There are many amendments/choices for those of us who choose to vote will need to concern ourselves with.

My main concern is with "Constitutional Amendment E." The advocates of this amendment have repeatedly explained that its intent is to remove South Dakota judges 'Judicial Immunity,' that they be held accountable if they flagrantly violate an individual's civil rights.

Alarmists have stated that this would also apply to citizens serving on State Juries, school boards, city councils, etc.

This is much more than an exaggeration and is, in fact, a distortion of the intent of the amendment to the South Dakota State Constitution.

The real intention is to make judges accountable.

What is further frustrating and downright exasperating is that alarmists and truth distorters have said that this would also affect or would apply to tribal councils.

I first read this from a non-Indian editorial writer who uses smoke screens to air opinions on tribal matters.

I recently read this same view point from a Native writer who has an advice column in an area newspaper (one I enjoy reading immensely). She also writes that this will affect tribal councils. I don't know which tribe she is enrolled in but in Sicangu Country, State enacted constitutional amendments do not apply to the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council or our RST Constitution.

What is wrong with holding judges accountable? Why should we not take every measure to protect the civil rights of all?

How many times have we heard of these rights taken and violated by South Dakota State Judges against Native Americans. How many of us can recall the infuriating decision of a Winner judge to send Homer Chief Eagle to prison for tona years over a can of "Beanie Weanies?" In state and federal judicial systems, there are different sets of rules for Indians who are being adjudicated.

Those I have heard from who advocate for Native civil rights, support Amendment E.

The reality is that this amendment will probably not pass, but we can overwhelmingly support Amendment E in Indian Country.

Let us show State judges and tax payers that we are tired of the dual justice system which exists in South Dakota; that Natives should have the same rights and protections enjoyed by the wasicu.

What also alarmed me was that the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council on Sept. 27, actually passed a resolution to oppose Amendment E making State Judges accountable.

This resolution did not go through a community or a committee but rather was presented as emergency legislation from the floor.

It was motioned, seconded and questioned by Antelope Council Representatives. It was motioned and seconded for approval by a Rosebud representative. Later in the day, a motion was made to reconsider and table this Resolution (06-248).

The tribal council changed their mind after hearing from a Lakota who advocates for civil and human rights. He is also a tribal member. The intent of tabling the resolution was in order to hear from others, besides those advocating. Opposition to . Constitutional Amendment E, which should have been done hear from both sides.

I wondered if anyone on the council had read and was alarmed by the editorial of a local newspaper which opined that Amendment E would/could apply to them as well, or did they see the article for what it was: another smoke screen.

Again, the constitutions of the tribe and state are different creatures. One does not apply to the other, don't you know?

Our Rosebud Sioux Tribal Constitution, in fact, says that the tribal council is its sole judge. Years ago my tahansi George Whirlwind Soldier served on the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council; to demigods, beyond reproach. Not much has changed. The Sicangu have been in a long process of having our very own Constitutional revision re proposed amendments to Article II "The Governing Body." The RST "Constitutional Task Force" submitted the carefully scrutinized amendments (narrated down from 182 to 27 proposed amendments) to the Dept. of Interior Bureau of Indian Affairs over a year and a half ago.

We have yet to hear of a definitive date to cast our ballots to amend the RST Constitution, a document, my friend Edd Charging Elk once said, that serves only 12 percent or so of the entire Oyate.

Vote Yes on Amendment E. Vote for protecting civil rights!

I pray continuously for the victims of crime as well as those victimized by the institutionally racist South Dakota State and Federal Judicial Systems, especially those wrongfully convicted and imprisoned.

We can also vote to replace the current South Dakota Attorney General and put in place a Native American who will represent and serve all South Dakota citizens. Vote for Ron Valesky.

Vote for Initiated Measure 7 to represent South Dakota Video Lottery. The State refuses to negotiate in good faith Gaming Compacts with tribes. Hit 'em where it hurts, their pocketbook! Gov. Rounds and his staff will not negotiate unless their demands for tribes to negotiate on other issues are met. Issues having nothing to do with gaming.

We can rescind our tax agreements and other covenants with the state, if the state continues their gamesmanship and closet racism.

If we were truly sovereign, we would administer these agreements ourselves.

As for Initiated Measure 8, to repeal the gross receipts tax on wireless communications services (cell phones), I can only say that this tax is also applied on reservations as well as a tax to help fund the SD Public Utilities Commission.

These are taxes which are not included in the agreement that different tribes have entered into with the state. Thus, they are illegal on the Rosebud and other reservations, plain and simple.

On another matter, I believe that the Alltel Cellular company is taking advantage of reservation Lifeline customers. The 80 percent or more of us who qualify for the 'Commod Phone' end up paying exorbitant excess monthly bills on features not agreed upon.

The intent of the Federal Communications Commission in initiating the Lifeline linkup programs in Indian Country was meant to be an affordable reality.

Alltel and other companies have not come to Indian Country completely out of the goodness of their hearts. They received Eligible Telecommunications Carrier status from the FCC and are funded to provide coverage to an area considered unserved (reservations included).

Lifeline customers pay unbelievable costs in features accessed by minors and others, resulting in high bills which have caused tears to be shed by elders and caused anguish to others.

It is an almost insurmountable task to confront and straighten these complex bills with Alltel representatives.

I help represent the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Utility Commission. I propose to other Tribal Utilities Commissions, or equivalents, that if you share my concerns, we need to meet and address this and other issues.

We can begin by lodging intertribal complaints with the FCC. We can challenge the ETC status.

In researching Amendment E and tribal council actions and intentions, I tried to do a thorough job.

Wopila Tanka to the RST Office of the Secretary. You are always professional and helpful. Reaching and accessing others is not so easy. I have often heard stories of the inaccessibility of council representatives. Wopila Tanka to Council Representative Russell Eagle Bear for being accessible, for standing up for Lakota sovereignty and human rights.

Thank you to Robert Moore, council member, for taking a stand against corruption and impropriety.

Pilamaya to Council Rep Marion Young One Star for acknowledging the Oyate, for not scurrying by Tribal Members, but stopping to shake hands, to smile and offer encouragement. These Council Reps (and others) exemplify Lakota values and virtues.

Thank you to KINI for keeping us informed. For honoring our Veterans and Akicita. I was happy to hear my relative Ben Black Bear III, call all the way from Iraq to offer the Oyate greetings. Wopila to him.

Also to Specialist James Eagleman, who was also in Iraq. You gentlemen and all native Akicita, do us proud.

Kiksuya - remember - Vote YES on SD Constitutional Amendment E on Tuesday, November 7. Take a stand for Native Rights. Remember the way the Attorney General of South Dakota has worded the amendments (especially Amendment E that distorts the truth of what they actually will do).

Make judges accountable. Remember Homer Chief Eagle who was sentenced to many years in prison over a can of Beanie Weanies.

Wopila tanka he!

Little Wound snares Falcons, moves into second round of playoffs, downed Eagle Butte to finish regular season

Red Cloud, Pine Ridge lose first round of playoffs

Lower Brule clobbers Faith in 9B opening round

By Tom Crash
Times Sports

KYLE/RAPID CITY/CUSTER/LOWER BRULE - Once again Todd County shut down Little Wound's running game but Johnny Cloud made sure the result was not the same as the senior quarterback hit Shilo Pierce on a nine yard TD pass to tie the first round playoff game with Todd County Tuesday with 2:35 to go in the fourth quarter and then hit TJ McCauley not once but twice in the back of the end zone for a two point conversion and a 14-12 win.

"We really couldn't get anything going on the ground," said Darrell Hunter, Little Wound head coach, "but our offensive lineman really stepped it up for this game and gave Johnny some protection and time to throw the ball."

The first half was a defensive struggle but Little Wound had two excellent opportunities to score. The Mustangs drove down the field as Cloud connected with Devon LeBeau on a 39 yard pass and hit McCauley on a 20 yarder. Little Wound got down to the one yard line only to be penalized 15 yards for a lack of proper equipment on a player. The Mustangs gave up the ball on downs and missed that scoring opportunity. Little Wound marched into Todd County territory again, this time getting down to the four. After being stopped they attempted a fake field goal with McCauley throwing a pass that was intercepted at the goal line by Canku One Star, a Todd County freshman defensive back who ran it back to the Falcon 31 yard line.

Todd County promptly moved down the field and with 13 seconds left in the first half put the first points on the board with a 23 yard half back pass from Gunner Krogman to Falcon quarterback CJ Spotted Tail. CJ's lateral to Krogman had sweep written all over it until Krogman pulled up and hit a wide open Spotted Tail for the score, the kick attempt failed but the Falcons had a 6-0 halftime lead.

After an exchange of possessions in the third quarter and a partially blocked punt by Devon LeBeau, Little Wound scored on a one yard plunge by Shilo Pierce, Cloud's kick failed and the score was tied at 6-6.

With 8:38 to go in the fourth, Krogman intercepted his second pass which led to a one yard quarterback sneak by Spotted Tail to give Todd County a 12-6 lead. Spotted Tail's two point conversion pass to Vernie White Hawk was dropped.

Cloud put an exclamation point on a 16 for 24, 227 yard day with his nine yard pass to Shilo Pierce for the game tying touchdown. Little Wound had originally set up on the four but received and illegal motion penalty which put them back to the nine. On the two point conversion, Cloud hit McCauley in the back of the end zone only to have that called back for a motion penalty. Cloud came right back and hit TJ surrounded by three Falcon defenders for the two conversion and the 14-12 win.

Even though Pierce was held to 11 carries for a minus 18 yards he managed to score both of Little Wound's TD's, caught four passes for 24 yards and led the Mustangs on defense.

"My boys just don't have no quit in them," said Hunter, "we kept fighting back to get the win, we keyed on Krogman, he really hurt us in the first game and its nice to play in front of the home crowd, when the crowd gets into the game it really fires up the boys."

Michael Pretty Voice Crane led the team in tackles along with McCauley; LeBeau finished with three catches for 78 yards. Krogman carried the ball 18 times for 83 yards, grabbed two interceptions, covered one fumble and passed for a touchdown. Jesus Duran led the Falcons in rushing with 11 carries for 69 yards, Spotted Tail was 12 of 23 for 138 yards.

Todd County finishes their season with a 5-4 record while Little Wound moves their record to 7-2 and travels to Winner Monday night for a 7pm central time game with Winner.

Last week the Mustangs closed out the regular season with a 20-8 home win over Cheyenne Eagle Butte. Tyson Maxon, a senior transfer from McLaughlin, grabbed a Little Wound fumble and ran it back 33 yards for a touchdown, Spencer Peterson added the two point conversion on the ground.

Johnny Cloud hit TJ McCauley on an 80 yard TD pass for Little Wound's first score; Shilo Pierce scored on a three yard TD run and followed it up with a two point run then added a 72 yard TD pass to Devon LeBeau to wrap up a Little Wound 20-8 win. Pierce finished with 13 carries for 49 yards, Cloud was nine of 16 for 225 yards and a touchdown and TJ McCauley caught five passes for 139 yards and a touchdown.

Red Cloud finishes best season in ten years with playoff appearance

After suffering through three straight 0-8 years, the Red Cloud Crusaders wrapped up their 2006 chapter with a 60-6 loss to top rated St. Thomas More Tuesday night; the Crusaders finished their regular season with a 39-18 road loss to Todd County last Thursday.

"Despite the last two games, this was a great year for our program," said Ken Franks and Bobb Pille as they joined the Red Cloud fans congratulating the players on a good season as they walked off the field and up the steps at St. Thomas More," it was a really good year, the team has a new enthusiasm and a winning spirit and a future."

Billy Scott finished the Todd County game with 22 rushes for 125 yards and a touchdown while Carl Swallow ran the ball five times for 62 yards and a TD. AB Morgan was 14 of 24 for 182 yards, one TD and three interceptions. Dave Giago caught seven passes for 144 yards and a TD.

Gunner Krogman led Todd County with 19 carries and 196 yards and three touchdowns, Jesus Duran finished with six carries, 47 yards and a TD. Mike Neiss caught a 59 yard TD pass from Spotted Tail, ran a kickoff back 85 yards for a touchdown and grabbed two interceptions.

Christian McGhee, a junior wide receiver hauled down an 18 yard pass for Red Cloud's only touchdown on Tuesday night against St. Thomas More. AB Morgan was nine of 17 for 97 yards, one TD and one interception. St. Thomas More showed why they are ranked number one in the State in 11B dominating all aspects of the game scoring on their first six possessions of the game with Dustin Nowotny scoring four touchdowns in the first quarter and five in the game. The Cavaliers are now 9-0 and play Stanley County on Monday.

Red Cloud finishes the season at 5-4, their best record in ten years and look to the future to build on this year's success. Bill Scott finished the year with 1,227 yards rushing and should be in the running for all state.

Lower Brule opens the playoffs with 64-12 win over Faith

The Middletent twins helped to lead the Lower Brule Sioux to their seventh win of the year as they knocked off Faith 64-12.

Kyal Middletent ran for 177 yards and two touchdowns, ran a kickoff back 76 yards for a TD and passed for two TD's. He also led the defense with 11 tackles, two interceptions and a fumble recovery.

Kansas Middletent returned a fumble recovery 45 yards for a touchdown and had 8 tackles on defense, a sack and an interception.

Pine Ridge closes out season with a loss to Custer

"For a good part of the game, it was a field position game, then the flood gates opened," said Melvin Smiley Sierra, Pine Ridge high school principal, "the 43 yard punt return by Darin Smith midway through the second period sealed the deal."

Louis Good Shield was in charge of the floodgates as he ran for 142 yards on the ground and two touchdowns.

Dave "Bulldawg" Michaud returned to the field for the first time in three games after straining ankle ligaments. Michaud played quarterback in the second half. Pine Ridge finished with a 4-5 record for the year frustrated by close losses to Bennett County, Little Wound and Crow Creek.

Men arrested after wild chase

MITCHELL (AP) - Two men were arrested in Gregory County after a vehicle pursuit Friday that involved more than 25 law officers and a Highway Patrol plane.

Authorities allege that Peter Fast Horse, 21, and Daryl Brave, 25, stole a pickup in Sioux Falls and were headed for the Rosebud Indian Reservation.

Authorities said the pair might have been responsible for theft of beer from a Parkston store and a report from a motorist about occupants of a pickup truck tossing out beer cans as they drove on Highway 44.

The pair was caught in another vehicle reported stolen in Platte after authorities said it was driven across fields and through 15 or 20 fences before overturning in a ravine at Buryanek Recreation Area northwest of Platte.

Lakota studies do what is common in an uncommon way

BATESLAND - Now as the saying goes, "here's the rest of the story" (in written English):

The major purpose of this writing piece is based on the notion of sharing information with the public about Indian education - teaching and learning basic skills while retaining a Lakota identity through language and culture. But, first, I'd like to acknowledge and honor all writers, reporters and Lakota Country Times staff by saying, Wopila! You have done an excellent job of presenting a Lakota perspective on many issues of importance to the Lakota Oyate. Waste yelo.

This is a first and an introductory article. The article is going to focus and talk about Shannon County School District (SCSD) and its Lakota studies program at four different attendance centers - Wolf Creek, Rockyford, Red Shirt and Batesland Schools. Interestingly, SCSD is a public school and the overall enrollment for the current school year (2006-07) is approximately 1000-1100 students. Most students are of Oglala Lakota descent and reside on the Pine Ridge Sioux Indian Reservation. Students come from many different autonomous villages and communities i.e., Pine Ridge Village, Porcupine and the Wounded Knee area. Other communities include: Number Four, Slim Buttes, Calico,Wolf Creek Community and Oglala. And as a convenience to students and parents of the service area, bus service is offered to the Indian communities.

Historically, SCSD has been involved with Lakota studies since the 1970s. In the early years, programs at each site were based primarily on Lakota language instruction via pull out programs. Federal grant monies obtained via proposals on three-year cycles funded these past language instruction programs. SCSD hired local community people as teacher aides; they taught the language classes.

Currently, Lakota studies at SCSD changed significantly since the early 70s. Lakota

Harrison confronts wife's illness through spirituality

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - Ed Harrison's Dakota oyate heritage by way of Ft. Thompson on the Crow Creek Sioux reservation has served him well in confronting his wife, Irene's cancer. He moved to the Rosebud in 1976 and met Irene Lillian Moran and he has been sober ever since.

The Rosebud Sioux reservation is the place where Harrison feels at home as he has 'hunka' relatives that keep him connected. He is gradually learning the Lakota language and in confronting his wife's illness, he has committed himself to learning the spiritual ways of the Lakota. He said, "I tell people when I moved here, I got my sobriety, my serenity and my education.., this is where my friends and 'hunka' relatives are."

His great-great grandfather is John Shoots Enemy who was born in Poplar, Mont. and he has relatives in Ft. Thompson, including an aunt who is 85 years old. His Lakol ocaje is 'Mato Icakiza'

Ed and Irene Harrison of Mission have three adopted children. Irene has been employed by the Rosebud Sioux Tribe for 40 years, while Ed was employed with the RST alcohol treatment program and the White Buffalo Calf Woman's Society.

or Fighting Bear and his hunka relatives are Albert White Hat, Sr. and Goldie Farmer.

As he picked up the Pipe and decided to pursue that increasing spirituality, leksi Albert gave him some great advice. He said, "Let the wind blow through you, but don't let it blow you down" meaning that there may criticism from some quarters, but the responsibility is to persevere, and to learn the songs and ceremonies in the proper way.

As he matures both spiritually and emotionally, Harrison says that he finds himself reflecting on the meaning of his own spirituality as a means to help others. He said, "This is my life, I know what the medicine men gave my wife. I want to live this way of life and help others."

Irene was diagnosed with cancer in 1984 and Ed has taken her to most of the more prominent Lakota wapiya wicasa on the northern plains. The Tree of Life recently built a ceremony house on the Harrison's property south of Mission and completed it three weeks ago. Ed said, "I want to dedicate this building to my wife." Lately, Irene is in a lot of pain from the breast cancer which has progressed into her shoulders and spine. Her Lakol ocaje is 'Cante' wakan win' which was given to her in ceremony. In Lakota, it translates to 'sacred heart woman.'

The building is relatively spacious and Harrison has several hand drums, a war bonnet, a blanket, and other personal items which are

May and Maramag to marry

RAPID CITY - Clint and Michelle May, parents of Fern May and Art and Myrna Maramag, parents of Drew Maramag, are proud to announce the engagement and forthcoming marriage of their children. Fern and Drew are planning a December 16 wedding to be held at Ellsworth, AFB. Fern is currently a student at Oglala Lakota College majoring in Human Services. She is the granddaughter of Cleon and Fern Boomer of Interior. Drew is currently enlisted in the Air Force and is stationed at Ellsworth, AFB.

Janis first graduate of Crazy Horse Alternative School

WANBLEE - On Oct. 10 was a very important day for Jeremy Janis and the Crazy Horse Alternative School.

Janis completed the class work that he was missing to graduate from Crazy Horse School last spring. According to Mr. Mullen, the director of the school, Janis came to class every day, was extremely focused and completed his work with 85 percent accuracy. A graduation party was held in the Alternative School with family and friends attending. He is now exploring his options for the future, which one of them is the military.

Janis is the first graduate from the Alternative School which was started this year. The Alternative School is designed to work with students that need credit to graduate and have a degree of problem completing their work in a regular classroom environment.

The work is web based called Plato. At present there are 16 students enrolled. Muellen knows that once this program becomes known, there will be a waiting list of students. There is a capacity of 10 students in the morning and an additional 10 students in the afternoon.

The requirements are 16 years of age and to have at least six high school credits. Should the information be wanted concerning enrollment, contact Mullen at 605-462-6792 or stop in at the Middle School building next the main building at Crazy Horse School.

Dear Oglala Lakota Voters:

Wopila tanka to you who voted for me on October 3, 2006 during the primary election and I want to encourage you to go to the polls again on November 7th . I am encouraging you to ask those who seek to represent you to uphold the laws of our Tribe along with our Nation. Representing our people is an honorable and responsible position and requires a commitment to all of our people and knowing the laws, which are defined in our ordinances. As you read the following ask yourself do you want someone representing you who violates these laws and who has been a part of the past years council who have brought our Tribe to the continuing financial crisis we are in.

Just because they took some time off does not mean they are not still part of the problem. Ask yourself what have your representatives done to improve your communities, and what role did they play in the overall picture of improving the economy, health, education, and well being of our people. Separation of power is a very important issue to be addressed in the coming years and we must all participate in insuring non-interference of our representatives in the workings of the court. The courts are to interpret and enforce our laws and we must all work together to bring true separation of powers to provide stability and clear understanding to the roles of Executive, Legislative and Judiciary. The Tribe continues to be on high-risk status, which means anyone who is elected into office must prioritize and continue to work at financial stability. We are a Tribe of families with many Veterans who have given their lives many times to protecting the freedoms stated in the constitution and bill of rights and unfortunately some of our council violated these freedoms and processes. I ask you to think of these things and be assured that I will be coming to the communities to ask for your support and help in changing our laws and constitution to strengthen our Tribe and insure our rights are not violated. We may not like what is going on, however we must also work together as Tribal citizens and elected officials to make those changes in a our laws and constitution.

The FireThunder Administration maintained a balanced general fund budget in 2005 and to the present 2006. The following is a report to you on my administration's response to accountability and despite the hard work done, we are still $ 92 million dollars in debt, which is from 1998 to 2004.I encourage the new council to keep the current Treasurer on board along with asking her to provide a comprehensive report to you so she can tell you what has been done up to date.

RECEIVED LOAN FROM SHAKOPEE FOR $ 18 MILLION DOLLARS FOR IMMEDIATE DEBT RESOLUTION. $20 MILLION OF THE LOAN WAS FOR EXPANSION OF CASINO WHICH IS NEARLY COMPLETED.

PRESIDENT FIRETHUNDER SOUGHT THE SUPPORT OF OTHER TRIBAL LEADERS TO URGE CONGRESS TO PASS LEGISLATION OF THE TRIBE TO ASSIST WITH DEBT RESULTING FROM LAND PURCHASE LOANS FROM 1972 MADE WITH THE FARM SERVICE AGENCY/DEPARTMENTOF AGRICULTURE.

THE LEGISLATION WAS PASSED AND SIGNED INTO LAW APRIL OF 2006, THIS LAW BENEFITED 28 TRIBES WITH FSA/LOANS. THE RESULTS ARE THAT THE FSA/LOAN PAYMENT TO DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE HAS BEEN REDUCED BY $ 500,000

PRESIDENT FIRETHUNDER SET UP A RESEARCH TEAM TO ORGANIZE AND LOCATE DOCUMENTS WHICH SHOW THAT THESE FEDERAL MONIES WERE SPENT IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE GRANT REQUIREMENTS.

DOCUMENTS HAVE BEEN PROVIDED TO THE BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, BUREAU OF RECLAMATION (RURAL WATER) INDIAN HEALTH SERVICES THAT ACCOUNT FOR MORE THAN $ 15 MILLION DOLLARS
AND THE RESEARCH CONTINUES TO ANSWER QUESTIONED & DISALLOWED COSTS.

On December 14, 1935 the Oglala Sioux Tribe of Pine Ridge Reservation did approve the constitution and bylaws in accordance with section 16 of the Indian Reorganization Act of June 18, 1934.

On May 30, 2006 the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council voted to suspend President Cecelia FireThunder from a motion off the floor with complaints. Vice President White Plume should not have accepted the motion, as the Secretary of the Tribe following established procedures did not bring it forward.

> *The ordinance states " a complaint must be signed and sworn to and the accused shall be advised of the charges against him at least 20 days previous to the time set for trial and shall be immediately suspended from his duties upon service of such notice."

A complaint must be signed and notarized, with complaint given to the Secretary of the Tribe who logs and stamps it showing acceptance by her office for the council. She then provides copies to tribal attorney's to review. She then notifies the Presidents office to place on the agenda for the next council meeting. She notifies the person being charged with a copy of the complaint and all documents and materials supporting the complaint by either certified mail or hand delivered. The Secretary then prepares packets for the council: copy of the compliant, supporting documents on the complaint, constitution and impeachment ordinance. Once all this is passed out the council either accepts or rejects, if it accepts, a date for the hearing is set which is 20 days from being served.

The signed, sworn and notarized complaint was logged in on May 31, 2006 a full day after suspension. Documents to support complaint were not provided with complaint and were passed out at the hearing 31 days after the illegal suspension 30 days after filing the complaint on 31st of May a day after the suspension, thus violating the ordinance.

Procedures for Impeachment.

#1. The hearing will be on informal basis- that is attorneys, professional or layman will not be allowed for either the defendant or the complainant."

Tribal attorneys were both present and sitting with Secretary Two Eagle who was the presiding officer and were taking active part in discussion and clarifying rules. This should have been done prior to coming to this hearing. There was much confusion and at this point asks the question, as the complainant are both council members and they at no time recused themselves from discussion were they being represented by tribal attorneys. Tribal attorneys did not exclude the two council members from discussions, taking part in the close deliberations and voting. By having the tribal attorneys present violates this section as they were also advising the complainants who are on the council and therefore were acting in this capacity as attorneys and two councilmen who filed complaints took part is discussions.

Procedures for impeachment furthur states " The hearing will be conducted by the council open to the public, and after all evidence has been hear, all points clarified, the councilmen shall retire with the presiding officer for furthur discussion, the defendant, complainant, and all officers will not be present at this final session."

Complainants both participated in the closed session once the hearing concluded and furthur more were allowed to vote. The defendant and members of council attempted to question this point, however were ignored. In recent council meetings on other impeachment charges by council, complainant and defendant did not participate in closed deliberations or vote. Representatives Steele and Peters are on record as taking part in closed session and voting.

2/3 OF THE COUNCIL

The Oglala Sioux Tribal Council shall try all impeachments. When sitting for that purpose, either in regular or special session, the members shall be upon oath to do justice according to evidence and law". No person will be convicted without 2/3 concurrence of the council." This council already set precedence in the past two hearings to have full council present with 12 votes to remove. The two councilmen who filed the complaint were allowed to vote thus violating the ordinance.

It is clear that the law was not followed and encourage you the voters to consider asking your candidates if they will follow the laws of the Tribe. I encourage you not to support those council reps that allowed the laws to be violated and did nothing to stop the procedure. The recall process must be changed to allow you, the voters/citizens who voted your representatives or Executive officer into office, to be the ones to remove for cause. I encourage the candidates to continue the work that has been done to resolve the financial challenges left to my administration and to yours and am available to assist in any way I can. For those who make to the council and executive branch please read and ask questions and encourage the Office of Inspector General who have records of fiscal impropriety committed by members to take action, as long as those who stole from our tribe are not held accountable for their actions they will continue to find ways to take what is not theirs or earned. Your vote is your power and you must direct those you loan your power to for the next two years to do no harm, follow the laws, support changing the laws for due process, separation of powers, accountability and honesty.

Vote no on Referred Law 6 for women for choice.

Encourage all your family members of voting age to vote for Congresswoman Stephanie Herseth, as she has been a strong advocate for South Dakota Indian Tribes with staff from her office present and available whenever we need to talk to them. Vote Jack Billion for Governor so he can open the doors to the statehouse for Tribes and its citizens.

studies standards now guide classroom instruction at each site. The teachers are tribal members and are college trained, thanks to the SCSD teacher-training program; they possess South Dakota state teaching certificates. Wow! They are highly qualified to be in classrooms with Lakota students: They are proficient Lakota speakers and are well versed to address issues related to the Lakota culture - the influences and dynamics of older Tiospaye traditions and way of life, the modern politics of tribal government, and policies guiding health and welfare issues and challenging economic factors.

The SCSD Lakota studies staff deserves a "great big 'round of applause." Again, Wopila! Lakota studies teachers do what is common in an uncommon way, or vise versa.

Moreover, for the first time this summer, a Lakota studies director was hired to oversee classroom instruction, standards development and conduct teacher evaluations in collaboration with building principals. Thus, Lakota studies staff grade students and mark appropriate performance levels in an electronic grade-book. Student achievement is important and student performance results are available online through the school district's electronic database; a database that is accessible to parents, teachers, and administrators by way of user name and password.

This past summer, the Lakota studies teachers met as a team to map the Lakota studies standards with the state's social studies standards. The SCSD Lakota studies centers around five areas: Lakota communication, Lakota family system, the Lakota culture, modern reservation service systems, and OST land-base and resources.

Through association an integrative approach involving the existing Lakota standards and social studies standards new performance indicators and opportunity-to-learn standards were developed as model for implementation of Lakota concepts. As for the future of Lakota standards, the work is considered a beginning and will require improvements from time to time.

Curricular improvements will be recommended at the end of the school year. This will give teachers time to field test the standards.

SCSD purchased Lakota language textbooks and other teaching resources and materials to be used in classrooms. Other areas of priority for SCSD involves participation in professional development that includes the use of appropriate assessment tools for students and teachers, incorporating best instructional practices that are research-based, and building better and more attractive parental involvement models that encourage and support student success.

As an opinion, if any school reform effort is to improve student performance in any school, it must be fairly understood that it isn't going to be easy nor is it going to be acceptable by all players and, surely, it will not happen overnight just because that is what everybody wants. At best, it is more important to identify and recognize the work that everyone needs to do collectively and professionally. If educational goals and standards are to be met with some degree of success, student performance should be measured in congruence with the Lakota way of life and based on the notion of what the community wants education to be like for Lakota students.

And everyone must agree to this mission not just parents and guardians of students.

As for recent events and school news, Lakota studies staff in cooperation with other faculty at Rockyford School and Wolf Creek School, celebrated Native American Day and Grandparents Day. Beef stew, fry bread, and Wojapi were served to visiting grandparents and students at each school.

These events are planned along with an Open House or Family Night scheduled at each school.

At Wolf Creek School, the emcee noted that the state of South Dakota adopted the Native American Day in place of Columbus Day during the late Gov. Mickelson's administration.

In future articles, news and events from the other two schools will be included.

As a heads-up for the months of November and December, the SCSD Lakota studies is looking forward to the following training opportunities:

November 16-17 The Lakota Language Consortium will be offering two FREE teacher-training opportunities for teachers of the Lakota language and other interested educators. The two-day training will focus on successful techniques for language teaching and the proper use of Lakota Language textbooks and teaching materials.

December, 2006 - Lakota Nation Education Conference, December 13-15, 2006.

Lakota Studies staff will coordinate a Showcasing of Curriculum during the conference. Staff will leave Thursday afternoon and stay overnight. The Showcase is set for Friday, December 15, 2006. All reservation schools throughout South Dakota are invited. Letters-of-invitation will be sent to school serving Lakota students regarding this matter ASAP!

SCSD In Service Dec. 18-20 APPLE Training; of the 3-day in-service, 2 have been designated for the technology training

In closing, it's been a wonderful experience writing about a small piece of Indian Education as it relates to Lakota students from the Pine Ridge reservation attending the SCSD. As mentioned before, other articles will appear in future editions of the Lakota Country Times, so if you would like input into what is written contact the SCSD administrative office (Batesland, South Dakota (605) 288-1921), or send an email message to r2crow@shannon.ws reflective of his deepening spirituality. It is a place where Ed can sit and contemplate his life and that of his family. He said that the ceremony house is a place that belongs to the 'Lakota oyate' and anyone can use the facility for ceremonies.

He hopes to dedicate the house this weekend with a ceremony that will be preceded by a sweat.

He continued, "I've tried different things in life, different churches. When I step in this path, I found who I am. I had an identity problem and didn't know who I was. I want to carry on the spirituality and give to the young."

Irene continues to work for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe as their Employee Assistance Program officer. She has worked in several different capacities for RST over the course of 40 years. She also believes in the Lakol wicohan and Lakota spirituality. Recently, she says that she is tired of 'this', referring to the pain which she is experiencing. Ed says that when she does goes to a ceremony, her cancer gets arrested for a time, but it has not gone into remission.

Ed earned his G.E.D at Sinte Gleska University and went on to major in Human Services and then, Lakota Studies. Most recently, he worked at the White Buffalo Calf Woman Society for six years. Prior to that, he was employed at the RST Alcohol Treatment facility as a South Dakota level three counselor. The Harrisons have three adopted children; Edie, 28, who works at the casino, Curtis, 26, works at the Sunrise apartments and Sara, 23, is also employed at the Rosebud Casino.

The Harrisons have had a sweat lodge on their property since they moved there some ten years ago and will often host people from the Tree of Life ministry each week. He figures that for the last seven years, some 500 people each summer from the TOL have attended a sweat ceremony.

One of the most important lessons of Ed's life is 'forgiveness' which he learned from his late mother during a reading from a psychic who attended a sweat at his house. He said he wanted to test the psychic, so he asked for a reading and she told him that there was a woman who wanted to speak to him. It turned out to be his mother and she asked Ed to forgive him for abandoning him when he was two years old. She said it was all due to alcohol and the fear that she felt from his father's drinking.

Finally, Harrison said, "I met a lot of good people here. The spiritual leaders here told my life. I dedicated my life to this pipe. There is so much sickness on earth; we need people to carry on this way."

NOVEMBER IS
* NATIONAL DIABETES *
AWARENESS MONTH

"It is important for us to choose a healthy pathway. Our young people look up to us and will follow in our paths. If you are at risk for developing diabetes, you may be able to prevent or delay it. By making healthy food choices and being physically active almost every day (such as walking), you will create a healthy lifestyle pathway for generations to follow."

Hundreds of supporters, nationwide, will be joining together during the month of November in a number of activities oriented to raise awareness on Type 1 and 2 diabetes . . .

Join your local RST Diabetes Prevention Program and Sinte Gleska University on November 3rd and 4th, and Walk for Life . . .

The walk will begin with a prayer at 6:00 a.m. on November 3rd and it will end on November 4th at 6:00 p.m. at the old St. Francis Indian School track field

Help raise awareness by walking with us, at any time. Challenge your friends and family, or your co-worker. See you lasts the longest! Food and water will be provided to all participants.

Charging Hawk holds 'wopila' for SGU Lakota Studies

MISSION - Harold Charging Hawk is between his sophomore and junior year at Sinte Gleska University and is earning a grade point average of 3.75 in Lakota studies. His major is Lakota language both at the Associate of Arts and Bachelor of Science degree level. He is originally from what is known as the Red Leaf community on the Rosebud reservation.

He was honored with a $2,000 dollar award from the National Indian Education Association last November. He will earn his associate's degree in Lakota Studies with an emphasis in Lakota language in August of 2007 and he has two courses remaining. By then, he will be well on his way toward earning credit hours towards his bachelor's degree.

The Lakota Studies Department recommended him for the NIEA cash award and he traveled to Denver, CO to receive the award. He was able to give back to the department by holding a 'wopila' dinner for staff and faculty on Friday, October 20. He was assisted by wife, Stacey, a friend, Chris Stewart, son Joseph Charging Hawk and aunt, Velma Little Elk; all of whom he wished to thank.

Fry bread, wahanpi, and wojapi were served to the Lakota Studies staff, while a star quilt was presented to the department by Charging Hawk.

His academic advisor in Lakota Studies is Ione Quigley.

Tribes may oppose video lottery

SIOUX FALLS (AP) _ The state's American Indian tribes might endorse repeal of video lottery as part of their effort to get Gov. Mike Rounds to approve new tribal compacts that allow expanded gambling at Indian casinos.

Representatives from the nine tribes will meet Thursday in Pierre to form what they'll call the South Dakota Indian Gaming Association.

Walt Big Crow, an Oglala Sioux Tribe council member who also sits on the tribe's business and economic development committee, said Rounds has been invited to the session and his willingness to give tribal casinos more gambling machines could determine how Indians respond to Initiative 7, a Nov. 7 ballot measure that would repeal video lottery.

``You know the vote statewide is going to be pretty tight. The 10 percent of (the state electorate who are) Indian voters is going to make the difference,'' Big Crow said.

Tribes so far have been frustrated in their efforts to renegotiate gaming compacts with Rounds, and ``if we get to the point where we think the governor is negotiating in bad faith, if the governor turns down our compacts, we will tell our voters to turn down video lottery,'' Big Crow said.

Mark Johnston, a spokesman for Rounds, said the governor was invited to the meeting but has prior commitments.

``Since 1990, every governor has designated gaming-compact negotiators to communicate with tribes on a case-by-case basis. If the tribes create a consortium, they're welcome to present their proposals,'' Johnston says.

However, ``it is regrettable for Mr. Big Crow to engage in this kind of threat against the $110 million in revenues from the state lottery which goes to property tax relief and state aid to education,'' Johnston adds. ``It most certainly raises the question as to who is behind the move to ban video lottery in South Dakota.''

Video lottery industry members also are courting Indian voters, according to Big Crow, and the vote from Indian Country is in the balance, he says.

``They indicate if tribes support them in keeping video lottery, they will support us and go to bat for us with the governor. ... We've been telling them just to wait a little bit. We've got our meeting on the 19th,'' Big Crow says.

Larry Mann, spokesman for the Music and Vending Association's ``No on 7'' campaign that is leading the effort to retain video lottery, said the relationship between the video lottery industry and the tribes is not as close as Big Crow suggests.

``We only talked with one tribe,'' the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe, ``because we know some of the guys up there and wanted to sound them out,'' Mann says. ``I think their concerns with regard to a compact is strictly between the administration and the tribe. We try to keep our noses out of others' business.''

Walkers participate in domestic violence awareness activities

KYLE - Walkers took to the streets last week to join the staff of Cangleska, Inc. for two walks in observance of October as National Domestic Violence Awareness Month.

Participants in the Oct. 17 walk Porcupine included college students who took time out of their class schedules to remember survivors and women who died because of violent acts of domestic violence. The walkers braved cold weather as temperatures dipped into winter-like conditions.

In Martin, participants held a candle light vigil Oct. 18 as they walked through the business district of the downtown areas. Law enforcement from The Oglala Sioux Tribe and the Bennett County Sheriff's department provided support and participated in the prayer ceremonies.

The walks last week were two of four annual walks sponsored by Cangleska, Inc. in observance of National Domestic Violence Awareness Month.

Its annual walk in Kyle will be at 9 a.m. on Oct. 25 with walkers meeting at the Little Wound School gym.

The annual Four Directions Walk in Pine Ridge will be held Oct. 26 at 5:30 p.m. There will be four starting locations for walkers including the old hospital site, the top of the hill going to White Clay, the parking lot of the Y. O. Park and the Cangleska, Inc. offices.

Ohitika, a domestic violence shelter operated by Cangleska, Inc. in Rapid City will hold its 2nd Annual Diva Day in Rapid City from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. at the St. Isaac Jogues/Mother Butler Center in Rapid City.

The event is a day set aside for celebrating women and offering them the opportunity to enjoy a relaxing day of pampering from head to toe.

"Please join us for all or any of these events as a way of showing your support in ending domestic violence and creating awareness within the community," said Karen Artichoker, director.

For more information, contact Cangleska, Inc. at 604-455-2244.

Women partcipate in Martin's walk of awareness of domestic violence awareness month. Left to right: Eula Young, Cindy Lessert, Haley Hensley, Alice Young-Two Bulls, and Shirley Big Eagle. Alice said a prayer before the walk. Sack treats were handed out after the walk. Below: Walkers partcipate in the activity at Porcupine on Oct. 17. Although the weather was chilly and quite cold, walkers still took part in the walk. There will be addtional walks throughout the month.

OST candidates debate at Red Cloud cancelled

Candidate Forum to be held at Pejuta Haka

PINE RIDGE - The Red Cloud High School student council originally scheduled an OST Presidential and Vice-Presidential debate on Wednesday, October 25 at the Memorial Field House; however, it was cancelled due to the controversy surrounding the OST primary election held on October 3, as well as the decision rendered by the Oglala Sioux Election Appeals Court on October 22.

The Red Cloud High School Student Council hopes to reschedule the debate at a future date in order to keep the Oglala Sioux Tribal electorate informed.

The OST Presidential candidates are John Steel and Alex White Plume. The Vice-Presidential candidates at Melanie Two Eagle and Shorty Brewer.

An "OST Candidate Forum" has been scheduled at the Pejuta Haka College Center in Kyle on Sunday, Oct. 29 at 12:00 p.m. It is sponsored by the Pejuta Haka Student Organization. A meal will be served and the public is invited to come with prepared questions.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

My son, I just found out is gay. I am sick and afraid that he will go to hell. What can I do about this. I am afraid the whole family will disown him. Can we get him counseling so he will change?

Worried Mom

Dear Worried Mom:

You can get counseling for yourself to accept he is gay. I personally cannot imagine a god that would punish any of his children with burning in hell because they are attracted to the same sex.

Did you know that in autopsies of homosexual men they find the thymus gland is enlarged? That would make homosexuality a physiological and hereditary condition - not a sin-ridden decision.

Also, what does it matter anyway? By the time sexual activity is involved in a person's life they should be pretty close to being an adult, and who says it's anyone's business what adults do behind closed doors.

Find a new perspective and love this loving son of yours, unconditionally. He needs your loving support not your fear-based judgment.

Good luck mom. Your son will be a successful entrepreneur some day. He is a good man.

Dear Anna,

I read your column in the newspaper last week so I thought I would write to you. I'm with this guy but I still like one of my exes. I just thought he was different from anyone I've ever met.

We dated on and off for four months until he finally just broke it off. He was upset because I was too shy and I just didn't know how to go about him because I wasn't used to his polite, gentleman-like personality. I know it was mostly my fault, I look back and I'm not the person now that I was then. I just can't get over him. I've told him how I felt. Is there ever another chance with him?

Could he possibly develop feelings for me again sometime?

I just can't believe how much I miss him. It's been months since we went out and I've had boyfriends between then and now but he's special. He is worth waiting for.

I did say I was with this other guy, but I can't stop thinking about what would have happened if I played my cards right with my ex.

Any advice?

Seeking Advice

Dear Seeking Advice:

First piece of advice: let your ex go. Second piece of advice: the nice gentleman like guy was being nice when he broke up with you. Appreciate that.

He has someone else that he loves. Quit blaming yourself. You saw in him many wonderful qualities that you would chose to have in your mate, but - here is the big but - you were not comfortable with him.

Quit putting men up on a pedestal. When you do that, when they show their more human qualities, they will fall off the pedestal and you will blame them for that. Work on yourself: begin to see the beauty within.

Appreciate the gift of life from God, honor your life by treating yourself well and understanding that God didn't leave you out of the equality pool.

You are equal to every other living human being on the planet. Feel that; then when you enter the next relationship, you can go in as an equal instead of in fear.

Fear is the destroyer of all; it causes war, bad legislation, crime, divorce, theft, dishonesty, gossip, mayhem and, most commonly, it destroys relationships.

By the way, he will call you in the early spring. Maybe by then, you will be confident enough to conduct yourself as an adult and not some simpering, mindless female without an opinion. Maybe by then you won't be afraid of your own spirit and backbone. Then you will have a chance to see if it will work. Quite being afraid to be yourself. You are a good person to be.

Dear Anna,

I am in Massachusetts and read your column via the internet. I find it intriguing and I have not decided if you "have the sight" or are a very wise person.

I will be traveling to Pine Ridge Reservation in December to meet the girl we sponsor through an organization. We chose to come at Christmas time because we want to change the way we have been celebrating over the past years - giving gifts to people who don't need anything and making lists for them because they want to give us something but don't know what to give.

We will be giving gifts to this young girl, her family, and a couple of organizations on the reservation instead.

My husband and I visited South Dakota two summers ago. The Black Hills felt like home. Last Christmas we decided to sponsor a child. Our only request was a child in the US rather than abroad, for many reasons. We were sent the photo of a radiant girl from Pine Ridge. I am a spiritual woman and felt there was a connection somehow.

I have tried to learn more about Lakota culture and about the reservation so that I can connect on a real and respectful level with her and her family.

However, I have a small fear that, when we visit, we will be seen only as "do-gooders" instead of people who really care. Is that small fear justified? I want to believe that it is my shyness and nothing more. I would like to know what you think about all this. Thank you.

Suddenly insecure

Dear Insecure:

Some people might see you as "do-gooders." Some people might think of you as a check-book with a naive signature. Some people might not like you, because you do well. But, that is just some people. The light from your heart will shine in such a way that those that you love will "feel" your joy in helping them.

The one life that you make easier on the reservation, will shine brightly in return for your gifts. The connection you feel with this girl is good and is real.

She is part of your heart and part of your soul-family. You give her and her family hope. It is my dream, someday, to really help the Lakota people financially. Right now, all I have to give is love, advice, healing work (I and my business partner do hands-on healing), and the gift of my vision. You are an answer to a lot of people's prayers (including mine); don't let fear of misunderstanding deter you from helping.

You are a blessing, and will be received that way. Please call the paper when you come to the rez to get a message to me.

I will be out of town around Christmas visiting with my family, but I would love to meet you and take you to sweat and ceremony and help you feel the true culture of the Pine Ridge reservation and The People.

Dear Anna,

I always enjoy reading your column and was wondering if you see a future for me and my new husband. We have been married for some time now and he is so insecure and jealous, he thinks I cheat on him all the time. And that is not the case, I have told him a million and one times that I LOVE him and only want to be with him. I have also told him that I am committed to him and want to spend my life with him. But he still insists that I am cheating or that I will cheat on him.

I do have children of my own from a past relationship and so does he. I accepted his child as my own but yet he treats my children with an attitude.

I love and care for him but if he can't at least be my kids' friend then I don't know.

Things are tough at times but I keep thinking that things will get better and they don't. We end up back where we left off. I wonder if he is cheating so he accuses me all the time.

He is a great person with an awesome personality and handsome, at times I find myself getting insecure and don't want it to be like that. But it's like he is making me like that.

All I want to do is love him and be by his side and I expect the same but something is wrong and that is not happening. All my family are happy for us but his family won't accept it and they are not happy for us. I want to leave but I can't make myself do it. When I do start to leave, he will call my parent's house, my cell phone, text me, call me nonstop until he talks me out of it.

Then we go back to the same stuff and I am getting too old for playing games. So I am asking if you see any future for us and will we ever find a place of our own and be happy in life and together with our children. If not then can you let me know what my future holds for my children and I. I do just want to be in love and live happy.

Is it love or not?

Dear Is it love?

Sure. But please show him this column. He needs treatment. Jealousy is not honorable, sane, healthy nor respectful. It is actually accusing you of being a horrible person. If he truly thinks that, then you need to leave him.

Marriage or the commitment of that type of relationship is based on four things: love, honor, compassion and respect. He is displaying none of those things.

You are acting in a co-dependent manner. He is displaying controlling and manipulative behavior and you are playing along. He has low self-esteem, and obviously doesn't feel worthy of a wonderful woman's love. The question is why doesn't he feel worthy? Could it be that he isn't worthy?

Or is it, dysfunctional behavior based on drug and alcohol dependency, or being the adult child of drug dependent or alcoholic parents, or insecurity based on other oppression?

He needs treatment, you need counseling or the two of you can continue to create a mutual hell to dwell in. If he does not decide to contact Cangleska or another organization for treatment - dump him. Torture is abuse and he is abusive. He is abusive because he is sick. He needs to get well, or you need to get out.

Dear Anna,

I was wondering if you can help me on some questions that been on my mind for awhile now. I'm working on my GED and I don't know how I'm doing, but I was wondering if I had a chance? I really want to get it, but I'm scared of failing or giving up. And one more thing. I'm back with my boyfriend of three years and we've been off and on for almost a year now. I was wondering if it is going to work this time.

We've been both been seeing other people and I can't stop thinking of the man I was with. I always see him looking at me too.

Does the man I was with still have feelings for me too? I want to be with him but he's with someone else now. We've seen each other for five months and before I got back with my boyfriend I heard he was asking about me.

But I just keep in my mind that my boyfriend wants to be with me He's says that he's not playing me or he doesn't want to, but it happened too many times that I'm just worried that something might happen again. I really don't want to get hurt again.

Don't want to get hurt again

Dear don't want to get hurt again:

First of all, yes you can pass your GED. Read your book and study and take the test. Continue on then, getting the next certification you want (in the health field?).

Nobody wants to get hurt, but honestly I say: Wah. Any relationship that is not working or going to work ends up with somebody, usually both people, feeling bad and getting hurt. Oh Wah. That is how humans learn to choose the people they are going to be with in a little better more cautious way. I don't think your past boyfriend (the one that is with another woman right now) really is anything more than a strong sexual attraction. Aside from that though, he is a warning that you are not currently with the right one either. When you truly love somebody, you enjoy other people, but you do not want to be with someone else.

It's basically simple: You know it ain't right when you can't love the one you want so you love the one you're with. Let go of the poor guy you're with and let him love and be loved fully plus release yourself to loving the man you will love, not the one that fills his space.

You will get hurt every time you're with the wrong mate.

Every time it ends it hurts. That's life. If you can get enough wisdom and experience you will find that it doesn't hurt so much to end a bad relationship as it does to live in it for the rest of your life. Release is a blessing, not a curse. Staying is the curse.

P.S. To every woman that reads this column:

The problem that almost every woman is writing to me with is basically this one problem: The fear that you, as a woman, cannot take care of yourself. The cure is simple: learn to take care of yourself and to recognize and accept that you are equal to the challenge of taking good care of yourself. Think about it. Once you know this about yourself then you won't be needy in your adult relationship and consume the man or stay with him for the wrong reasons. Blessings to you all.

Oct. 10, 1977 to July 16, 2006

It's hard to believe you've been gone for three months, it just seems like yesterday. It's hard but we have to carry on, we go to see your grave everyday, all the roses still look nice. No matter how much time passes, the pain, the hurt, the emptiness and the disbelief will always be there. Your birthday is coming up and I know how much you look forward to your birthdays but guess what when we have your party, everybody will be there for you. Our love for you will always be there, we love you, very, very much (Deeds) we will always remember you.

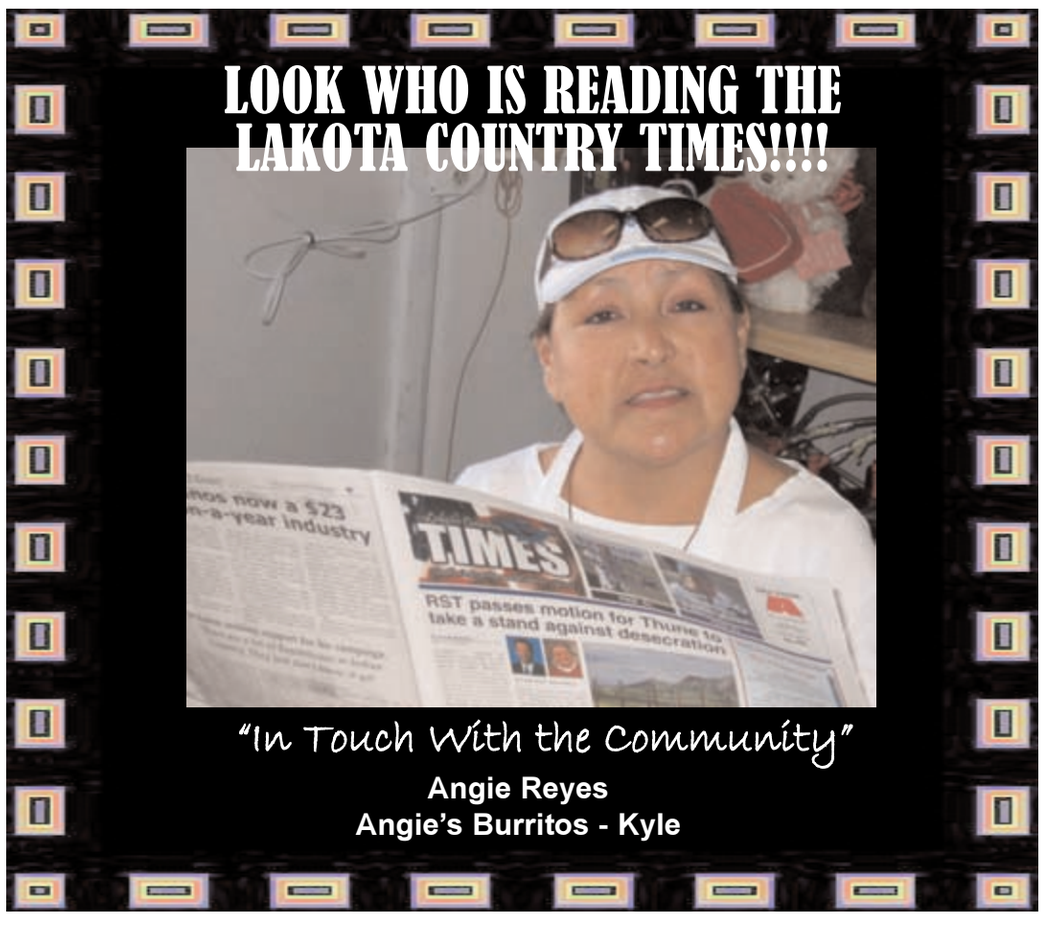
Prairie Wind Casino

The Prairie Wind Casino is soliciting proposals for auditing services for the accounting period ending December 31, 2006

The audit must be conducted in accordance with the National Indian Gaming Minimum Internal Control Standard 542.3 (f), "An independent certified public accountant (CPA) shall be engaged to perform procedures to verify, on a test basis, that the gaming operation is in material compliance with the tribal internal control standards or a tribally approved variance that has received Commission concurrence. The procedures may be performed in conjunction with the annual audit. The CPA shall report its findings to the Oglala Sioux Tribe, Tribal gaming regulatory authority and management. The Tribe shall submit a copy of the report to the Commission within 120 days of the gaming operations's fiscal year end."



The proposal must state your understanding of the work to be done and must include the qualifications and experience of your firm and staff. A copy of your firm's latest quality review letter must be included in your proposal.

If applicable, minority and Indian preference must be requested in the proposal.

Cost will not be the only determining factor in awarding the proposal. The Prairie Wind Casino reserves the right to reject any and all proposals.

Proposals must be sealed and postmarked by October 31, 2006, at 5:00 PM. Please address to: ATTN: Controller's Office - Audit 2006 Bid, Prairie Wind Casino, HC 49 Box 10, Pine Ridge, SD 57770.

OST council fails to support Election Court of Appeals decision, moves on to general election

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - On Monday, Oct. 30 the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council met at the Red Cloud building in Pine Ridge and spent the day discussing and reviewing the Election Court of Appeals decision of Oct. 22, to declare the OST 2006 primary election null and void, ordering a new primary election.

"Even though I disagree with the premises and conclusions that the court of appeals used for their decision, I believe the tribal council needs to honor the decision," said George Patton in a legal opinion distributed to the trial council on Monday, "according to the OST constitution, the tribal council has the authority to create a court and in this instance gave the election court of appeals the authority over the election process and not to honor that is to bring politics and political influence into the election process."

The council did not agree with their attorney and after a long discussion between council members, interested community members and three attorneys, Walt Big Crow's motion to support the election court of appeals decision was defeated five for, nine against with four not voting.

With the lack of council support for the election court of appeals decision, the way was cleared for the general election to continue as scheduled on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Voting to support the election court of appeals decision included: Bernard White Face/Porcupine, Paul Little/Oglala, Maxine Lakota and Walt Big Crow/ Wakpamni and Ruth Brown/Eagle Nest; voting against included: Austin Watkins/Medicine Root, Tom Poor Bear/Eagle Nest, Valerie Janis/Oglala, Kathy Janis/ Wounded Knee, Lyle Jack and Ella John Carlow/Pine Ridge, Philip Good Crow/Porcupine, Craig Dillon/LaCreek and Lydia Bear Killer/Pass Creek with Will Peters/Pine Ridge, Garfield Steele/Wounded Knee, Juanita Scherich/ Medicine Root and Mary Poor Thunder/LaCreek not voting.

Executive Board actions taken on Thursday that removed both the election board and election court of appeals were not taken into consideration.

Motel honors fallen Iraq soldier Lundstrom with dedication

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

KYLE - Corporal Brett Lundstrom is the first Oglala Sioux fatality of the war in Iraq.

Hundreds of family, friends and community honored him on Jan. 14, when his body was brought back to Kyle for a three night wake.

He was again honored Oct. 20, when Rusty Puckett and Kathy Stover dedicated their new motel's conference meeting room to his memory.

His parents are Doyla Underbaggage Lundstrom, his father is retired major Ed Lundstrom and he has a younger brother, Ed Lundstrom Jr. who is still in the military service in Iraq.

About 40 people attended the dedication with a meal of meat soup, menudo, frybread, vegetables and a cake that adorned Corp. Lundstrom's military photo.

The Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort is a 19 unit motel, restaurant and trading post, located seven miles west of Kyle, across from the Oglala Lakota College's main Piya Wiconi Campus. The resort also offers a conference room that been kept busy since the motel opened. The resort has a restaurant and the Iron Road Gallery and Trading Post, which boasts a rustic hewn log look and offering guests and visitors a variety of Lakota arts and crafts from jewelry to native clothing and music.

The large conference room is set off the west of the motel and can accommodate 30 people. Stover said conference motels often name their conference rooms and in keeping with that they wanted to name their conference room the Brett Lundstrom room. A large plaque explains who he was and why the room was named for him.

At the time when Lundstrom died in Iraq, Doyla and the Marines came to Kyle to make the arrangements for the wake services. The motel was not yet finished but knowing that rooms were needed for family and for the Marines that were going to stand guard at the wakes, the Pucketts worked continuously to have rooms ready for the guests so they wouldn't have travel back and forth from Rapid City.

Doyla said lately she has been a frequent guest at the motel in returning home for ceremony to help her in her healing and her wopila. She said there will be a memorial dinner for son in January at Kyle.

"I was very honored that Kathy and Rusty wanted to name their meeting room after Bret and waited to do it until Eddy got back from Iraq. I feel very honored and privileged," she said.

Eddy is still in the military until July of 2008. She is now in Oklahoma spending time with him and then will be moving to Colorado. Colorado is where she was in the process of moving when Brett died, as that where she told Brett she would move to from the Black Hills area, to be there near him when he returned to Colorado.

Doyla comes from the Medicine Root district area, she has family there, her sister Donnetta, a brother Marlin, her uncle Birgil Kills Straight, among others.

She recalled her last conversation with Brett. It was on Christmas night. She had returned to Pine Ridge to visit a sister and he called that night. She said she was excited about seeing her sister at Pine Ridge, whom she didn't see for awhile and spoke to him briefly telling him to call back later. "The minute I hung up, I felt bad I did that," she said. He didn't call back as he made other calls to family.

"He was a mama's boy. He would call me." In her job searching, she would tell potential employers that she had two sons in Iraq and that she would need to take their calls if they called. And they did, one time, she recalled how he called and

Looking Horse defends Wolakota Foundation

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett and Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

ROSEBUD - A treaty meeting was convened at the Rosebud Casino conference room on Oct. 21 with some 100 people in attendance. Hosted, in part, by the Sicangu Lakota Grass Roots oyate and moderated by Alfred Bone Shirt, the purpose of his segment was to discuss the fundraising activities of the Wolakota Foundation located on the Cheyenne River reservation, according to Bone Shirt.

Lakota elder, Floyd Hand, confirmed that it was, in fact, a treaty meeting and that it was a forum for the Rosebud grass roots people who have complained that the tribal council has been 'pushing' the treaty people around and not helping them.

Hand said that the group was comprised of, "Mostly grassroots people and those interested in the Black Hills treaty and the 1868 and 1851 treaties." He said the Catholic Church on the Rosebud was not listening to the grass roots people. The 20communities on the Rosebud are considered grass roots and the tribal council is considered the 1934 IRA government, he said.

Furthermore, Hand said that when the issue surfaced about the Wolakota Foundation and Arvol Looking Horse he spoke. He said, "I stood up and mentioned that this is not a family argument. If you want to deal with Arvol, the eight reservations will call him. We told him that this was not the place…, they even brought a resolution. It doesn't belong there. Maybe outside in the government area, so they tabled it."

A Lakota woman with the last name Blue Thunder, according to Hand, also stood up and told the women who were complaining about Looking Horse that, "Women in the old way respect their brothers."

He said, "Canunpa iyohlate najin hantas. If you 'stand under the pipe' traditional law applies and sisters cannot be against brothers."

Lundstrom honored

said he only had a couple of minutes. He was atop a building in Fallujah in Iraq. He said the Iraq patrol they were with had cell phones and they let the Marines use them to call home.

She has assumed he would call back when he came back from patrol and coming back from patrol on Jan. 7, he was killed in a small arms fire. The Marines came to her door and told her.

She said both boys were Marine brats and over the 20 year time they spent as a Marine family moving about, they would come back to Kyle.

"After my dad passed away in January 1997, Norman Under Baggage Sr., I didn't' go home for along time.

Also in attendance at the dedication was Jim Sheeler, who is a writer for the Rocky Mountain News, a newspaper that serves the Colorado area. Sheeler wrote an excellent article on Corporal Brett Lundstrom and his wake services in Kyle. The photographer that accompanied him was Todd Heilsler.

The Rocky Mountain News has been publishing a continous special edition on the Marines that have died in Iraq, and their families from the Colorado area.

The story and the photos were circulated via Internet after it was published.

Sheeler has been considered very cultural sensitive in his writings.

Sheeler is working on a Veteran's special follow up that will include Lundstrom the dedication.

Sheeler said attending the services of the fallen Lakota soldier was educational for he and the photographer.

It was different from the many he had attended where a service was conducted for a hour or so to memorialize the fallen Marines whereas in Lakota country, there were five days of honoring.

Sheeler said he appreciated the late John Around Him, and others who took him under their wing and explained the culture so he can protray it as the Lakota people see it.

As of Monday, Oct. 30, there were 2,814 deaths of the U.S. military that have died since the beginning of the Iraq war in March of 2003, according the Associated Press.

Treaty meeting

Hand also confirmed the fact that many people begin to walk out as a couple of women were taking up too much time.

Vivian High Elk, a lineal descendent of the pipe keepers expressed concern that the Protection of Sacred Ceremonies Proclamation that was supposedly passed by the Cheyenne River Sioux tribe was not being adhered to by the Wolakota Foundation. Stacey Low Dog a former volunteer for the Wolakota Foundation's World Peace and Prayer Day activities questioned the work of the Wolakota Foundation and said that Paula Horn, the companion of Arvol Looking Horse, "has used the canunpa as a marketing tool and money making scheme that benefits none of our people."

Arvol Looking Horse, the Keeper of the Sacred Pipe, responded to the account of the meeting which apparently has gone out to several other media outlets, including through email. He said, "When you have a foundation, you have to be accountable. Paula Neziel, my adopted sister is the bookkeeper. She went to the meeting to represent me. They wouldn't let her speak."

Neziel wrote in a response, "A treaty council meeting was not the appropriate forum to mount a personal assault and slander campaign against a spiritual leader. One of the Chiefs tabled the matter calling it inappropriate and, and an elder chastised them for unsubstantiated gossip."

Looking Horse recently was honored by the United Nations in New York with the Juliet Hollister peace award for his work in encouraging world peace. He said, "The money that was raised from the foundation, we have all the receipts. They wouldn't let her talk. They said she wasn't part of the tribe..., we spent money for the youth." The non profit foundation, Wolakota Foundation, what they are accusing me of, they are saying we are buying things we shouldn't have. When you have a foundation, you have to be accountable.

Francis Zephier of the Yankton Sioux tribe also spoke, according to Bone Shirt, and stated, "People with money should not be the only ones allowed to have access to the ways of the canunpa."

Zephier read a petition to those present and which will be circulated for signatures. A follow-up meeting of the Sicangu Grass Roots oyate will be held at the Digmann Hall in St. Francis on Nov. 18. Looking Horse apparently will be invited, according to Bone Shirt. The petition was sent out to media outlets and through as press release. The petition is asking accountability from Paula Horn, who helps Arvol coordinate the Wolakota Foundation.

In response to the controversy, Looking Horse said on Monday, Oct. 30, a statement that he wanted the people to know. "As the 19th generation of the keeper of the Sacred Pipe and what has happened at the meeting at Rosebud on Oct. 18. There were threats against Paula Horn and me. This happened a lot, ever since of the age of 12 years old to the recent meeting. Every time threats have been brought forth by the people the sacred spirit bundle, we had to put the bundle away. As of today, I the keeper of the sacred bundle did put the bundle away because of all internal activities that is going on. And I talked to the spirit bundle before I put it away but I would tell the people to keep on praying because we still have to carry on our prays. Thank you very much."

Anne White Hat discussed the desecration of the sacred Bear Butte in western South Dakota during a panel on Native Activism and Anti-Native groups.

White Hat running for Meade County commissioners

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

STURGIS - Anne White Hat, 39, and a mother of three is from the prominent White Hat tiospaye on the Rosebud reservation and now lives at the base of the sacred Bear Butte on the west side or 'wiohpeyatakiya ecayantanhan' as it is said in Lakota. She is running as an independent candidate for one of the four county commissioner slots in Meade County which voters will be asked to decide on November 7.

Meade County is one the largest county in South Dakota and apparently one of the largest in the nation, as it extends east to the small town of Wasta and up north to the town of Faith and it also borders the Cheyenne River Sioux reservation.

The Meade County Commissioners have attracted a lot of media attention by virtue of having under its jurisdiction, the issuance of liquor licenses for many newly constructed 'biker bar' establishments and the protection of Bear Butte and the general welfare of all county residents from land owners, ranchers and farmers. The social impact of having so many people packed into the annual bike rally year after year is controversial for some residents and certainly is behind many of the issues which White Hat has heard.

White Hat offered her inspiration for running for the Meade County Commision when she said, "What inspired me to run was this past year's grass roots effort around the protection of Bear Butte and meeting hundreds of Meade County residents. Also, many are really frustrated with the county commissioners. They expressed the same concerns we have about land, natural resource conservation, the community, safety and taxes."

She says that she has spent so much time listening to the commissioners that she understands the issues before the people. Furthermore, she feels a responsibility to inspire others to step and make social change, not only at Bear Butte, but in general.

Because of the many concerns which seem to prevail, White Hat says that she is stepping up for the challenge because no one else will. She said, "I'm in a unique position a Native American and a woman. I have the skills and the commitment to do the job."

White Hat says that the local organizing effort has gained the supp ort of ranchers and farmers as well as folks in Sturgis who support her candidacy. Her work is a long term strategy of social change and "one of the pieces is changing the face of the decision-making body."

She said, "Women are the backbone of any community and nation for a long time. We look for a long term perspective to ensure our children will have a good life."

Her solidarity with others concerned about the protection of Meade County is reflected in her ability to relate to others in community. She said, "We have a love for the land, like the ranchers and the farmers. We all want to see the resources protected and the landscapes we hold dearly." She goes on to say, "I have been able to bridge those cultural perspectives in way that doesn't isolate the community. The issue is the protection of the land and building a future for our children, a common goal."

White Hat has achieved a maturity that is revealed in listening to her discuss the issues, as there are many that have been voiced by Meade County residents from the effects of the rally to law enforcement to creating a sustainable future.

As one who is greatly concerned about social change and protection issues, White Hat is the face of a new generation of young people who are reaching out to those who share common goals. Her resume reveals the fact that she is, in fact, someone who shoulders a great deal of responsibility. She was a board member for Honor the Earth foundation, a former manager of the Bear Butte lodge, a delegate to the United Nations and a student at Evergreen College in Olympia, WA.

The Meade County Commissioners role is one that White Hat apparently is taking quite serious given her understanding of the issues and the support she has gathered from a diverse group of people in Meade County. She concluded by noting, "We were put here for a reason. I have been able to become friends with our neighbors to do this protection work."

NAJA to move from South Dakota to Oklahoma

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) _ The Native American Journalists Association has decided to move next year from the University of South Dakota to the University of Oklahoma.

The association will be based at the Gaylord College of Journalism and Mass Communication at OU in Norman. The group will be in a new building that is undergoing expansion.

``The NAJA Board of Directors saw that as a critical resource,'' the association said in a statement. ``NAJA's strategic plan calls for adding staff members to expand and develop educational programs, professional development, and increase fundraising, among other initiatives.

``The plan also calls for greater interaction with tribes and Native media, and Oklahoma has both in abundance. ``

The 23-year-old association has 657 members, nearly half of them students. OU has more than 60 American Indian students in the Gaylord College.

Since 2002, the association has been on the campus of the University of South Dakota in Vermillion, and in 2003 moved into the Al Neuharth Media Center, sharing space with the Freedom Forum.

``Moving an organization such as NAJA ahead presents many challenges,'' said association President Mike Kellogg, a Navajo who is publisher of the Stillwater News Press. ``After debating the proposals, the University of Oklahoma was a good fit for the strategic plan.''

He said Oklahoma has a doctoral program, ``which will allow us to benefit from the expertise of their faculty and team with researchers to study journalism issues.''

Howard Big Eagle, WWII vet, to receive medals Nov. 9

By Elaine Big Eagle
Special to the Times

RAPID CITY - Howard Big Eagle, MIA POW, WWII will be receiving seven medals of honor that he earned during World War II. The award will take place during a presentation at the Honorable Senator Tim John's Office in Rapid City on Thursday, Nov. 9 at 3 p.m. The seven long overdue medals that Howard Big Eagle will receive in this special presentation include the POW Medal; Good Conduct Medal; American Campaign Medal; WWII Victory Medal; European/ African/Middle Eastern Campaign Medal; Double Bronze Star with ribbon attachment; and Honorable Service lapel button.

Tom L Hanks described this generation as not wanting to make a big deal out of their greatest accomplishment, the victory in WWII (World War II) and my father, Howard Big Eagle, is no exception, but I feel that his story is important and needs to be told.

Howard Big Eagle, was born on Nov. 14, 1923 at Norris, on the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Reservation of the Sicangu Lakota to Moses Bull Tail; aka Big Eagle aka B. Eagle and, Winnifred "Winnie" Larvie (Larrabee). Moses' young man name was "Tatanka Sinte," "Bull Tail" because he liked to play with the tails of the bison bulls as a boy.

When Grandpa Moses became a "Wi-cha-sha Wakan" with the ability to perform the sacred Yuwipi ceremony, the spirits said for him to choose a name & they chose, "Wanbli Tankan," "Big Eagle."

When Grandpa Moses shortened the name to "B. Eagle"; it was for different reasons, some of them being:

Because he was best friends with the local Catholic priest for Norris' community, Father Buechtel, pronounced, "Beagle"; and because he wanted the name to sound like his friend's name; and because he did not want to get the name mixed up with another Big Eagle family from up North by Crow Creek. They may be distant relatives, but they are not close relations.

When my father was a boy growing up to be a young man on the Rosebud Reservation, he was reared in the traditional Lakota way of life and he had many small animals for pets.

He would take care of them until they were well enough to go back into the country. One time, a mother bobcat brought her little new born kittens back by the scruff of the neck and set them down for him to see them.

Many Lakota people prospered at this time and although life was uncertain about the future; it was in some ways, an idyllic life. And then, came the attack on Pearl Harbor, Hawaii by the Japanese on December 7, 1940, which ushered in WWII.

My father lied about his age as so many of our own young country men did at the opportunity to service their country and enlist in the armed services.

My father was 17 years old, but he said he was 18 and so his records read for his date of birth, November 14, 1922.

This was done so that he could enlist in and at that time, what was call the Army Air Corps, but later, the United States Air Force and it became the newest branch of the American military might, so important in air command. In other words, it was as though whoever controlled the skies over Europe, won the war.

PFC (Private First Class) Howard B. Eagle trained at Randolph Field, Cadet Center, San Antonio, Texas as an Aerial Gunner.

At school, he learned the firing order, "Synchronizing" 50 caliber, blind folded assembled and disassembled and then he received his wings personally from Captain Rickenbacher at Nellis Air Force base near Las Vegas, Nevada. From there, he was on to Florida to await his orders and then, he received his orders to Great Britain where the allied forces gathered, the 8th Air Force, 333rd squadron, 94th Bomb Group at Berry Saint Edmund, England, United Kingdom.

Stalag 17B was Prisoner of War camp in Germany, where Howard Big Eagle was.

Howard B. Eagle was an Aerial Gunner - Left Waist Gunner for the 1st Armor Gunner & Bomardier back-up in a B-17 Bomber. And then, on an Easter Sunday morning, on April 9, 1943 on their third mission, an enemy, German airplane gunner shot their airplane down.

His honorable discharge papers state on the line for occupation before service, "Orchestra Leader 0-24.250." This was because my father ordered a saxophone from Chicago mail order catalogue and taught himself how to play it. He and his brothers: Charles, Theodore, Christopher and Maurice formed a band, "The Eagle Playboys" and he became the leader of the band. They played for dances at Norris and the surrounding communities before the was, World War II.

Their airplane was in a dive from being shot down, the control wires were shot out, as they were coming in for a crash landing in a tailspin, their B-17 bomber was on fire. A crew of seven on the third mission, they barely had time to bail out. Their parachutes snapped and jerked their spines and then they were air loft, floating down on the breezes. He could hear the bullets whizzing by as he pulled the parachute's ropes to rock the floating parachute, swinging his body coming down, down, splashing into the icy-cold waters of the Baltic Sea below. He felt the spirits tapping him on his upper back and shoulders and he prayed.

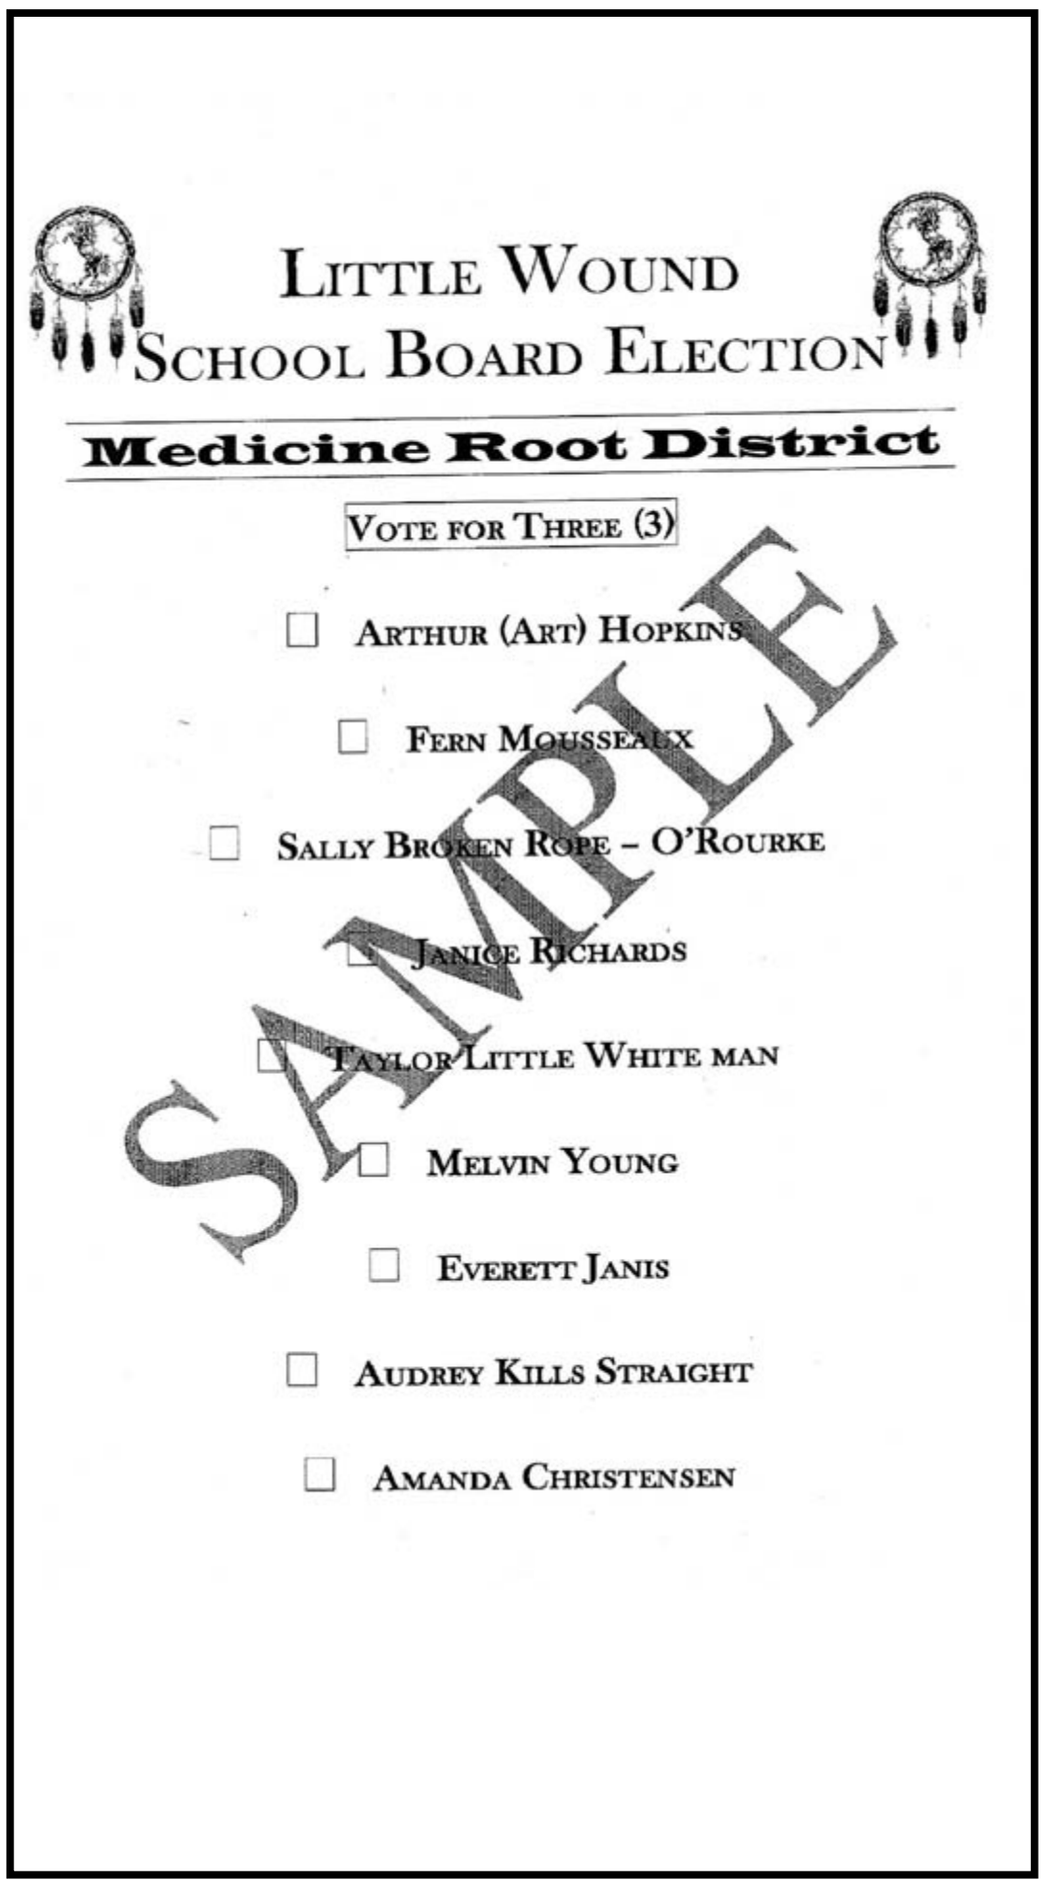
After swimming in the icy-cold waters for as long as he could, he nearly froze to death. It is said 19 minutes maximum is the slated limit for survival and he had been floating, on his back now, for how long? It must have been 30 minutes. "The water turned hot amd then, I knew I was in trouble," as he told it, recently and many years later.

And, then just in time, he saw a PT boat and it was a German PT boat! He waved and they came at him with a spear, but he hold on to it and would not let go of it; and so they pulled him on board. He had swallowed gallons of sea water and he began to vomit it all out once on board.

The Germans interrogated him, but all he could give them was his name, rank and serial number, "Howard B. Eagle, Staff Sergeant, USAF #37-470-688". After this, they threw him in the power part of the boat where he found the pilot and the co-pilot. Of a crew of seven, the other four MIAs were never found and only my dad, the pilot and the co-pilot were listed as MIA and taken as prisoners of war to Stallog 17B at Krems, Austria (at that time called Germany)

He spent 13 months in the second worst German prison camp in the history of WWII, in terms of punishment, lack of food, cold and hardship in Barracks 31A. It was designed to hold 200 POWs; but held about 400 POWs.

He said that the Germans were mean to them. One of the prison guards gave them a goat and said that if they shared their rations and fed the goat then they could have it. After the goat got bigger, they took it away. My father, being self-taught musician was able to study and compose music while being a prisoner of war.



Later, he recorded a song he wrote and gave it to my mother. Grandma Winnie once had a picture of him taken from inside the infamous prison camp , Stalog 17B. He was just skin and bones and had grown a beard. He looked like on of the Holocaust victims.

He had heard it, coming down through the "Grapevine" that they should not try to escape, but rather, stay together. The should not tell the Germans that they were bombers as the Germans did not like bombers.

They also heard it through the grapevine that Congress passed a bill stating that all of the POWs when liberated will be given a jump, one rate up-rating as an act of Congress. As Staff Sergeant Howard B. Eagle to him, that meant that he would be promoted to Tech Sergeant upon liberation.

They were all on a 30 day forced march where, while marching, if any POW could not take it and ran off, out of line, they were immediately shot down. They were marching coming up over a hill when they heard the airplanes first and then they looked up and saw their own American USAF fighter planes flying overhead ad they all began to whoop and shout!

Then, they saw the troops and General Patton coming up over the hill and they were rescued, at last! My father took four German soldiers for prisoners and then there was surrender and WWII was over, at last, after five long years.

Issues on the state ballots, spirituality a delicate matter

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

Next Tuesday, Nov. 7 is am important day to write on your calendar and to mark down in your memory. It is election day for the Oglala Sioux Tribe and for state elections.

If you are voting in state elections, here are a few of the items that are important to you.

Referred Law 6, which is the Abortion Law, which has been a point of concern in Indian country, especially on the Pine Ridge Reservation. According the state election website, Referral of HB 1215, entitled "An Act to establish certain legislative findings, to reinstate the prohibition against certain acts causing the termination of an unborn human life, to prescribe a penalty therefore, and to provide for the implementation of such provisions under certain circumstances."

The state attorney general explanation of the proposed laws said that current South Dakota law generally allows a pregnant woman to obtain an abortion during the first 24 weeks of pregnancy.

Beyond 24 weeks, abortions may be performed only if necessary to preserve the life or health of the pregnant woman.

House Bill 1215 would prohibit any person, at any time, from providing any medicine or other substance to a pregnant woman for the specific purpose of terminating her pregnancy. However, a person may provide a contraception substance to a woman without penalty prior to the time her pregnancy could be determined by conventional medical testing.

HB 1215 would also prohibit any person, at any time, from using any instrument or procedure on a pregnant woman for the specific purpose of terminating her pregnancy, unless the person is a licensed physician performing a medical procedure to prevent the death of the pregnant woman.

Any person other than the pregnant woman who violates the provisions of HB 1215 would commit a felony.

If approved, HB 1215 will likely be challenged in court and may be declared to be in violation of the US Constitution. If so, the State may be required to pay attorneys fees and costs.

A vote "Yes" will allow the Act to become effective.

A vote "No" will reject the Act.

Another important issue to Indian country is Initiated Measure 7, which is an Initiative to repeal video lottery. Video lottery is the machines you see in corner casinos all over in our towns, except for reservations towns because they already have gaming compacts with the states to have slot machines in their casinos.

The attorney general explanation is that the State of South Dakota operates video lottery as authorized by State law. During the last year, the State of South Dakota received approximately $112 million from video lottery which is 11 percent of the state general fund budget.

The proposed law would repeal video lottery and eliminate this source of revenue.

A vote "Yes" will adopt the proposed law.

A vote "No" will reject the proposed law.

We can look at that from a reservation resident standpoint view also. Video lottery in South Dakota is hurting the Indian gaming industry. If a gambler can go to the local bar or restaurant and play video lottery, why should they travel to any of the Indian owned casinos? There was talk of tribal governments coming out against video lottery and why they haven't escapes us.

If tribal leaders believe that by not coming out against video lottery their chances of getting Gov. Rounds to approve their requests to increase the number of slot machines at their casinos, they are dead wrong. Video lottery hurts Indian casinos. It is as simple as that. Every Indian in South Dakota now has the power to change this. Stop hurting Indian casinos and hence the Indian people. Vote Yes of 7 to repeal video lottery. Remember, vote yes on 7.

Another important measure to Indian country is Initiated Measure 3, which is an Initiative to prohibit starting a school term prior to the last day of August.

The explanation of that measure is state law currently allows local school boards to establish the start of a regular school term on any date. The proposed law would prohibit local school boards from establishing the start of a regular school term prior to the last day of August.

A vote "Yes" will adopt the proposed law.

A vote "No" will reject the proposed law.

Before 1980, the school start date of South Dakota schools was in September. The school year traditionally ran from Labor Day to Memorial Day. In the 1980s, a trend of or "calendar creep" developed with classes starting in August, earlier and earlier. Many people didn't like that and in 1984, South Dakota initiated a law to start schools after Labor Day. The legislature tried to overturn the vote of the people year after year, and finally succeeded in a 1992 bill.

This measure proposes school statewide will not start before Aug. 31. Although this a state law, it affects tribal schools as most schools are accredited by the state and work with public schools in events, especially with high school sporting events and may eventually follow suit to coincide with the non-Indian school's schedules.

A measure that will affect smoker's and their pocketbook but add revenue to state funds is Initiated Measure 2, which is an Initiative to increase the tax on cigarettes and tobacco products and to dedicate the revenues.

South Dakota currently taxes tobacco products. The proposed law would increase taxation on tobacco products sold in the state.

The tax on a 20 stick cigarette package would be raised by $1; the tax on a 25 stick cigarette package would be raised by $1.25.

The tax on all other tobacco products such as cigars, roll-your-own, and chewing tobacco, would increase from 10 percent to 35 percent of the wholesale price.

The proposed law would deposit up to $30 million of tobacco tax revenue into the state general fund. The next $5 million, if any, will be deposited in the tobacco prevention and reduction trust fund. Tobacco tax revenue in excess of $35 million, if any, will be divided among the property tax reduction fund, the education enhancement trust fund, and the health care trust fund. The proposed law also establishes continuous appropriations out of the tobacco prevention and reduction trust fund for specified purposes.

A vote "Yes" will adopt the proposed law.

A vote "No" will reject the proposed law.

As we said before, we have a responsibility to examine the profiles and platforms of all of our candidates at all levels and contribute our voice to the process. When we are fully involved as such, we are less likely to be frustrated by the electoral process as the hope is that the best candidate will be chosen by a majority of people who have the wisdom to make the choice that we can live with for two years.

Spirituality a delicate matter

There are two things that are hard to talk about without getting conflict and that is politics and religion.

Both issues have come to the forefront recently, politics because it is that time of the year... election time and suddenly we get an onslaught of opinion and controversy because election time is a delicate time as it is when those positions that are in power to make change become important.

The other is religion and to many who seek spirituality in their lives and have those beliefs encased in their lives, it became important.

Such is the case with an issue regarding the sacred bundle which is kept by Arvol Looking Horse in Green Grass on the Standing Rock Reservation.

Allegations are flying about through press releases, email and Internet posting sites.

The Lakota Country Times received emails and press releases and letters and we made a decision to do a news article, portraying both sides as best as we could instead of publishing the submitted letters.

Communication is a great success key to diffuse confrontation, especially when it involves a core lifeskill... our spirituality and our youth.

Great high school basketball games

Dear Editor:

Past South Dakota Native American boys basketball champions have been:

1936, Oglala 24 Bridgewater 22, Class B

1939, Flandreau Indian School 32 Rapid City 24, Class A

1955, White River 56 Hayti 55, Class B

1959, Cheyenne Eagle Butte 63 Desmet 47, Class B

1962, Pine Ridge 70 MacIntosh 68, Class B

1986, Switched to 3 classes, AA, A and B

1987, Pine Ridge 60 Lennox 53, Class A

1995, Red Cloud 83 Howard 76, Class A

Past South Dakota Native American girls basketball champions:

1989, Pine Ridge 42 Milbank 40, Class A

Two of the greatest boys basketball palyers I have ever seen play would be Terry Dupris of Cheyenne Eagle Butte and Willie White of the Pine Ridge Thorpes. Who can ever forget the 1987 Class A title game when Willie White led the Thorpes back to a come from behind victory over a great Lennox team.

On the girl's side, it would be the great SuAnn Big Crow of the Pine Ridge Thorpes. She would have been the first South Dakotan to play womens professional basketball if she had not died due to an accident.

Vote yes for LIFE on Nov. 7

Dear Editor:

If the crime of rape is punishable by death, who should be punished, the rapist or the innocent unborn infant, conceived by the crime of it's father?

How dare we petition Almighty God to bless and protect our nation - which was founded in His name and is now openly practicing infanticide?

Thank God for our courageous South Dakota legislators, who were the first to pass a state law protecting the unborn, and for our courageous Governor Rounds, who signed it into law.

The eyes of the nation are on the citizens of our state. WE have been given the opportunity and the responsibility to make a decision which may impact the future of our own children and grandchildren for generations to come.

Vote Yes for LIFE on Referred Law 6.

Northern Perspectives

In Lakota it would be wahonkokiye

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I appreciate the phrase, 'things are not what they seem' as it often helps me to see through the maze that is human nature. Lakota people use the terms, 'woableza' or 'owagahnige' as an indication that something has been seen or understood. I have heard leksi Albert White Hat on occasion speak of the term "nake' nula.' I didn't catch his interpretation of the term, but I sense that it meant achieving a state of emotional maturity where insight and wisdom have been achieved.

The other night I traversed overland our great Sicangu 'oyanke' to the casino located in the direction of 'itokakatakiya' as I was to interview Ross Swimmer. I couldn't locate him for about 20 minutes and quickly a snow storm had enveloped the area heading back 'wazitakiya' and I almost experienced a life altering event.

I couldn't see in the blinding snow, so I traveled about 15 miles an hour on the side of the road where the white line is painted.

About 6 miles from home, it began to clear so I moved onto the roadway a bit and proceeded to fish tail. I swung both ways a couple of times and had to steer back into the spin as we are taught.

As I was trying to pull out of one of the spins, I spied a couple of semi-trailers coming over the next hill. I didn't panic, but managed to pull out of my spin and stay on the side of the road.

My muscles didn't tighten up as much as I thought they might in such a situation and as I drove home, the whole event registered in my mind and I thanked 'tunkasila' that I didn't start my spins when they were getting close.

I hugged my son when I got home because I realized that there could have been a horrible accident and the only thing that might have saved me from getting badly hurt was the fact that we were traveling at a relatively slow speed.

My son and I spied a couple of signs around town that he photographed. One was at the BIA kitchen that clearly reads, 'warning no handrails' and it is funny because there are handrails installed. We saw another sign at the county building that reads, "slow men working.' We need to send those photos to Jay Leno.

Other phenomenon which don't make sense to me, are things I catalogue for safekeeping and then, retell later. For example, in 1988 or so, I wrote to Derek Bok the president of Harvard University and asked for his help in creating some economic development ideas on the Rosebud.

He wrote back and said he couldn't help me. One would think that with a great university and its resources at his disposal that he could have at least referred me to the Harvard Business School.

He signed my diploma and I thought he might at least be a bit sympathetic, but no dice. Last winter, I called the American Indian College Fund, and I asked the director if he would like to advertise the Gates Millennium Scholarship program in our paper and he said he didn't have money for advertisement; go figure! You see, they were advertising like crazy in other media, so I thought we qualified too as we are very much professional in our work.

A week ago, I called the campaign office of candidate Billion and they also said they didn't have any money for advertising. I said, to myself, "self" Jack needs to get the vote out and not take Lakota people in Todd County and Shannon County for granted.

Again, it was a phenomenon that I didn't quite get; again, it may be that hidden agenda business kicking in.

Anyway, the Native newspaper business is rather exciting but even many of our own people won't buy our paper, but will spend a dollar to see what some other community papers may be writing.

Many of those papers can't write in Lakota much less understand the language, but some people have it engrained in them that anything Lakota just doesn't quite measure up and I don't buy that.

Sometimes they even violate cultural rules when imposing on Lakota people to get a story, but Lakota people are too kind to correct them. In Lakota it would be 'wahonkokiye."

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Notes From Indian Country

State, tribal elections loom large in South Dakota on Nov. 7

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Accuracy and integrity are two words that should be the mainstays in the media. In the relatively new world of the media in Indian country these two words are most noted for their absence.

Amanda Takes War Bonnet hopes to change that. She worked in nearly every job position that could be found at my newspapers, the Lakota Times and Indian Country Today (they are actually the same newspaper as the Lakota Times became Indian Country Today in 1992) before elevating herself to the editor of both papers.

She toiled at her task for 14 years often recalling the story of how she started out as the newspaper's janitor while attending Oglala Lakota College, moving up to typesetter, staff writer, copy editor and finally landing the job as editor.

Two years ago Bat and Patty Pourier, two Chadron, Neb. business people, contacted Amanda about starting a weekly paper on the Pine Ridge Reservation. Amanda was pretty secure in her job as head of the communications department at Little Wound School at Kyle, but she gave up this fairly cushy job to take on the challenge.

The first thing Amanda wanted to do was to bring back integrity and accuracy to Indian newspapers. She felt that since the sale of Indian Country Today to the Oneida Nation of New York in 1998, most Indian newspapers were now used as instruments to spread gossip and hate.

She was disconcerted that many Indian newspapers would not print letters to the editor critical of the editor or staff. She felt that if an editor had a forum to express his or her opinion, they had the obligation to print dissenting opinions.

With these worthy objectives as her goal, she started The Lakota Country Times two years ago. The Lakota Country Times is growing in stature as an independent minded paper that is representative on the Pine Ridge and Rosebud Reservations as the voice of the Lakota people.

Amanda has gone above and beyond the call of duty to ensure that dissenting voices are not ignored. She has truly brought freedom of the press back to the reservation.

As with any small business, her largest task is securing the advertising income to keep the newspaper afloat. The two departments she did not work in at the old Lakota Times were advertising and accounting. This has been a handicap, but she has continued to learn and having passed the two-year mark, her confidence is growing along with her newspaper.

And speaking of integrity in the media, I want to commend Denny McAuliffe of RezNet for setting the record straight on the founding of the Native American Journalists Association. The website of NAJA reads that "a group of Native American Journalists met at Pennsylvania State to assess the state of Native media" but it does not say how they got there. Native journalists did not suddenly materialize at Penn State coincidentally. They came there because I had written letters to all of them about the meeting. And thanks to the help of Penn State Professor of Journalism, Bill Dulaney, I was able to raise enough money through the Gannett Foundation so that the meeting could take place.

McAuliffe was prompted to write a correction on how NAJA was formed for RezNet because of an erroneous press release sent out by the University of South Dakota that named one Charles Trimble as the founder of NAJA. McAuliffe was angered at this deliberate misrepresentation so he wrote an article for RezNet presenting the facts. I advise any one seeking the true facts to go to RezNet today.

Charles Trimble did start an organization called the American Indian Press Association but it folded 10 years before NAJA because it could not secure the funds to survive.

I spoke with Chad Smith, the Chief of the Cherokee Nation, last week about freedom of the press in Indian country because his administration has granted editorial freedom to the editor of the Cherokee tribal newspaper, The Cherokee Phoenix, and he hopes to set a precedent for other tribal leaders to follow suit.

Smith is concerned about Indian journalists with little background in journalism that uses the media to advance their own politics. He also believes that freedom of the press is often stifled by the businesses that advertise because they can prevent editors from writing critical articles that would impact the profits of their businesses.

As long as there are editors like Amanda Takes War Bonnet, freedom of the press does have a fighting chance in Indian country.

President Bush proclaims November National American Indian Heritage Month

By President George Bush

President of the United States

During National American Indian Heritage Month, we honor the generations of American Indians and Alaska Natives who have added to the character of our Nation. This month is an opportunity to celebrate their many accomplishments and their rich ancestry and traditions.

America is blessed by the character and strength of American Indians and Alaska Natives, and our citizens are grateful for the countless ways Native Americans have enriched our country and lifted the spirit of our Nation. We are especially grateful for the Native Americans who have served and continue to serve in our Nation's military.

These brave individuals have risked their lives to protect our citizens, defend our democracy, and spread the blessings of liberty to people around the world.

My Administration is working to ensure that American Indians and Alaska Natives have access to all the opportunities of this great land. My fiscal year 2007 budget proposes more than $12.7 billion for government programs for Native Americans.

Education is vital to ensuring all citizens reach their full potential, and my budget includes funding to help Native-American schools succeed and meet the requirements of the No Child Left Behind Act. The Bureau of Indian Affairs is providing education for approximately 46,000 American-Indian and Alaska-Native children.

To help keep Native Americans safe, I have also proposed to increase law enforcement personnel and improve law enforcement facilities in American-Indian communities. My Administration will continue to work on a government-to-government basis with tribal governments, honor the principles of tribal sovereignty and the right to self-determination, and help ensure America remains a land of promise for American Indians, Alaska Natives, and all our citizens.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, GEORGE W. BUSH, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim November 2006 as National American Indian Heritage Month. I call upon all Americans to commemorate this month with appropriate programs and activities.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this thirtieth day of October, in the year of our Lord two thousand six, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and thirty-first.

An open letter to child protection services

By Hazel Bonner

Special to the Times

I was quite disturbed when I read the material from the Pine Ridge Grandmother. I have been involved in some groups seeking better treatment of all children, especially Indian Children. It appears to me to be getting worse.

I decided to look at some reports comparing South Dakota to other states and I learned that South Dakota has one of the highest victimization rates for children and the highest rate of revictimization according to the latest report entitled Child Welfare Outcomes, 2003. South Dakota had been not in substantial compliance in a report of DHHS in 2001 on keeping children safe. They apparently still do not comply.

South Dakota was one of only six states with more than 20 child victims per 1,000 children. They actually ranked the highest in the revictimization rate of children which included maltreatment that reoccurred within a six-month period.

This report is done by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Administration for Children and families.

Child Fatality rates for South Dakota had risen to 2.04 in 2004 according to the national report for 2004. There were 3 fatalities in relation to CPS in 2004, one of whom had received child preservation services provided to the family. We know about two deaths of children where the white fathers were not prosecuted, don't we?

The new secretary of DSS, her grandson was killed by a father who left the child in a hot car the summer of 2005 and the man Janklow defended did the same thing. These babies were 14 and 18 months old. Janklow's man wants his older Indian daughter back But they didn't mean to do that! Yet Indian parents are prosecuted and their children taken by a totally out of control system when their children are not even harmed.

The number of children in foster care waiting to be adopted rose from 176 in 1999 to 450 in 2004. Foster Parents adopted most children at 58.5 percent with other relatives at only 25.2 percent. How many of the foster parents were non-Indian and adopted Indian children?

One Hundred percent of children waiting to be adopted were "special needs" children. Gee, I wonder if that has anything to do with the fact that the US government pays $2,000 more for each special needs child, over and above the $4,000 they pay for every healthy child. Sale of babies? Makes you wonder doesn't it?

South Dakota ranked sixth in the percentage of placements of children in group homes or institutions where they are controlled through drugs. Abuse occurs in those homes as well and most certainly criminal neglect.

In 2004 there were 7,668 reports of abuse or neglect filed. Of those only 1,257 were substantiated and there were 660 cases indicating abuse. A whopping 5,751 cases led to an unsubstantiated finding. Like the grandchild in the Pine Ridge case, maybe? Because of the small number of children (190,874) we rank very high in the rate of victimization.

CPS personnel have power and they abuse that power to the maximum.

They take children where intensive family therapy would solve the problem and they make decisions like in the case of the Pine Ridge grandmother.

The balance in all of this appears to be lacking?

A View From the West

We are nowhere near the status our ancestors had in their day

By Ivan Star
Special to the Times

I read a foreword by J. Edgar Hoover in an old document about the Constitution of the United States (1958, revised '72).

The former Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation believed that unless a citizen recognizes his or her responsibilities and discharges them accordingly, that person could not know the protections that the constitution provides.

Likewise, unless we recognize our responsibilities and discharge them accordingly as Lakota people or as enrolled members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, we cannot understand our problems. Accordingly, we cannot assemble the proper elements required to alleviate them. If we remain in ignorance of our problems, how can we even hope to fix them?

Of the never-ending tribulations we face on the Pine Ridge, I have always wondered which is the most pressing. It is debatable, but in our constant search for a better life one situation has definitely eluded us; understanding the roots of the concept of self-government. It will certainly behoove us to discover how this relates to us today on the homeland.

Because self-government is such a complex idea, and because it has been a part of our historical process, it makes sense to trace its origin and development and learn how it affects our lives today. I believe a good portion of this responsibility rests on the shoulders of our reservation school system.

At the same time, we cannot point the proverbial finger of blame at our educators because they too have a difficult task; theirs is to sustain a livelihood while maneuvering through the absurdly anonymous scheme of federal officialdom.

This diffusion of authority among numerous offices and the need to follow complex procedures renders it ineffective.

In a historical sense, Congress' hundreds of "Indian" policies have fallen short of their intended goals. For instance, the self-determination policy is a good idea; however, it merely provides a partial and inadequate measure of local control.

The bureaucracy remains in absolute control.

Getting back to the topic of this article, there are some considerations: self-government is natural and indigenous; however, this particular one was manmade.

It originated in the minds of non-Indians who believed they destroyed traditional ways and wished to offer a limited measure of local control and responsibility to their "Indians".

Consequently, this new congressional concept of Indian self-government produced a system that is certainly useful when dealing with the tribes because it provides a framework within which authoritative and predisposed negotiations can take place.

Federal government will not deal with traditional government any more than it will cut military spending to zero.

Now the biggest problem with this situation is that most tribal members believe we are no longer capable of being self-governing, we cannot handle our own affairs. Whether we like it or not, most of us lean toward the comforts and safety of social and economic benefits promoted by the IRA constitutional system backed by our ignorance of the right of self-government.

We have to realize the very fine line between government-to-government relations and being a pitifully dependent welfare state. From what I have seen here, I lean toward the fact that we are nowhere near the status our ancestors had in their day. At best, we are good little "Indians" at the behest of the charitable "Great White Father" in Washington.

Self-government is an inherent right. This means it is as natural as breathing, to which every human being is entitled. Contrarily, one human believed the "Indian" was less than human and opted to take away his right of self-government. Without this natural right, a group, like the Lakota people, cannot advance and flourish.

Muster your imaginative powers and picture the human body with its skeleton removed leaving the nerves and muscles intact. The bone structure provides stability as does the right of self-government.

As such, a culturally distinct population without its inherent right of self-government is completely helpless and without direction.

One important criterion towards becoming self-governing is to learn all there is to learn about how this concept was born and how this system of government affects us. I guarantee we will find the fact that we do have the right, as well as the ability, to govern our own affairs. We will realize that we do not have to have anyone else's approval to do so.

We will see how the federal residential school system during the 1800s successfully stripped "Indian" nations of their independent nature. Keep in mind how this system targeted indigenous youth to achieve their mission. After several generations of this "schooling", it took away our autonomy and contentment and our capability to function as such.

Our ancestors once had a singular sovereign government, one belief system, one language, and a common and candid history. They were self-assured, motivated, content, and they were able to live harmoniously as individuals, with each other, and with their environment.

Following Columbus, the new nation expended an incredible amount of time, energy, and money destroying those elements vital to the wholeness of indigenous nations: worldview, language, history, extended family system, and land, to name a few. The military, government, and the national education system all participated in this blind ferocity.

One of the intents of this genocidal frenzy was to erase the idea of sovereignty from the collective memory of indigenous people. Today, the effect of this systematic obliteration of our cultural principles reigns in plain sight on our reservation.

Nonetheless, I refuse to believe that our ability to govern ourselves is totally gone.

I must point out the fact, however, that most of us are beyond the point of no return. We are too deeply entrenched to accept any change, especially those that deviate from the way we grew up.

I will not refute this human trait. Instead, since our youth represent our future as a culturally distinct group of people, we are obligated to their well-being. We owe them a decent future.

We have to begin asking ourselves some serious questions: are our modern schools still promoting this enervative process by transmitting only half-truths?

Are our schools capable of effectively addressing this centuries old educational shortcoming?

I mentioned it before and I will mention it again; our youth deserve a life better than what we had to cope with.

Mike's Priorities...

As Governor, Mike Rounds:

- Recognizes and respects tribal sovereignty
- Values the Lakota culture
- Understands the importance of education to the next generation
- Has worked to improve health care on the reservations

"Mike Rounds does not see color. A lot of politicians don't make a Native American friend until they run for office. That's not Mike Rounds. I've been a friend of Mike's for over 20 years. I appreciate the priority that Mike puts on Native American issues."

Some of our people have adopted the beliefs and values of others

Dear Editor:

The Oct. 25 - Nov. 1, 2006 issue of the Teton Times and other newspapers carried a column by Tim Giago about the upcoming state and tribal elections.

A portion of this editorial was about the impeachment of Cecilia Fire Thunder for her feminist stand on abortion rights and the lack of knowledge by the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council of their own history and culture. He wrote: "…they (especially the men) would never have taken her to task for her stand on women's rights because the traditional male role of the Oglala Sioux Tribe never, not ever, interfered in the rights of a Lakota woman to decide her own fate when it came to child birth.

A Lakota woman always had the traditional and spiritual right to make her own decision." These are true and very important words written about Lakota women and these words are also true for Dakota women. It used to be said: Hena winyan tawichohan, na wica kin ed um sni. Translation: That is women's business and the men do not go there.

Our letter is to praise Mr. Giago for letting people know about the true status of the women of our nations before some of our people adopted the beliefs and values of other people who viewed their women as chattels and reproductive machines.

The battering and rape of Indian women is a reflection of a history of colonization

By Karen Artichoker
Special to the Times

On behalf of Sacred Circle, National Resource Center To End Violence Against Native Women, I'd like to thank Tim Giago for speaking out on violence against Indian women in his Oct. 2, 2006, "Unraveling the source of domestic violence in Indian country," response to Jodi Rave's series on violence against Indian women.

As Indian women, we need male allies to help us bring attention to these outrageous statistics that are finally getting some national attention. Unlike other races of women, who will most likely be beaten and raped by men of their own race, the rates of battering and rape of Indian women are crimes that are perpetrated by all races of men.

We agree with Tim's assertion that violence against Indian women is an impact of boarding schools, a tactic of colonization.

We would also point out that, while Indian men were emasculized in that process, Indian women also lost out. Boarding schools taught Indian girls how to be women – Western style.

We got to cook and clean and if we were really good girls we got to be secretaries. In that regard we had the equal opportunity available to other women in this country.

In the process of colonization Indian women also learned that God meant for us to submit to men and our primary function in life was to bear his children and make sure he was comfortable and happy.

That was the western notion of the good woman and no matter what our family history, all women have been exposed to that socialization.

Prior to colonization, we enjoyed status and power in our household, kinship network, and community.

We were respected and indigenous cultural and spiritual teachings held that we are sacred. In the new world, we became second class citizens.

The conversation isn't about whether or not Indian men or Indian women got the worst end of deal. Both genders experienced devastating pain and suffering and we see that historical experience reflected in our families and communities.

And today, we have gender politics where there were none before.

We all know that women are the spoils of war and that means, as women, we are sex objects and disposable to the oppressor.

That's why all men see us as prey. Our own men, Indian men, have now also assumed the role of oppressor and we see them grasp this false and unnatural sense of male power in every black eye and ravaged body that comes through our doors.

The battering and rape of Indian women is a reflection of a history of colonization.

As Indian people, we also see the impact of colonization reflected in child abuse, child sexual abuse, suicide, poor physical health, alcoholism, etc.

Why wouldn't we believe that violence against Indian women wouldn't be the same? As a matter of fact, there are many Indian women who have commented that they believe these statistics are low since the Indian woman who has escaped battering and rape by men are the exception.

We now have the same power imbalances in individual relationships as our oppressors.

Violence continues in individual relationships because it works. Violence also serves to maintain a social paradigm that upholds white male privilege and the entitlement of all men on certain levels. Indian men don't get access to true, natural power but get access to a little bit of the unnatural power that has been held by the colonizers for centuries -the power to terrorize women and children. The theoretical framework of colonization helps us understand that in addition to responding to individual situations of battering and rape, we also need to respond on a bigger societal level. If we don't examine the issue in this context, history will continue to repeat itself.

We've seen one piece of research out of Canada that correlates the high rates of violence against Native women with colonization, including boarding schools. We agree that it's not helpful to blame Indian men since these dynamics were set up long ago and certainly weren't our fault as Indian people. We also have the right to expect men to begin taking responsibility for the toll domestic violence takes on individual women and families.

Karen Artichoker is the Director of Sacred Circle, National Resource Center To End Violence Against Native Women and a Management Team Director for Cangleska, Inc., a domestic violence and sexual assault prevention and intervention program serving the Oglala Sioux Tribe. She is an enrolled citizen of the Oglala Sioux Tribe and also proud of her Ho-Chunk heritage.

Mustangs close out season with second playoff round loss to Winner

Mustangs finish with 7-3 record

Harding County ends Lower Brule season in second round of 9B

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

WINNER/BUFFALO – Winner dominated the line of scrimmage, shut down Little Wound's running game and scored the first seven times they had the ball to win the second round of South Dakota's 11A football playoffs 51-0 in a bitterly cold and windy night game on Monday in Winner.

Winner's quarterback, Chas DeMers, used some of his state class speed to roll around the right end on the second play from scrimmage for the Warriors and score on a 73 yard touchdown run. Jared Donahue added three touchdowns on runs of 19, 8 and 6 yards as Winner rolled to a 21-0 first quarter lead and closed out the first half with a 45-0 lead.

Little Wound's senior quarterback, Johnny Cloud(5) lets fly with one of his 22 passes in Monday nights second round playoff game against Winner which the Warriors won 51-0. Photo courtesy of Randy Bachelor, White River.

Red Cloud/OLL defeated Little Wound to win the Great Plains Conference on Wednesday and included: Shawn Patton, Truman Rossman, Ryan Lays Bad, Jory Weston, Lyle Jacobs, Kylie Weston, J.D. Plume and Julian Hernandez of Our Lady of Lourdes and Dominque LeBeaux, Jeemiah Two Bulls, Bryan Beetam, Frank Siioux Bob, Phil Zimiga, Jordan Wilson, Mike Ridhards, Steven DeWolfe and Clay O'Daniel of Red Cloud. Photo courtesy of Lynette Cuny and Cindy Jacobs.

"We really struggled to get our running game going against their line," said Darrell Hunter, Little Wound coach, "we had some success with Johnny Cloud and passing although the wind made it a challenge to mount a consistent attack through the air; we have our best success when we have a balanced attack on offense, a good running game to go along with our passing."

Little Wound received the opening kickoff and using a nine yard pass completion from Cloud to Rich Big Boy and a Shilo Pierce three yard run, the Mustangs had a quick first down but the Winner defense went to work holding the Mustangs to a total of five first downs for the entire game. Winner rolled up 345 yards on the ground with DeMers carrying the ball four times for 102 yards and a touchdown while Jerad Donahue carried the ball 10 times for 76 yards and three TDs. Winner scored six of the TDs on the ground and one through the air.

Shilo Pierce, Little Wound's top runner was held to a minus three yards on five carries. Cloud finished with 11 completions out of 22 passes for 100 yards and one interception. TJ McCauley caught three passes for 48 yards, Big Boy grabbed four passes for 38 yards and Pierce had three receptions for 11 yards.

"The boys can hold their heads high, they had a great season and made it to the second round of the playoffs," said Hunter, "we definitely know what we need to work on though, we need to get stronger, work in the offseason and developo our younger players."

Little Wound finished the year with a 7-3 record with wins over Pine Ridge, Hill City, Cheyenne Eagle Butte, St. Francis, Crow Creek, Todd County and Bennett County. Their losses came from Red Cloud, Todd County and Winner. The Mustangs will lose Pierce, Cloud, McCauley, Big Boy, Devon LeBeau and Marcus Lamont but will have Brice Hornbeck, Michael Pretty Voice Crane, JC Mesteth, Oren Three Stars, Enoch Yellow Hawk, Trin In the Woods and Brennan Montgomery back.

Winner moves their record to 9-1 and will host Canton in the 11A semi-finals on Saturday night.

Harding County remains undefeated, downs Lower Brule

On Monday night in Buffalo, Harding County picked up their tenth straight win with a 50-0 triumph over Lower Brule in a windy and blustery game. Lower Brule had earned a second round game on the strength of their 64-12 win over Faith in the first round of 9B playoffs.

Lower Brule finishes the season with a 7-3 record while Harding County will take their 10-0 record and host Colome on Saturday night, the winner will earn a trip to the Dakota Dome for the 9B championship game.

Red Cloud/OLL down Little Wound for Great Plains Conference championship

Honored by the tribal council on Monday

Red Cloud/Our Lady of Lourdes middle school football team lost their first game of the season to Little Wound then came storming back to put together eight straight wins including a 14-12 win over Little Wound to win the Great Plains Conference championship on Wednesday in a game that was split over two days, starting on Saturday and finishing up on Wednesday.

"We are so proud of the boys, they overcame a lot this season including playing several games with only 10 players because of academic eligibility problems," said Rob Clifford, head coach, "we overcame all kinds of adversity, had the opportunity of playing two outstanding running backs, Truman Rossman, who ran for over 600 yards on the season and Kylie Weston, who ran for over 900 yards and we revenged an early loss to Little Wound with the championship game."

After the opening season 42-32 loss to Little Wound, Red Cloud/OLL came back with regular season wins over Pine Ridge 6-0, Rockyford 48-0, American Horse 56-22, St. Francis 50-0 and Wounded Knee District 66-0 and playoff wins over Crow Creek 56-0, Pine Ridge 48-8 and Little Wound 14-12.

This year, the conference started with the requirement that the home team would have one of the four game officials either registered or certified, according to conference president, Dave Michaud, but it did not happen very often. For the championship game, each team was asked to provide two officials then Little Wound committed to providing a crew of certified officials and even though Red Cloud was advised to still bring their two officials, they chose not to. On game day there were no certified officials, Red Cloud was told play the game or forfeit it, the game started and Little Wound had a 12-0 edge at halftime.

After a number of discussions and a call to Michaud, the game was halted and it was decided to return at a future date with certified officials. The teams came back together on Wednesday and instead of re-playing the entire game, the teams just played the last two quarters. Red Cloud scored twice and held the Mustangs scoreless; certified officials were used to officiate the game.

The consolidated championship team included Shawn Patton, Truman Rossman, Ryan Lays Bad, Jory Weston, Lyle Jacobs, Kylie Weston, J.D. Plume and Julian Hernandez from Our Lady of Lourdes and Dominique LeBeaux, Jeremiah Two Bulls, Bryan Beetam, Frank Sioux Bob, Phil Zimiga, Jordan Wilson, Mike Richards, Steven DeWolfe and Clay O'Daniel from Red Cloud. Coaches included Robert Clifford, Shawn Patton and Phil Clifford, Jr. and manager Nick Cummings.

On Monday, the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council honored the team with certificates, an honoring song by Will Peters, councilman from Pine Ridge Village, and tribal flags for both schools involved in the coop.

Michelle May selected New Librarian of the Year

By Connie Blanco
Times Writer

KYLE - Michelle May, Oglala Lakota and director of Oglala Lakota College's Woksape Tipi Library was selected New Librarian of the Year, by the South Dakota Library Association last month.

The Awards Banquet of the South Dakota Library Association Conference was held in Rapid City on Sept. 21. Each year this association of more than 300 people from across the state of South Dakota recognizes their own by nominating those in the library community who make a difference in library services.

One of these awards is known as the "New Librarian of the Year." The New Librarian of the Year is someone who has transformed a routine task or an untried idea into imaginative, creative service; projected a dynamic image of the professional librarian into the community and offered that community something which it did not have before and has performed the function of a librarian for a period of not more than 10 years.

This year, the association gave this award to May, who is director of Oglala Lakota College's library.

The is the first time in the history of SDLA that a tribal college librarian has received this award. This is May's third year at the library and she has worked at the college for seven years.

Michelle May, selected New Librarian of the Year by the SD Library Association.

"Our goal is to make sure every single person in our homeland has the opportunity to become a supporter of Oglala Lakota College's Woksape Tipi Library. We want each one of you to become a sponsor of your library by having a library card, borrow a good book, a video, CD or DVD or ask us questions and we will try to answer them," said May.

"We want you to read the newspapers and magazines and tell us what you are interested in, what books do you want to read. What information you are looking for and we will be glad to help you and if you never make it to the library, at least you will have heard of us. We are the academic library for OLC and provide services to our students, staff and faculty. We are the public library for our homeland on the Pine Ridge and also accessible online," said May.

Aside from a gifted librarian, May has been a story teller for the college's KOLC television station. She reads Lakota story books, which is being aired on the college's television station in the late evenings. She said the story-telling and the television is about connecting with each other. "Traditionally we are connected through stories and we hope to share and encourage, a valuable tradition. Formats change as do the storytellers," she said.

She said library circulation has increased dramatically. Two years ago, more than 1,500 books were checked out and last year more than 5,000 books were checked out, which is more than doubled, cardholders increased by 760.

The library offers readings to Headstart students, kindergarten and first graders during each semester, which has encouraged students to read more books. Michelle will also be a regular guest columnist in this paper in the near future.

The college's main library is located on the Piya Wiconi campus seven miles west of Kyle.

Brain injury support group meeting Nov. 8

PORCUPINE - Traumatic Brain Injury can be a life-altering event for survivors and family members.

Brain injury support groups may be the one place where others understand the unique challenges associated with TBI.

The Protection and Advocacy Traumatic Brain Injury Program of South Dakota Advocacy Services, along with the Oglala Lakota National Vocation Rehabilitation Agency are assisting in the development of a brain injury support group for Native Americans on the Oglala Sioux Nation.

The support group allows individuals with TBI and their family members to provide emotional support and share individual issues and strategies to enhance their quality of life.

The group meets the second Wednesday of every month at 1 p.m. at the Porcupine Clinic in Porcupine. The next meeting will be Wednesday, Nov. 8.

If you have any questions please call Oglala Lakota Nation Vocational Rehabilitation Agency at 605-867-2798 or South Dakota Advocacy Services, PATBI Program at 1-800-658-4782.

Whalen chose politics over ministry

By Joe Kafka
Associated Press Writer

PIERRE (AP) - Bruce Whalen, Republican contender for South Dakota's lone seat in the U.S. House, says he lived a less than an exemplary life until he accepted Jesus Christ in March 1995.

A longtime friend had done so earlier, and Whalen noticed the profound change. He wasn't interested in changing his life when he initially spoke to his friend about becoming a Christian, but it wasn't long before he relented.

``I was a very bitter person before I accepted Christ,'' Whalen says. ``But my life was turned around. I started putting away the things that corrupted my future and started to improve my life.''

Whalen, 44, was born in Rushville, Neb.; his parents lived on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, and he is an enrolled member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. When he was 14, his mother moved to Salt Lake City to take a new job with the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Whalen would not return to his roots until 1999.

In between, there were some troubled years.

Whalen was kicked out of high school in the 12th grade. He would later get a GED.

He married in 1984 but was divorced by 1988. The marriage produced a son, Kyle, now 20. Whalen has since remarried.

Whalen went through a series of jobs before his spiritual awakening. He decided then to become a minister and had enrolled in an Oregon seminary but was quickly told he should go to college if he wanted to become a full-fledged minister.

He returned to the Pine Ridge Reservation and enrolled in Oglala Lakota College in 1999 when he also decided his political leanings were decidedly Republican _ an anomaly in an area that is a Democratic stronghold. Whalen finished college two years ago at 42.

``I'm not a quitter. I took the long route,'' he explains. ``I have a tendency to get distract-

ANITA FUOSS

FOR CIRCUIT JUDGE

The Sixth Judicial Circuit contains 14 Counties and 17,721 square miles.

The Circuit is served by 4 Circuit Judges and 1 Magistrate Judge. One Circuit Judge lives in Winner and the other judges all live in Pierre at this time. The dots on the map indicate the current location of the judges. The X shows the location of Anita Fuoss, Judicial Candidate.

A better distribution of judges would make for a more cost effective and prompt delivery of legal services to ALL residents of the circuit.

Authorized and paid for by Fuoss for Judge Committee, Helen Louder, Treasurer, RR 1, Box 18, Draper, SD 57531

BIG OR SMALL EQUAL FOR ALL

Whalen

ed, but I'm not a quitter."

Whalen has since held a series of jobs with the tribe, and he worked at a Christian ministry for six months. He had also been the Republican Party's point man on the reservation for some time but clung to his desire to become a minister and return to the reservation to provide spiritual guidance in the heart of a destitute society long racked by hopelessness, alcohol and drug abuse, and people who are among the poorest in the nation.

Whalen, a decided underdog in the race to unseat a member of Congress, says state GOP Chairman Randy Frederick asked him to run for the House. Whalen had called Republican headquarters last December to help with the House campaign and was told there was no candidate yet. He offered to take the challenge, and Frederick called Whalen in February to tell him he was going to be the GOP candidate.

When he returned to the reservation in early 1999, Whalen met his current wife, Carol. They met while attending church and were married in 2000. They have two children: Jeremiah, 5, and Elizabeth, 3.

``I proposed to her on Resurrection Day,'' Whalen says. ``That memory kind of chokes me up. She was crying, and I was crying.''

Whalen says his wife was not surprised when he told her of his intention to run against Democratic U.S. Rep. Stephanie Herseth, who is seeking a second full term.

``We're doing this on a leap of faith,'' the GOP candidate says. ``The door opened up for us. We feel like it's the right thing to do.''

``I'm not out to make a name for myself,'' he adds. ``I've already got one.''

Whalen favors increased tax relief, frugal government spending, a reduction in the reliance on federal assistance, and efforts to create jobs and improve wages. He opposes abortion and often claims to be a champion of family values.

``When I say that I'm the candidate of family values, I know that I'm resonating with people across the state,'' Whalen says, characterizing Herseth as ``the pro-abortion candidate.''

Whalen continues: ``I'm living out these family values, and she hasn't started a family yet. She can say she's the daughter of someone or the granddaughter, but I have children and I have a wife. As a husband and father, your psychology changes.''

A 10-year veteran of the National Guard, Whalen also backs President Bush on the war in Iraq. America should continue its military role until democracy is firmly entrenched in that nation, he says.

Whalen says his faith and empathy for others are among his strengths. He quickly adds that he can lend a different perspective if sent to Washington on the strength of victory Nov. 7. He pledges not to stray from his beliefs, and says he will be a good listener.

``I think what's important to know about me is that I'll cry with you,'' Whalen says. ``I'm a man who grew up in a society that said men aren't supposed to cry. But I'm a man who's willing to change. I want to be a reflection of Christ.''

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

My name is X. and I was born on Aug. 24, 1963 at 3:20 p.m. is there any thing you can tell me about what my future holds for me? Just skeptical I guess so that's why I'm asking any info that only I would know that you can sense?

Wanting to know

Dear Wanting to know:

I took out your name so this will be more confidential. You're numerology tells me that you are a six. Sixes are people that are accumulators. During their middle age they do find financial security. Their problem is that they tend to get preoccupied with the physical side of life: what they own, physical relationships, jobs, etc.

They also hold onto things, even grudges. Your birth time equals a five, the survival number. People with fives in their numerology often have rough childhoods, but do find balance. The overall number is two. That is a person that is concerned with others, and mating with someone is very important. You have a tendency to be altruistic, and give a lot of yourself to others.

The danger is in dissolving who you are to please others including your mate. In life, to become a totally balanced person you must find your true identity and remain true to your nature and not compromise who you are for others.

I see a lot of change in your immediate future, as you have just gone through a rather rough time and it is time to face your own behavioral challenges. Returning to school would be the best option; and you may do that sooner than you realize. The relationship you have been fighting with yourself over is not a healthy one. Take charge of your life. You can do it the easy way, or you can take more time by going back and forth in your relationship and postponing more education. Either road you take, you will eventually return to the understanding that you want things to be better, so only you can make them that way. Blessings and good luck.

Dear Anna,

I met you at the retreat in Keystone. You told me some interesting things, and I just wanted to touch base with you again. anything you could tell me will really be helpful and I was wondering do you see me quitting my job, or will I be here a while longer. I was getting those thoughts about suicide will they ever go away.

Hope you have a good day.

Job thoughts

Dear Just thoughts:

You are such a wonderful and beautiful woman. Hold onto that image. You have a chemical imbalance, exacerbated by hormonal influence.

There are herbs that you can take to help bring about balance and that combined with prayer in an Inipi would be very beneficial. In the event that you cannot get yourself together to do that, then a faster temporary solution would be to see a doctor and get a mild mood enhancer.

You are depressed. Suicide thoughts tell me that you have lost touch of your relationship with the Creator or God. The thing is, every spark of life force within you is of the very nature of God. You are a creative expression of God - or a spirit in human form. Your life is your life. It is what you have been given to express your spirit. Your life is about YOU, it is a gift. You are no more nor less than anyone else on the earth. You have certain genetic proclivities, certain talents, a particular type of body, a certain unrest trained intelligence, and you can accomplish anything in this world that you design yourself to do. You are not disadvantaged by your circumstances.

You are in charge of your life. The Creator did not leave you out of any of the gifts of life. As humans, we like to burden ourselves with thoughts of disaster and unequalness. True, not everyone is a concert pianist - but he who is not a pianist may be a math genius, or a compassionate caring care giver, or a man that works with the earth, or a builder, or just have a genius sense of humor.

We are all different in our talents, but to not use your talent or recognize your talent is taking God for granted. People have mistaken their pitiful understanding of what God is for being pitiful. If you believe yourself to be a pitiful human being then you rally the spirit of defeat within. It takes just as much time and energy to be a pitiful person that it does to be successful. The difference is in your perspective. God gave us all strength, endurance, love for others, compassion for ourselves and others, and the Spirit from within to use to create a good life and a good world. You are not less than any other.

Get over yourself. You are healthy, beautiful, smart, loving, and if you don't have a boyfriend then you don't need one right now.

Things are changing around your work. It is a very precarious program and everyone is being affected. Attitudes and morale start at the very top. Everything there is quite a mess, so all the employees are insecure.

Start looking for a new job. Start with what you like to do. I do see you working within the court system or OST Public Safety - but first, let the sunshine into your life, thank the Creator for your life, and see a doctor or get to sweat. Work on wellness, not on pity.

Dear Anna,

I just read your column and decided to take a chance and step out there and put my life in your realm to cure my curiosity, and excitement! My loved one doesn't encourage me to seek psychics, in the past I've been disappointed by empty insight.. but it's a thrill for me.

I don't live on the reservation, but I miss it there. I envision myself returning with resources or the ability to successfully contribute. It's important to me, I see it as a modern way of how the Lakota woman gives back to her community.

Anyway, I believe I'll be ready when I retire. What's up with that? I have an awesome loved one, freely and morally showers me with love, friendship, loyalty, laughs, and high maintenance. At least what I consider high. I want to get a degree. Do you see it? Also, I developed an imaginary crush on someone on the reservation. Does this cat know? When and does it dissolve? I shall hope to hear from you. Let me know.

Signed Curios in California

Dear California Girl:

Yes, you will come back to the rez - to help; probably in about another five or six years - before you expected to. The reason you are there (in California) is to see how other people do things, to become economically viable - and to begin to get your higher education degree. You have a lot to contribute. I do see you returning to school - and I do see a degree in business or public administration (health admin?).

By the way, proportionally speaking, it is the Lakota women that are making the biggest contribution and effort on the reservation today. They are getting their degrees, they are starting programs, they are working hard at cultural revitalization, they are running things.

Some men are also right in there with the women, but all you have to do is look around, count the men vs. women and then assess why that might be true: the Lakota People are losing more young men than women to drugs, alcohol, and crime.

Your mate is a man that adores you. He has no desire to live on the rez. Things will change in the future and he is very likely to stand beside you until you decide differently. The guy on the rez is not stupid. He knows you like him - but he has a complicated life and so he expects nothing to come of it. Besides, you are a zillion miles away - what can flirtation hurt (his rationale). Don't worry, I don't see you giving up your life in California to run off with the rez guy at this time. The future, however, is open.

Dear Anna,

This is my problem, I am a college student who decided to quit because the powers that be won't cut me a break.

I feel that I have no one to turn to, I have had my troubles before, but this time I feel like giving it all up. I am a single parent; I have raised my child by myself since it was born; I have trouble trying to make its life better, everything that I have done up to this point was for my child, but now they want my child, and when I say they I mean my child's father's family. I have tried and tried to get a home where she could say that it belonged to my child but some where I failed to make it happen and I am doing what I can to make that idea come true.

My child also wants a younger sister or brother but I don't know if I can have a kid again. Why is all this negativity happening to me? Do you see anything good in my future.

The only thing that I can tell my kid is that where our hearts lay and where they meet. This is our home.

Looking to the future

Dear Looking to the Future:

Things are rough right now. They really aren't out to get you at the college - but they are a "head" institution (they have many rules and regulations), and have trouble, sometimes, finding their hearts. The difference is; when you are in high school, you have to be there and they have to work with you. In college, you are in an adult world - they don't have to do anything but teach those that are there to learn.

It is your duty and responsibility to be there, study hard and prepare yourself for a better and bigger world. The instructional staff and administrative staff don't care if you don't show up, or don't have a ride, or can't afford a notebook. That is not cruelty - that is adulthood responsibility for self. They have Head Start childcare available. You have to arrange financing with them - they have rules. You have to arrange the time and your day to go to class.

Get yourself back to school girl - even part time. Work on a better future. They have tutors available for every class - talk with your instructors if you can't keep up. Take responsibility for your own learning curve.

Don't even (please I beg you) think of having another child until your education is complete.

Your in-laws are seeing you struggle with the simple thing of being self-sufficient. If you don't want trouble there then become who you will be eventually anyway - responsible. If you can't go to class right now investigate on-line education.

Spirit told me last week that most of the women that I counsel and talk to have one thing is common: they don't believe they are equal to the task of taking good care of themselves. You fall in that category. You don't think you can - but you can. I do see you going to school in the health field. It seems, however, that you may start in early childhood development.

Your in-laws won't give you trouble as long as you are moving forward. Their concern is for your child. They want the best for him. Please make a plan and follow through. You can find the appropriate help at the school, and within some of the programs offered on the rez. You can get a job, and will hear of one within ten days - apply and it is yours.

It is not easy being an adult. That is why older people discourage the young ones from having children too early. It is harder with a child - but it is not impossible. You have a friend that wants to move out of state and take you with her. Don't go - you will be back, broker, and totally discouraged, and your child will have to stay with his grandparents while you get back on your feet.

Don't be discouraged by the struggle - be proud of your progress. I see you making it.

Dear Anna,

How are you doing? It is me the one with the blown out knee...from the motel...but I had a question? How is my grandma Sandy, Uncle Ruben, Dad, and older brother doing on the other side? I often find myself thinking about them when they sing a prayer song. And I have this new girlfriend, I was just wondering how long our relationships going to last?

The other side

Dear The Other Side:

How's your knee? Grandma Sandy says: "Have a heart with others, and they will have more heart with you. I am fine and with many of my friends and relatives. I have just welcomed another one home. I always loved your eyes, keep smiling and dry them for me." Uncle Ruben says,"I am with your brother. He is good. I want you to wear the right clothing (said with humor), take some time to dust off the old relics and put them back carefully, don't pick your nose." You dad says,"go easy on the women, they deserve the break. Wash your hands before you eat (humor), take the time to brush your teeth, and try to drive like a sane man. I love you." Your brother says,"Hey man, it's cool."

On the new girlfriend how long question: This one could last a long time. Be good and it will last longer than that.

Dear Anna,

I'm writing you this letter because my heart has been broken again and my feelings are all but together. My emotions are a roller coaster and I'm unsure as to why I'm feeling like this. I have everything I want in my life and I feel content with my kids yet somehow I feel like I'm missing out on something. I've cried for this man who was all but nothing to me and now it's like I just got slapped in face with his BS.

I'm trying hard to move forward but I feel like I'm in quicksand and sinking slowly and I'm confused about how to move on now without this man. They say all men are not dogs but I differ with saying now cause there are some that are!!

Underpaid and overloaded

Dear Underpaid:

You are just lost in the "what if" world. There is an addiction pattern to relationships that don't work. and that combined with the fear of feeling lonely equals an immediate return to the cycle of mis-matched mates, which causes relationships of imbalance, which causes breakups, which causes loneliness. Just remember the truth and get a new perspective. Remember how he really is - not how you remember him being that one time. You need someone different that he was. You don't know him, so just wait until you do. How do you move on without him? One day at a time. Everyday a blessed day without his "BS", without his cruel sarcasm, without his bad habits, drinking, temper and hollering. Sounds ideal to me, doesn't it to you?

That's how you do it. When there isn't a mate in your life - then know, because everything is in Divine Order, that today, everything is perfect that way. Figure yourself out, use this chance to become the really wonderful woman you are: without jealousy, insanity, demands and petulance.

Become the wholly gracious woman you are, right now. Then, when you are in balance, the man that is your balance and mate will come in. You have not been left out of God's equation of going two by two.

You can't rush your mate's entrance into your life. He will be there when he is there - and you better be in balance when he does come in, or he will have to leave you behind.

Enjoy being single: as the old song puts it,"One less bell to answer, one less egg to fry, one less man to pick up after - I should be happy, but all I do is cry."

Dry your eyes, enjoy your freedom, heal yourself from past harms and wait: In about two years he will be here. Be his equal. Don't need anything when he gets here, just want to be with him, don't need to.
